Police block 'March for Justice'

Use teargas, stun grenades, charge batons; at least 100 hurt; 83 held

STAR REPORT

The law enforcers yesterday foiled the quota protesters' March for Justice by using teargas and stun grenades and charging batons in different districts.

At least 100 people were injured and 83 detained during the protests.

Teachers, parents, and people from various walks of life joined the programme called by the Students against Discrimination in protest of the killings and arrests of students and people, filing of cases, and abductions.

In Barishal, at least 11 people, including five journalists, were injured when police hit them with batons.

The injured journalists, The Daily Star photographer Titu Das, Jugantar photographer Shamim Ahmed, Jamuna TV videographer Hridoy Chandra Shil, NTV videographer Gobinda Saha, and barta24.net reporter Tuhin, took primary treatment at Sher-e-Bangla Medical College Hospital.

ABU SAYED MURDER CASE

16-yr-old in Rangpur jail for 12 days

Father says he was shot in his leg

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Mahim

A 16-year-old is in Rangpur jail for 12 days after his arrest in the case filed over Abu Sayed's killing.

Begum Rokeya University student Sayed was shot and killed during the quota reform protest near his university on July 16.

Video footage shows police shooting Sayed, who posed no threat to the law enforcers. He died soon afterwards.

But contradicting what is clear as daylight, the First Information Report filed by police says Sayed was not a victim of police firing. "The protesters fired weapons and threw chunks of bricks from different directions, and at one stage, a student [Sayed] was seen falling to the ground," read the FIR.

"Police have shown my son Mahim arrested in the Abu Sayed murder case," said Md Shahjalal, who owns a photo studio in Rangpur city.

Alfi Shahriar Mahim, a first-year HSC student of Rangpur Police Lines School and College, is 16 years and 10 months old, said his father, citing his birth certificate.

Public Prosecutor Rafiq Hasnain at the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court in Rangpur said Mahim was not a named accused in the Abu Sayed murder case,

Process underway to ban Jamaat and Shibir

Home boss says it may happen any time

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The banning of Jamaat-e-Islami and its student front Chhatra Shibir is under process, said the home minister, despite expectation that it was going to happen yesterday.

Yesterday, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan mentioned no date for issuing a notification in this regard but said it could be issued any time.

"I have not received the file yet. We are waiting. We had meetings in the morning and in the afternoon ... A few issues were discussed with the prime minister, including the ban on Jamaat," he said.

"We will announce whenever the decision comes."

Asaduzzaman said Jamaat was going to be banned as per Section 18 of the Anti-Terrorism Act.

The European Union has postponed its first round of negotiation with Bangladesh on a new agreement meant to elevate its partnership with the South Asian country.

"In light of the prevailing situation, the first round of negotiations on the Partnership and Cooperation Agreement envisaged for September has been postponed with no later date fixed as yet," Nabila Massrali, EU spokesperson for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, told The Daily Star in a message yesterday.

The decision comes a day after EU High Representative and Foreign Policy Chief Josep Borrell on Tuesday issued a statement condemning the "shoot-on-sight policy" announced by the authorities in Bangladesh.

Harun transferred from DB

5 other top DMP officials also transferred

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka Metropolitan Police (DMP) Additional Deputy Commissioner Harun or Rashid has been removed from the Detective Branch.

In a major reshuffle, six top officials of DMP including Harun were transferred yesterday.

Harun has been transferred to the crime and operations division of DMP, said a notification signed by DMP Commissioner Habibur Rahman. He will be replaced by DMP Additional Commissioner Ashrafuzzaman, it added.

Harun's transfer came two days after a meeting of the Awami League-led 14-party alliance, where some alliance leaders expressed their discontent about Harun.

On Monday, the High Court also expressed its displeasure over a photo of 'Structures can be rebuilt, lives lost will never return'

PM says about violence centring quota protests

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has said the destroyed structures can be rebuilt but the lives lost during the recent violence in the country can never be returned.

She was speaking at a programme marking the inauguration of the National Fisheries Week 2024 at the capital's Bangabandhu International Conference Centre yesterday.

Hasina said there was no issue for waging a movement as she fulfilled all the demands of the students and the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court ordered status quo on the High Court judgment, restoring the effectiveness of the government's 2018 notification that abolished the quota system in government jobs.

Despite that, such incidents happened and destructive activities were carried out, leading to loss of so many lives, she said.

"I never thought such a situation would arise and so many lives would be lost."

Quader booed off a meeting with ex-BCL leaders

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader faced the wrath of former Chhatra League leaders yesterday as he began speaking to the media instead of having discussions with them at a views-exchange meeting.

The AL organised the meeting at the party's Bangabandhu Avenue head office at 11:00am and according to the invitation letter, Quader was supposed to exchange views with the former Chhatra League leaders.

However, Quader reached the venue around 11:20am and immediately started talking to the media without having any

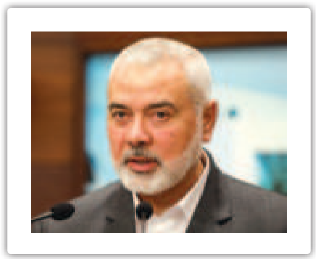
Hamas leader killed in Iran by Israeli air strike

Says the Palestinian group, warns assassination takes war to 'new levels'

AGENCIES

Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh was assassinated in Iran yesterday morning, the Palestinian group and Tehran said, drawing threats of revenge on Israel in a region already shaken by the offensive in Gaza and a deepening conflict in Lebanon.

Iran's Revolutionary Guards confirmed the death of Haniyeh, hours after he attended a swearing in ceremony for the country's new president, and said it was investigating. Haniyeh has been killed in an Israeli air strike in the Iranian capital, Hamas said.



Ismail Haniyeh

Haniyeh, normally based in Qatar, has been the face of Hamas's international diplomacy as the Israel's offensive in Gaza began on October 7. The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday that at least 39,445 people have been killed in the offensive. The toll includes 45 deaths in 24 hours, according to the ministry figures.

Hamas' armed wing said in a statement Haniyeh's killing would "take the battle to new levels and have major repercussions", while Iran also vowed to retaliate.

POST-COUP MYANMAR

Junta extends emergency rule amid conflict

REUTERS

Myanmar's embattled military government extended a state of emergency yesterday for another six months, state media said, as the junta struggles to maintain its grip on power with fighting flaring on multiple fronts and the economy in crisis.

Army-run Myawaddy media said the military-controlled National Defence and Security Council extended emergency rule to give the junta more time to put together population data for voter lists. The junta has said it will hold an election next year.

The military put the country under emergency rule for a year when it took power in a February 2021 coup, deposing the elected civilian government of Aung San Suu Kyi and triggering nationwide street protests that it violently crushed.

"Why did they do that? Whoever is taken there [DB office] is made to sit at the dining table. Don't mock the nation," said the HC.

Meanwhile, DMP Additional Commissioner Kh Mahid Uddin has been transferred to the logistics, finance, and procurement division from the crime division.

DMP Joint Commissioner (operations) Biplob Kumar Sarker was transferred to DB (South).

Besides, DMP joint commissioners Sanjit Kumar Roy was transferred to the DB (North) and Khondaker Nurrunabi (DB-North) was transferred to DMP's operations division.

Harun or Rashid

At the Monday's meeting, 14-party alliance leaders Rashed Khan Menon and Hasanul Haque Inu urged caution from ruling party members and the government officials while making public statements, according to meeting sources.

Referring to the photo of quota protesters at DB office and the statement allegedly made by them afterwards announcing the end of protests, Menon said such activities by a government official carries a wrong message.

He also said a political crisis should be dealt with by politicians.

People do not trust political solutions given by bureaucrats, and the statement made by the protesters from the DB office is nothing but a mockery, meeting sources quoted him as saying.

In reply, the prime minister, who chaired the meeting, said she will "take care" of Harun.

discussion with the invitees.

There were nearly 100 former Chhatra League leaders, including some ex-presidents and general secretaries of the pro-AL student body, present at the meeting.

At one stage, some ex-Chhatra League leaders started yelling and expressing their displeasure.

"Why are you [Quader] talking to the media without having any conversation with us? If you want to talk to the media, why did you invite us?" yelled some of them at Quader.

Quader then asked them to stop, but they paid no heed. Eventually, Quader left without finishing his speech to the media.

As he was heading towards his office on the sixth floor, the ex-Chhatra League leaders chanted "bhua, bhua [fake, fake]".

They chanted "bhua, bhua" again when Quader, also the road transport and bridges minister, was leaving the office.

The former Chhatra League leaders also criticised AL presidium member Abdur Razzaque, who was beside Quader. They claimed that Razzaque's son supported the quota reform protest. They also questioned as to why Razzaque was invited.

Earlier, Quader held several views-exchange meetings and joint meetings with party units of Dhaka city after the quota reform protest became violent.

But on most occasions, Quader was the lone speaker at the meetings.

In his address to the media yesterday, Quader called upon all to forget their differences and fight terrorism.

"We don't need leaders and activists who will not do any work, just come to the office and give protocols. No protocol is required. Our protocol is our standard. Our protocol is the model of our politics," he said.

The students later entered the Barishal City Corporation building, where a scuffle occurred between them and City Panel Mayor-2 Enamul Haque Bahar. At least 13 protesters were detained.

Arichul Haque, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station, said most of the detainees had been released.

Deputy Commissioner Tanvir Arafat of Barishal Metropolitan Police apologised to journalists.

Meanwhile, the quota reform protesters last night announced that they would remember their fallen comrades today through programmes called Remembering the Heroes.

In a press release, Rifat Rahsid, assistant coordinator of the Anti-discrimination Student Movement, said the victims will be remembered by their families and classmates.

Painting, graffiti, wall writing, festoons, and photos of the incidents will be displayed at the programmes. Silent processions, street theatre, and protest songs will be organised on campuses.

Theyurgedsocialmediauserstomake posts with the hashtags #JulyMassacre, #RememberingOurHeroes.

They also demanded a thorough investigation into the killings during the violence.

Their nine-point demand include an apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, and the resignations of Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan, Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader, Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhoury, Law Minister Anisul Huq, State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat, and State Minister for Post, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak.

In Sylhet, around 100 students demonstrated in front of the gate of Shahjalal University of Science and Technology (SUST) in the morning.

Police used teargas and stun grenades as the protesters, marching towards the court premises, reached Subid Bazar around 1:00pm and removed barriers placed by police.

Locals said around 50 people were injured.

Azbahar Ali Sheikh, deputy commissioner (north) at Sylhet Metropolitan Police, later told reporters that hundreds of Jamaat-Shibir men were in the procession. When the protesters threw bricks, the police used tear gas to disperse them.

He added that no one was injured or detained.

In a separate incident, around 100 cultural, social, and political activists marched through the city demanding justice for the victims.

In Khulna, police detained at least 19 people, students said.

Hundreds of students marched from the city's Nirala Mor to Royal Mor around 1:40pm. They removed barriers at Moyla Pota intersection and demonstrated at Satrasta intersection.

Police and demonstrators chased each other around 2:15pm.

In Dinajpur, police detained 10 people, including five female students. As students gathered at Dinajpur Gor-e-Shaheed Boromath around 11:30am, police chased them away.

The students then gathered in front of Dinajpur Shaheed Minar and started chantingslogans. Police detained 10 of them, said Farid Hossain, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station in Dinajpur.

In the capital, law enforcers intercepted several hundred students, mostly from private universities, near the High Court.

At least five students were allegedly picked up from the area when students, accompanied by some teachers and lawyers, attempted to enter the HC premises. One of the detainees was released later.

Meanwhile,Two Dhaka University teachers -- Prof Nusrat Jahan Chowdhury and Shehreen Amin Monami -- were also allegedly shoved by police when they along with three students tried to stop policemen from detaining a college student.

"I did not expect this behaviour. I came here to stand with the students. Don't we have the right to be here?" asked Prof Nusrat.

The University Teachers' Network later condemned the "misbehaviour" of police and demanded the authorities investigate the incident.

Around 1:00pm when police attempted to take a few more students in a pickup. Nusrat Noor, a private university student, stood in front of the vehicle and some other people joined her.

"My fellow university student has been detained by the police. We came for a peaceful protest for justice, but the police obstructed our programme," Nusrat told The Daily Star.

Around 1:15pm, a group of mostly pro-BNP DU teachers marching from the campus to the High Court was stopped by law enforcers in front of Shishu Academy.

They sat on the road where around 200 students from BUET, DU, and several private universities joined them. They went back to the Doyel Chattar area, after police released two detained students.

Around the same time, over 50 lawyers stood inside the closed Mazar Gate of the HC and chanted slogans.

In Chattogram, around 500 students demonstrated on Chattogram Court premises.

Nearly 30 pro-BNP lawyers demonstrated at the main entrance of the court building. A confrontation then occurred between them and Pro-AL lawyers.

In Jashore, students gathered in the town in the morning and as they walked towards the police superintendent's office, police hit them with batons, injuring at least six. Six students were detained there.

In Kushtia, at least 15 people were detained when they tried to demonstrate in the DC Court area.

Jahangirnagar University students and teachers marched and collected signatures demanding the release of arrested students around 1:00pm.

Structures can be rebuilt

Hasina said the government formed a judicial inquiry commission, led by an HC judge, to investigate the incidents even before anyone asked for it.

She said she sought cooperation from the United Nations and other international organisations to help the government conduct a proper investigation into the violence centring the quota reform protest so that the real culprits could be punished.

The PM said she has already directed the authorities to increase the manpower of the probe committee by including two more members and expand the scope of the investigation.

Hasina said she has been living with the pain of losing her dear ones. She prayed for the salvation of the departed souls and conveyed her profound sympathy to the bereaved families.

She questioned why blood was shed and such an abnormal situation was created in Bangladesh at a time when the world treats Bangladesh with respect.

Referring to her visits to different hospitals to see the injured, Hasina said she witnessed the sufferings of many people, including a small child, and it was very painful.

"I don't know what our fault was. The achievements of the country have faded and the image of the country was tarnished abroad in the name of movement without an issue. My question is who achieved what from this."

The PM said power is not for enjoyment and she did not come to power to lead a comfortable and lavish life. She said she has been tirelessly working to develop Bangladesh and she has successfully done it.

"Bangladesh is a role model for development in the world. Why is that dignity ruined? I give the responsibility of judging it to the countrymen."

Hasina said the collaborators of Pakistan occupation forces (in 1971) had dragged the country backwards time and again by hatching conspiracies, which is very unfortunate.

Talking about the fisheries resources, the PM asked the private entrepreneurs to invest in the fish processing sector to enhance export earnings.

"We are now exporting fish and fish products to 52 countries. But value addition to these exportable fish products is needed. If you can process it, we can earn more money."

She said the contribution of the fish sector to the GDP is 2.53 percent and some two crore people, including 14 lakh women, depend on this sector for their livelihoods.

Hasina said special attention should be paid to the production of fish by-products as well.

She also put emphasis on farming pearls, crabs, snails and oysters to export these items after meeting the local demand.

To mark the fisheries week, 22 individuals and organisations were honoured with the National Fisheries Medal for their outstanding contribution to the country's fisheries sector.

The National Fisheries Week 2024 is being celebrated across the country to promote sustainable development and expansion of fisheries resources.

PM VISITS KURMITOLA HOSPITAL

The prime minister yesterday visited the capital's Kurmitola General Hospital to see the patients injured in the recent violence.

After reaching the hospital at 5:10pm, Hasina enquired about the health of the injured. She instructed the hospital authorities to ensure their proper treatment.

Brig Gen Md Rahman, director of the hospital, briefed the PM about the treatment measures taken by the hospital for the injured.

Process underway

He said this while briefing reporters at his office after a meeting with the members of law enforcement agencies.Early today, home ministry officials said the home ministry sent the law-ministry vetted ban proposal back to the law ministry asking it to issue a notification.

Jahangir Alam, secretary to the Public Security Division at the home ministry, told The Daily Star around 12:30am today that the issuance of the circular was pending with the law ministry.

"They will put the SRO [Statutory Regulatory Order] number and after that it will be issued," he added.

The issue of the ban came to the fore after the Awami League-led 14-party alliance unanimously recommended banning the two organisations during a meeting at the Gono Bhaban with Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on Monday.

It became the talk of the town yesterday as Law Minister Anisul Huq on Tuesday said a government notification in this regard may be issued yesterday.

He said the proposal to ban Jamaat and Shibir would be sent to the law ministry from the home ministry as per rules and that the ban would be enforced though an executive order.

The government has been accusing Jamaat and Shibir of resorting to violence centring the quota reform protest.

Asaduzzaman yesterday said the Jamaat-Shibir created the ongoing situation. The Jamaat, Shibir, BNP clique resorted to destructive activities from behind by keeping the students at the forefront, he said, alleging that militant organisations were also involved.

"Students would not have resorted to destructive activities if the advisers did not advise them. So many people have been injured. Have all been shot by the police? We will also reveal how many people were killed and injured in whose firing," the home minister said.

He said Jamaat-Shibir was banned before. Late president Ziaur Rahman gave them the right to form a party.

The people in favour of the Liberation War and the civil society members are now talking about banning Jamaat. It is the demand of the people, he said.

The Election Commission on October 29, 2018, scrapped the registration of Jamaat, a long-time ally of the BNP, following a High Court verdict that declared Jamaat's registration illegal.

EU postpones negotiations with Dhaka

The government put the death toll at 150 in violence centring the quota reform protest.

But according to The Daily Star's count, at least 163 people were killed.

The death toll from the violence could be much higher as this newspaper could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

In the statement, Borrell also expressed grave concern over unlawful killings perpetrated in recent days by the authorities in Bangladesh. He called for thoroughly investigating the killings and bringing those responsible to justice.

"We will follow closely the actions of the authorities in the context of this crisis and ... expect all human rights to be fully respected," Borrell said.

Bangladesh exported products to the EU market worth $24 billion in 2023. This is 58 percent of Bangladesh's total export, according to the Export Promotion Bureau.

Bangladesh enjoys duty-free access to the EU market because of its LDC status.

The country can enjoy similar privileges after 2026 under another scheme called GSP Plus, which will, however, require conditions on human rights, labour rights, democracy, and environment.

Once the country is graduated, it will face 12.5 percent duty on export of goods to the EU if Bangladesh cannot obtain the GSP Plus fulfilling EU's conditions of 32 international conventions, including four core conventions on labour, human rights, good governance, and environmental protection.

Experts said any kind of bad relationship with the EU may have a negative impact on trade.

The EU and Bangladesh agreed in principle in 2022 to sign the Partnership and Cooperation Agreement (PCA).

The first round of negotiation was scheduled in Dhaka in September.

A diplomatic source said Bangladesh is willing to hold the first round of negotiation of PCA in November, considering the 79th session of the UN General Assembly opens on September 10, 2024.

In view of the increasing importance of EU-Bangladesh relations, including in the international domain, the EU had proposed to initiate discussions for signing the PCA, which is aimed at enhancing dialogue between both sides on issues of global concern and give more scope for mutually beneficial cooperation in a wide range of policy and strategic areas, said the European Commission.

"The PCA will give Bangladesh-EU relations a new legal foundation, which is 'more comprehensive and up-to-date', and will respond better to current and evolving challenges," according to the European Commission.

Hamas leader killed in Iran

Iran's Supreme Leader Ali Khamenei said Israel had provided the grounds for "harsh punishment for itself" and it was Tehran's duty to avenge the Hamas leader's death as it had occurred in the Iranian capital. Iranian forces had already made strikes directly on Israel earlier in the Gaza offensive.

There was no comment nor claim of responsibilty from Israel. The Israeli military said it was assessing the situation but had not issued any new security guidelines for civilians.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu was expected to meet for consultations with security officials later yesterday.

US Defence Secretary Lloyd Austin said Washington would work to try to ease tensions but said the United States would help defend Israel if it were attacked, reports Reuters.

"I don't think war is inevitable. I maintain that. I think there's always room and opportunities for diplomacy," he told reporters during a visit to the Philippines. "We're going to work hard to make sure that we're doing things to help take the temperature down and address issues through diplomatic gatherings."

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said that a ceasefire in Gaza was the "imperative".

Qatar, which has been brokering talks aimed at halting the fighting in Gaza, condemned Haniyeh's killing as a dangerous escalation of the conflict. China, Russia, Pakistan, Afghanistan and Turkey also condemned it.

Qatar's Prime Minister Sheikh Mohammed bin Abdulrahman Al-Thani cast doubt over the success of future mediation between Israel and Hamas, reports AFP.

Haniyeh's assassination comes as Israel's campaign in Gaza approaches the end of its 10th month with no sign of an end to an offensive that has threatened to spiral into a wider regional conflict.

At the same time, the risk of a war between Israel and Hezbollah has grown following the strike in the Golan Heights that killed 12 children in a Druze village on Saturday and the subsequent killing of the senior Hezbollah commander Fuad Shukr.

Hezbollah has not yet confirmed Shukr's death, but said he was in the building hit by an Israeli strike.

‘Almost a terrorist attack’ to topple govt

PM tells Indian envoy

UNB, Dhaka

Terming the recent violence in the country “almost a terrorist attack”, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the attacks were aimed at creating a situation like Sri Lanka to oust her government.

“It was not a movement at all, and at one stage it almost turned into a terrorist attack,” she said while Indian High Commissioner to Bangladesh Pranay Verma called on her at her official residence Gono Bhaban.

‘Killings during quota protests state-sponsored’

Says Prof Salimullah Khan

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

All the killings that took place during the quota reform protests were state-sponsored and carried out by the forces of the state and its associates, said Prof Salimullah Khan of University of Liberal Arts Bangladesh yesterday.

Salimullah, while talking at a programme in front of the university, also said considering the current situation, an international probe is certainly necessary for a “credible investigation into the killings”. He also expressed skepticism whether people will get justice over the killings.

Wearing red clothes, teachers of ULAB held a sit-in in front of the university entrance in the morning, demanding the release of students who were arrested during the protests, the withdrawal of cases filed against them, an end to oppression, and a peaceful environment for education.

The government, without going to the problem’s root, is now saying they will slap a ban on this party or that party. This will not even scratch the surface of the main problem. Rather, this will make it more complex.

Salimullah said they are extending their support to the killed, injured, disappeared, and persecuted people.

He said the question of whether all will have the right to

More than just NUMBERS

A 20-year-old young mother shot dead in Narayanganj. A 26-year-old nightguard dies from bullet wounds at a Dhaka hospital. A 25-year-old student fatally shot in Dhaka. At least 163 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are sons, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

A family left to navigate pain and loss

Nightguard Imran, 26, dies of bullet wounds in Dhaka

SHUSHANTA GHOSH, Barishal

Fifteen-month-old Yaj Khalifa clinged to his mother, Shanta Akhtar, his tiny face a mixture of confusion and fear as he gazed at the unfamiliar faces in their home.

The air in their Barishal residence was thick with grief as Shanta’s sob fill the room. “How am I going to survive now? I have lost everything.”

Her husband, Imran Khalifa, 26, died after a bullet hit him near Shahjadpur Market in Dhaka around 6:00pm on July 19 amid the clashes centring the quota reform protests.

Imran worked as a nightguard in Gulshan.

He moved to Dhaka from Kalna in Barishal with his family last year in search of better opportunities.

Initially, Imran tried his hand at selling shoes on the footpath, but it failed. He then worked as a labourer, struggling to make ends meet. Finally, on July 3, he secured a job as a nightguard at an apartment building.

Life slowly started to fall into places for the three. They rented a small room in Shahjadpur Khilbaritek area. It wasn’t much but it was home.

But everything changed on July 19.

With teary eyes, Shanta recalled the events.

20-year-old Sumaiya dies after being shot; family believes it came from a helicopter

SAURAV HOSSAIN SIAM, Narayanganj

There were loud noises everywhere.

Helicopters were flying over the Siddhirganj area of Narayanganj since the afternoon.

It was July 20 and clashes were ongoing between protesters and law enforcers.

Once her two-month-old daughter fell asleep, Sumaiya Akter, 20, put her down on the bed and went to the balcony of their apartment on the sixth floor, to see what was happening outside.

Suddenly, a bullet hit her and she fell on the floor.

Her mother, Asma Begum, was already in the balcony at the time. She did not immediately realise what happened. She saw her daughter lying in a pool of blood.

“I kept calling her name, but got no response. It took me a while to realise that she was no more. She was shot in the head. The bullet pierced through the iron grille before hitting her,” Asma said while pointing to the hole in the rod of the balcony grille.

Sumaiya’s younger brother, Md Sojol,

Death of 25-year-old leaves family distraught

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

In the small, close-knit community of Nalkhola Bazar in Patuakhali’s Dasmina upazila, the grief was palpable.

The Hossain family was mourning an irreplaceable loss -- their son, Jihad Hossain, a 25-year-old postgraduate student at Dhaka’s Kabi Nazrul Government College, whose life was tragically cut short during the anti-quota protests in Dhaka on July 19.

Jihad was the youngest of Nurul Amin Molla and Shahanur Begum’s four children. He was a beacon of hope for his family, known for his affable nature and academic diligence. Jihad’s elder siblings, Jannatul Ferdaus and Zainab Akhter Neela, are married, while his elder brother Jinnat Hossain is a government primary school teacher.

Demand speakers at press conference by Outraged Women Community

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Eminent women of the country yesterday said that the government is failing to realise that the anti-discrimination student protest has the support of millions of people across the country. Because of this failure, they are constantly taking more anti-people steps and only speaking the language of bullets.

They said the people of Bangladesh sacrificed their lives for independence, but people are not safe in this independent country, they have to sacrifice their lives fighting for their rights. All bodies will be counted, mass arrests and torture must be stopped.

The remarks were made at a press conference organised by the Outraged Women Community at Dhaka Reporters Unity (DRU).

Women’s leader Farida Akhtar said, “As long as such autocratic incidents continue in this country, we will stay on the streets until the demands of the students are met.”

Rights violations soar amid protests

Says MSF report

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A recent media monitoring report revealed that the ongoing anti-discrimination student protests in Bangladesh have resulted in at least 211 deaths and nearly 7,730 injuries.

The report also revealed that there have been 798 incidents of violence and sabotage nationwide, resulting in 10,372 arrests.

Additionally, 259 students have been arrested across Dhaka and 18 other districts for their alleged involvement in sabotage during the unrest.

The report also detailed political violence over the past two months, with at least eight people killed and 214 injured in 30 incidents in June and July. Post-election violence has claimed another eight lives and injured 490 people in 50 separate incidents.

David Hasanat granted bail

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday granted ad-interim bail to garment exporter KM Rezaul Hasanat David, chairman and CEO of Viyellatex Group, in a case filed over vandalising and setting Setu Bhaban on fire on July 18.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Mohammad Jashim passed the order considering his health condition after his lawyer Sheikh Baharul Islam moved a petition on grounds that David was abroad during the time of occurrence.

During the hearing, the lawyer told the court that his client is a renowned businessman and was implicated in the case as part of a conspiracy to harass him. The accused was abroad from July 13 to July 23.

Moreover, the accused has been suffering from different ailments. So, his client should be granted bail considering the depth of offences, said the lawyer.

While Sub-inspector Shah Alom opposed the bail petition saying that David was accused of financing the perpetrators.

Upon hearing both the sides, the magistrate granted David bail. The bail order will be valid until the submission of the probe report, said the magistrate.

KURIGRAM, LALMONIRHAT

Floodwater sweeps away fish worth Tk 6cr

S DILIP ROY, Lalmonirhat

Recent floods have wreaked havoc on fish farms across Kurigram and Lalmonirhat, with floodwaters sweeping away fish and fish fries worth Tk 6 crore from 3,550 ponds and enclosures.

Approximately 2,000 individuals engaged in pisciculture have been severely affected, said officials.

According to the fisheries department in Kurigram, 210 tonnes of fish and fish fries from 3,100 ponds on 450 hectares of land along the banks of the Brahmaputra, Dudhkumar, and Dharla rivers were washed away, leaving 1,600 fish farmers in dire straits with a total loss of Tk 5 crore.

In Lalmonirhat, the floodwaters washed away 50 tonnes of fish and fish fries from 450 ponds on 90 hectares of land in the Dharla and Teesta rivers' shoal areas, causing a total loss of Tk 1 crore to 400 fish farmers.

"I had taken a Tk two lakh loan to rear fish in two leased ponds on four acres of land. All the fish were washed away by the floodwaters from the Brahmaputra. I don't know how I will repay the loan and raise capital to resume my venture," said Sudan Chandra Das, a fish farmer from Patrakhata village under Kurigram's Chilmari upazila.

Fish farmers Noor Islam from the Sardob area under Kurigram Sadar upazila and Dhiren Chandra Das of Kulaghat village in Lalmonirhat Sadar upazila shared similar plights.

Moktadir Khan, district fisheries officer in Kurigram, said a list of flood-affected fish farmers has been prepared and sent to higher authorities, requesting government assistance for them.

'No shots were fired from Rab helicopters'

Says Rab HQ

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Rapid Action Battalion Headquarters yesterday in a statement once again said only teargas canisters and sound grenades were fired from their helicopters during the recent protests.

"No shots were fired from our helicopters. But a quarter is deliberately trying to make the use of helicopters controversial...," it said.

While explaining the death of 11-year-old Shafkat Samir during the ongoing violence on July 19, the Rab Headquarters said Samir was shot dead while closing the window of his house on the second floor of a four-storey building in Kafrul.

"Propaganda is being spread that Samir was shot from the helicopter of Rab forces. However, the helicopter travels in an uninterrupted pace, and the bullets move in a straight line...," it said.

"Considering the overall situation... the speed of the bullet that hit his eye does not match in any way," the statement read.

Curfew to be lifted soon

Home minister tells UN resident coordinator

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan yesterday said the country's situation is gradually becoming normal and the curfew would be lifted soon.

He said this in response to a query of Gwyn Lewis, UN resident coordinator in Bangladesh.

"We will be able to withdraw the curfew soon. The army will also go back to barracks," said the minister.

After a meeting with Lewis at the secretariat, the minister spoke to the media. He said the UN wanted to know about the detention of a teenager.

Asaduzzaman said the age of the said teen is yet to be known. They came to know from his school records that he was seventeen and a half years old. "He was involved in the crime of killing a cop in Jatrabari."

They have identified him through video evidence, said the minister. He said the boy is now in a correction centre as per the existing law.

Regarding the loss of lives, he said, "Our police and security forces were forced to fire to protect lives and property. The miscreants put forth children and stayed behind during the violence. As they [miscreants] started throwing bricks and blasting crude bombs, police were forced to use tear gas. When the violence escalated, police had to take other steps that left a number of people killed."

He said the UN resident coordinator also asked him about the use of armored personnel carriers (APC) with the UN insignia.

"I informed her that the army might have used the APCs with UN logo unintentionally, but when it came to light, those vehicles were not used anymore. No operational activities were conducted by those vehicles."

Govt takes measure to form public opinion against violence

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government has directed all deputy commissioners and UNOs to create public opinion against terrorism and violence in their areas by forming a "Terrorism and Sabotage Prevention Committee" amid the ongoing situation.

The committee, comprising representatives of local dignitaries and social, cultural, religious, professional, and business organisations, will work to form public opinion through mass contact.

In a letter yesterday, the cabinet division instructed calling a meeting for each of such committees across all metropolitans, districts, upazilas, municipalities, wards, and unions.

In this regard, the cabinet division has directed the secretary of LGD, all divisional and deputy commissioners to take the necessary measures and to report to the division, said the letter.

Around 5:30pm, Imran had asked Shanta to prepare dinner for his night shift. He said he would step out briefly to see what was going on outside. Tragedy struck as he walked towards the market. A sudden bullet ended his life. "My husband was not involved in politics. All he cared about was taking care of his family," Shanta wept.

While talking to Shanta, this correspondent saw Imran's parents, Nazrul Islam, 68, and Selina Akhtar, 50, sitting in silence.

Nazrul recounted the moment he received a call from Imran's phone on Friday night. "It was not him speaking. Someone said he was at a hospital."

Shanta said she rushed to the hospital, only to find Imran's lifeless body among many others. "The doctor said a bullet had pierced through his body."

Imran was buried near his village home on July 21.

"Almost every day, we see the prime minister visiting the injured in clashes in different hospitals. It's nothing but a farce," she said.

Rahnuma Ahmed, a writer and researcher, said the government, with its forces, not only killed the youth, but also killed the dreams and future of the country.

"Eliminating quota discrimination has now become a symbol. Young people are furious. They don't want to see such a country again. They want to rebuild the country, they want to dream anew. They want to live freely and with dignity. In doing so, they had to give their lives. What could be more shameful?"

Shireen Haque, a women's rights activist, said, "The courage of today's youth has overwhelmed us. Even after being attacked, they have developed resistance. However, from the events that have happened, it is easy to guess that our country will not go back to the previous place. But we all have to remember the fundamental rights of the constitution. Accordingly, the country should be run."

Writer and researcher Maha Mirza said, "What has happened in the last few days is genocide. What is being done to cover it up is unimaginable. Students are being picked up from their homes, it is not possible to know where they are being taken. This is a clear violation of human rights. There has never been so many human rights violations in Bangladesh."

Environment Activist Sharmeen Morshed said, "What have we gone through in the last few days? The electricity was turned off, the internet was turned off and students were picked up from their homes. In 1971, Pakistan forces attacked the youth, today our own forces attacked them. But the young people did not lose courage. The new Liberation War of the youth has begun. We are with them in this fight."

Labour leader Taslima Akhter said that the quota reform protest has now brought the issue of protecting democracy and freedom of speech to the forefront. There is no scope to divide it with the spirit of the Liberation War or Razakars. Because there have not been these many killings in this country in recent memory.

Filmmaker Reetu Sattar read out a written statement at the press conference.

The speakers also put forth six demands -- the nine-point demand of the anti-discrimination student movement must be accepted; all detained students must be released unconditionally; police killings must be investigated; curfew should be withdrawn, along with BGB and army; lives of ordinary people should be protected and general students should not be threatened through various agencies.

Such killings

MJF's Executive Director Shaheen Anam called for the protection of all individuals from violence, stating, "Such killings, especially of children, during protests are absolutely unacceptable and barbaric. We are extremely concerned about the high number of child fatalities. We want a safe environment for all children."

Shaheen Anam urged everyone to ensure that no child's safety is compromised and to keep children away from all political activities.

She strongly called on the government to conduct thorough and transparent investigations into each incident and bring the perpetrators to justice.

said, "Since the morning of that day, helicopters were flying in the area."

Asma kept pointing to the bullet hole in the iron bar, saying, "This could not have happened unless the shot was fired from above. There were helicopters flying directly over our building. If the bullet had been fired from below, the hole wouldn't look like this. That's why we believe the shot came from a helicopter."

Mentionable, Rab in a press statement yesterday stated that no shots were fired from their helicopters.

Asma said they took Sumaiya to a private hospital in the Signboard area, where doctors declared her dead. She was buried at a local graveyard.

Sumaiya was staying with her mother at Siddhirganj since May during her postpartum period. She was supposed to return to her in-law's house in Cumilla a week later.

Now, Asma is blaming herself for bringing her daughter to Narayanganj.

Asma said Sumaiya's father died during the pandemic. "She was my everything... now I lost her as well...."

Asma started crying. Her granddaughter, who was in her lap, began crying too.

On July 19, while heading to a roadside hotel for lunch, Jihad was struck by a bullet that pierced his right thigh. He was declared dead at DMCH.

The news shattered his family. Jinnat Hossain, Jihad's elder brother, recounted the harrowing experience of receiving the devastating news and bringing his brother's body home. "He was not involved in any politics. His death is an irreparable loss to our family. We want justice for this murder," Jinnat said.

Nurul Amin and Shahanur Begum, Jihad's parents, are inconsolable. Shahanur clutches her son's photo, her tears unceasing, questioning the senseless violence that took her son away. "What was my son's offence? I want justice for my son's murder," she lamented.

Nurul Amin recounted their last phone conversation at 3:00pm on the day of the incident. Jihad had mentioned the tense situation in Dhaka, and Nurul had advised him to stay indoors.

But fate had other plans, and by 5:00pm, the devastating news of Jihad's death had reached him. The sorrow and disbelief are etched deeply in his heart.

Construction work of a new prison goes on in Khulna city. While the cost of the project increased several times to eventually stand at Tk 288 crore, the work still could not be completed even after 12 years.

NEW KHULNA DISTRICT JAIL

Construction works drag on for 12 years

DIPANKAR ROY, Khulna

The construction of a modern prison of the Khulna District Jail has remained incomplete for 12 years.

The old prison of Khulna District Jail, located in the city's Jailkhana Ghat along the bank of Bhairab River, was built in 1906. It has some 1,600-2,000 prisoners at present against a capacity to keep 608 inmates.

The Directorate of Prisons in 2008 took the initiative to build the new jail to provide modern facilities to inmates.

Approved by the Executive Committee of the National Economic Council (Ecnec) in 2011, the Tk 144 crore project to construct the prison started in 2012 on around 30 acres of land in Chowk Mathurabad under Dumuria upazila, near Joy Bangla Intersection on Khulna City Bypass Road, slated to be completed by 2016.

However, while the cost of the project increased several times to eventually stand at Tk 288 crore, the work still could not be completed even after 12 years.

According to sources, the project got delayed due to different reasons including change of location, and complications regarding land acquisition.

Since June 6, 2017, the project has been revised and extended a total of six times, with June 30, 2024 set as the new deadline, which has also been crossed.

As per the project's masterplan, the new jail was designed to accommodate 4,000 prisoners. However, the infrastructures under the project were later revised to keep 2,000 inmates.

So far, a total of 52 concrete structures including 47 buildings with one floor to six floors have been constructed inside the project area.

The structures include barracks for different categories of prisoners, prison guards' quarters, and observation towers. Each prisoners' barrack has a wall around it.

Visiting the project site recently, this correspondent saw that although the infrastructures have been constructed, other works including pavement and walkways, internal and connecting roads, fitting grilles, fences, and drains are still incomplete.

However, the Public Works Department sources said the work is almost complete and it will be handed over to the authorities soon.

According to the project office, the new prison is being built as a correctional facility. Here under trial and sentenced prisoners will be kept separately. There are also separate barracks for juvenile and female prisoners. There will be separate hospitals, motivation centres, work-sheds and day-care centres for female inmates.

There will also be a 50-bed hospital for male prisoners, as well as a school for the children of prison guards, a library, a dining room, a modern salon, a laundry, recreation centre, and separate prayer rooms for male and female inmates.

Kudrat-e-Khuda, president of Shushashaner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) in Khulna, said, "Even after 12 years, the construction of the new jail is not completed yet. This is unthinkable in a fair state. Corruption is associated with project delays. Prolonged projects only pave way for more corruption."

"Hopefully the project will be completed soon. The new prison will enhance the district jail's capacity to keep more inmates," said Mohammad Rafiqul Kader, jail superintendent of Khulna District Jail.

Contacted, Md Asaduz Zaman, executive engineer of PWD Division-2, Khulna, said, "The project is almost 99 percent completed and will be handed over to the authorities concerned soon."

Govt now a 'public enemy'

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said the existential crisis of the government is gradually deepening as it has now become a "public enemy" by carrying out "genocide" to suppress student protests.

In a statement, he called upon all to take part in the ongoing student-led protests to end injustices by removing the "fascist" Awami League government.

"The government, now isolated from people, has become a public enemy by committing ruthless and barbaric attacks and genocide," he said.

Fakhrul said the indiscriminate killings to subdue the movement are a crime against humanity and punishable by International Criminal Court.

He also called for the immediate and unconditional release of those arrested, withdrawal of the curfew, return of the army to their barracks, lifting of restrictions on gatherings, and reopening of educational institutions.

He said the government is doing whatever it wants to protect itself from public wrath by disregarding the law, constitution, democratic principles, and humanitarian values.

SCBA president demands UN probe, secretary blames it on BNP-Jamaat

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Pro-BNP lawyers, led by the Supreme Court Bar Association (SCBA) President AM Mahbub Uddin Khokon, and Awami League backed lawyers, led by SCBA Secretary Shah Monjurul Hoque, yesterday held two separate press conferences, regarding the current state of the country.

Khokon demanded that the ongoing curfew be lifted, along with the withdrawal of armed forces and a stop to "government's control on media".

"The government has already filed cases against lakhs of people. Around 13,000 people have been wrongfully arrested and students are being arrested by house-to-house searches. Political activists are being arrested in order to give political colour to this movement. We support the mass inquiry commission formed under the leadership of Justice MA Matin and rights activist Sultana Kamal," he said.

"We are demanding an inquiry into every incident of killings and injuries under the supervision of the United Nations. We think that hundreds of people have been killed in a planned manner."

"We are strongly demanding an amendment to the International Crimes (Tribunal) Act and to arrange speedy trial of those accused for the crimes against humanity and human rights violations," he said.

SCBA Secretary Shah Monjurul Hoque, at their event, said, "During the quota reform protests, the BNP-Jamaat-Shibir, relying on ordinary students, wreaked havoc across the country and destroyed important state structures."

"The government sincerely stood by the families of the people injured and killed in this unexpected incident and accepted all the demands of the students."

He said the SCBA is pledge-bound to protect the country's independence, sovereignty, state resources, law and order and public life. Therefore, this association protests against the anti-national activities of the anti-independence circle.

Petition seeks HC order for judicial commission

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Supreme Court lawyer yesterday filed a petition with the High Court seeking its order on the government to form a judicial commission to probe four children's deaths in the recent violence.

Advocate Taimur Alam Khondaker also prayed to the court to direct the government to give Tk 1 crore each to the families of the deceased.

compete for government jobs is not nonpolitical; rather, it is a political one.

"But instead of going towards a political solution to this question, the government first wanted to ignore it. It later resorted to repression," he said.

"The government, without going to the problem's root, is now saying they will slap a ban on this party or that party. This will not even scratch the surface of the main problem. Rather, this will make the problem more complex," he added.

"The problem should be resolved politically. For the first step in this political solution, the government should seek an unconditional apology and resign. Without this step, we cannot take any step towards a new system," he observed.

"A safe learning environment must be restored in the universities. If our students can't come, whom will we teach, what will we teach?" Salimullah asked, demanding the release of all arrested students.

Haniyeh was seen as more moderate face of Hamas

REUTERS, Dubai

Ismail Haniyeh, the Hamas leader who was killed in Iran, was the tough-talking face of the Palestinian group's international diplomacy as the offensive raged back in Gaza, where three of his sons were killed in an Israeli airstrike.

But despite the rhetoric, he was seen by many diplomats as a moderate compared to the more hardline members of the Iran-backed group inside Gaza.

Appointed to the Hamas top job in 2017, Haniyeh moved between Turkey and Qatar's capital Doha, escaping the travel curbs of the blockaded Gaza Strip and enabling him to act as a negotiator in ceasefire talks or to talk to Hamas' ally Iran.

"All the agreements of normalisation that you (Arab states) signed with (Israel) will not end this conflict," Haniyeh declared on Qatar-based Al Jazeera television shortly after Israel launched the offensive.

Israel's offensive killed more than 35,000 people inside Gaza so far, according to health authorities in the territory.

Three of Haniyeh's sons - Hazem, Amir and Mohammad - were killed on April 10 when an Israeli air strike struck the car they were driving, Hamas said.

Haniyeh also lost four of his grandchildren, three girls and a boy, in the attack, Hamas said.

Haniyeh had denied Israeli assertions that his sons were fighters for the group, and said "the interests of the Palestinian people are placed ahead of everything" when asked if their killing would impact truce talks.

For all the tough language in public, Arab diplomats and officials had viewed him as relatively pragmatic compared with more hardline voices inside Gaza.

Israel regards the entire Hamas leadership as terrorists.

PALESTINIAN DETAINEES FROM GAZA

Israel used waterboarding to torture them: UN report

AGENCIES

Israel has detained thousands of Palestinians during the offensive in Gaza and stands accused of numerous cases of torture, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights said in a new report.

The 23-page report, released yesterday, noted allegations of widespread abuse of prisoners being held incommunicado in arbitrary, prolonged detention. It was published during a tense standoff in Israel as far-right politicians and demonstrators opposed an investigation into alleged sexual abuse of detainees by soldiers.

Based primarily on interviews with released detainees and other victims from October 7 to June 30, the UN report found that since the offensive began, "thousands of Palestinians" including medical staff, have been "taken from Gaza to Israel, usually shackled and blindfolded".

As of the end of June, Israel's prison service held more than 9,400 "security detainees", the report said, adding that those detained have been "held in secret, without being given a reason for their detention" and without a lawyer.

> "At least 53 Palestinian detainees" are known to have died in Israeli detention facilities: report

"At least 53 Palestinian detainees" are known to have died in Israeli detention facilities, it said. It also detailed "allegations of torture and other forms of cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment, including sexual abuse of women and men".

The report was released during an investigation by the Israeli army, which is questioning nine soldiers over allegations of "substantial abuse" of a Palestinian detainee at the Sde Teiman detention camp in the Negev desert in southern Israel, reports Al Jazeera online.

Last week, eight Palestinian prisoners who were released by the Israeli army said they experienced torture during their time in Ofer Prison in the occupied West Bank.

Former Palestinian detainees told the UN that they were held in "cage-like facilities, stripped naked for prolonged periods, wearing only diapers".

The documented abuse included food, sleep and water deprivation and being burned with cigarettes.

"Some detainees said dogs were released on them, and others said they were subjected to waterboarding, or that their hands were tied and they were suspended from the ceiling. Some women and men also spoke of sexual and gender-based violence," the report said.

Death toll in Kerala landslides rises to 167

REUTERS, Chooramala

Soldiers and rescuers worked through slush and rocks under steady rain, looking for survivors and searching for bodies in the hills of India's Kerala state yesterday, a day after more than 165 people were killed in monsoon landslides.

Nearly 1,000 people had been rescued from the hillside villages and tea and cardamom estates in Wayanad district and 225 were still missing, authorities said yesterday. They said at least 167 people died and 195 were injured, while the local Asianet news TV channel put the death toll at 179.

Heavy rain in Kerala, one of India's most attractive tourist destinations, led to the landslides early on Tuesday, sending torrents of mud, water and tumbling boulders downhill and burying or sweeping people away to their deaths as they slept.

It was the worst disaster in the state since deadly floods in 2018.

Experts said the area had been receiving heavy rain in the last two weeks which had softened the soil and that extremely heavy rainfall on Monday triggered the landslides.

but he was shown arrested in that case.

Shahjalal filed a prayer seeking bail for Mahim, and the hearing will be on August 4, he said, adding that the matter has been transferred to the children's court.

Shahjalal told The Daily Star that Mahim on July 18 was hanging out with his friends at Parkermor near his home, which is also close to the Begum Rokeya University. He was in his college uniform.

When violence erupted around Parkermor, panicked Mahim ran towards the opposite direction to his home and suffered shotgun pellet injuries to his leg, said his father, quoting Mahim's friends.

Mahim's father Shahjalal said they looked for Mahim all day but at night he received a call from someone claiming to be a law enforcer. The person said Mahim was in their custody and that he would be released the next day, July 19.

Shahjalal called the person the next day but this time he said Mahim would not be released.

That afternoon, the father learnt that Mahim was sent to Rangpur jail after he was produced before a court.

In a Facebook post at 8:24pm yesterday, a sister of Mahim claimed that the commissioner of Rangpur Metropolitan Police called the family to his office yesterday. He assured them that Mahim was in good health and urged the family to be at the court during proceedings today. He also told them that Mahim would be released after the court proceedings today.

The Daily Star could not reach any Rangpur police officials for comments last night.

pension scheme issue] is a question of our [university teachers'] dignity. We'll continue our movement until our demands are met."

Education Minister Mohibul Hassan Chowdhoury said ensuring the safety of the students is the government's prime concern now.

"We're in close contact with the government authorities concerned and we'll take decisions in line with their recommendations regarding the reopening of schools and colleges," he told The Daily Star.

He said the situation in Dhaka, Narayanganj, Narsingdi and Gazipur differs from that of the rest of the country, and they will take it into consideration when making the decisions.

"However, we want to reopen schools and colleges as soon as possible."

About the teachers' protests, Mohibul said they were in talks with the teachers. "We'll request the teachers to reach a positive decision."

There are 1.98 crore students in primary level schools, 2.03 crore in secondary level and 44 lakh in all universities and affiliated colleges under public universities.

On July 1, the students took to the streets demanding reforms to the quota system in government jobs and had enforced strikes and boycott of classes and exams on all campuses indefinitely since July 6.

Their peaceful protests, however, turned violent as Bangladesh Chhatra League men attacked them on the Dhaka University campus on July 15.

Unprecedented violence and police attacks since July 16 had left at least 163 people, including students, dead (the actual number could be much higher) and thousands injured.

That very night, the education ministry declared the closure of all secondary and higher secondary level educational institutions (schools, colleges, madrasas and technical institutions), as well as polytechnic institutes until further notice. Following that, the UGC declared the closure of all public and private universities along with their affiliated colleges. It also instructed them to vacate all dormitories.

On July 17, the primary and mass education ministry issued a press release announcing the closure of all government primary schools, Child Welfare Trust-run primary schools, and Bureau of Non-Formal Education learning centres in the city corporation areas of the eight divisional cities indefinitely.

LOSSES AT PUBLIC UNIVERSITIES

Undergraduate admission seekers have been affected by the postponement of the admission processes and orientations at the Chittagong University of Engineering and Technology, Khulna University of Engineering and Technology and Rajshahi University of Engineering and Technology.

Admission tests for the cluster of nine agricultural universities for this academic year, scheduled to be held on July 20, were also postponed.

Besides, Rajshahi University authorities pushed back their undergraduate admission process on July 1 and deferred the start of the first-year honours classes.

A student of Comilla University's English department, requesting anonymity, said no classes were held at the university since early May, following a conflict between teachers and the vice-chancellor over an untoward incident at the latter's office. "Then came the teachers' movement, which further hampered the educational environment on the campus.

"We understand that we're all fighting for our rights, but at the same time we need to continue our studies ... It's the government's responsibility to stabilise the situation for the students as well as for the teachers."

HSC EXAMINEES PERPLEXED

Earlier, the government postponed the HSC and all equivalent exams, scheduled between July 18 and August 1, for eight days.

Professor Tapan Kumar Sarkar, chairman of the Inter-Education Board Coordination Committee and also of the Dhaka Education Board, said, "We'll hold the postponed exams after August 11."

Meanwhile, teachers of secondary schools said the half-yearly exams, slated for July 15-24, were postponed due to the school closure and the next exams are scheduled for July 30 till August 3.

Classroom activities were disrupted during the first half of this year due to cold waves, the national election and then heat waves. So, more closures will cause more learning loss, teachers said.

Prarthona Sarker, a seventh-grader of Monipur High School and College in Mirpur, said, "It's difficult to study at home without classroom explanations. While self-study provides some understanding, it's not as effective."

Her mother, Labonno Sarker, expressed concerns about the overall situation. "School closures are harmful for the children. On the other hand, if they reopen, there's a fear of violence during the commute [to and from school], which is also a big concern."

The government was scheduled to complete the class XI admission process by July 25 and start classes on July 30.

However, the internet shutdown since the night of July 18 hindered the timely completion of admissions. The authorities concerned are now planning to start classes for newly enrolled class XI students on August 6.

Investigate allegations

The Daily Star's count of the victims is based solely on hospital and police sources.

Over the last several days, police arrested more than 10,000 people in connection with the violence.

"In recent weeks, thousands of students have taken to the streets in Bangladesh to protest a lack of economic opportunity and to end the government's inequitable quota system for public sector employment that reserves government jobs for relatives of veterans of Bangladesh's 1971 war of independence," the statement said.

Rather than engaging in the legitimate grievances of the protesters, the Bangladesh security forces, including the Rapid Action Battalion (Rab), responded with brute force, killing hundreds of protesters, and arresting and injuring thousands more, it said.

The statement said the right to peacefully assemble and protest is one of the foundations of a democratic society.

"The United States stands with these courageous individuals who are advocating for their dignity and for a prosperous future, and we will continue to speak up for human rights in Bangladesh and seek to hold accountable those involved in such abuses."

Meanwhile, Catherine West, UK's parliamentary under-secretary of state at the Foreign, Commonwealth, and Development Office, said what has happened in the last couple of weeks in Bangladesh is not acceptable.

"And we have raised that on a number of occasions including the nature of judicial review which is being currently undertaken by the government of Bangladesh," she said in response to a query by Bangladesh-origin MP Rupa Huq in parliament on Tuesday.

She also said the UK and its international partners will continue to push for progress towards accountability and justice including through an independent, impartial and transparent investigation into alleged human rights violations in Bangladesh.

Rupa made a reference to the Tiananmen Square and said the use of lethal force on student protesters in Bangladesh has rightly been condemned by their government.

She urged that the UK to put pressure on the Bangladeshi investigation,so that it has an international element, because "a country that can just turn off all communications with the outside world and controls all institutions right down to their stormtrooper-like police should not just be allowed to mark its own homework."

Another Bangladesh-origin UK MP Apsana Begum said following the high death tolls among the student protesters, international human rights bodies are reporting further crackdowns on dissent from mass arrests and enforced disappearances to torture and unlawful killings.

Expressing solidarity with Bangladeshi people facing repression, she said they must have their right to exercise their fundamental human rights, including the right to protest.

Meanwhile, Australian High Commission in Dhaka on Tuesday said they remain deeply concerned about the violence and reiterate Australia's support for universal human rights.

"It is critical perpetrators of alleged violations be held to account," it said in an X post, adding that they honour the memories of all those killed in recent violence in Bangladesh.

However, China said it is heartened as the situation in Bangladesh has come "under control and social order has resumed".

At a press briefing in Beijing yesterday, Chinese Foreign Ministry Spokesperson Lin Jian said China is heartened by this as Bangladesh's friend and close neighbour.

He said the two countries are comprehensive strategic cooperative partners and China stands ready to work with Bangladesh to deliver on the important common understandings reached by the leaders of the two countries during Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's recent visit to China.

Matiur goes on early retirement his son Mushfiqur Rahman Ifat posted on social media a photo of a sacrificial goat before Eid and wrote that the animal cost Tk 12 lakh.

The post went viral with many pointing out that Matiur, as a grade-1 NBR official, had a basic monthly salary of Tk 78,000.

The Anti-Corruption Commission launched an investigation into the sources of Matiur and his family members' wealth.

In early July, a Dhaka court ordered confiscation of all moveable and immovable properties owned by him and his family members on charges of corruption, involvement in insider trading, and making money through the purchase of shares through private placement.

His involvement in the stock market raised questions since he was a tax collector.

An analysis of his and his family's shareholding in at least 15 publicly listed companies early last month showed that the top official and his family held 9.8 crore shares and the market value as of last month was Tk 174 crore.

On June 24, a Dhaka court issued a travel ban on Matiur and his family members.

Contacted yesterday, Matiur said he sought voluntary retirement because of the trial.

"I have never indulged in corruption in my workplace. Rather, I faced harassment and opposition from vested quarters when I tried to carry out automation of customs processes," he added.

Social media curbs lifted

To further his point, Palak said that pro-Palestine and anti-Israel posts are blocked by social media platforms.

From July 16 to 18, Facebook honoured only 13 percent of the government's requests to remove content on its platform, Palak said.

Social media platforms restrict posts related to the Awami League, Bangabandhu, liberation and Sheikh Hasina, he said.

He asked Meta if its community standards allow running a Facebook page in the name of former Prime Minister Khaleda Zia, who is currently incarcerated.

YouTube honoured 21 percent of the government's request for taking down posts from July 17 to 26, while TikTok acted on 68 percent of the requests, Palak added.

Although all cache servers were opened from 2pm to allow all social media platforms, it would take another 24 to 48 hours for full-fledged service to resume, said Md Emdadul Hoque, president of Internet Service Providers Association of Bangladesh.

The mobile operators also received instructions to remove the restrictions on social media.

After the lifting of the restrictions on social media, users said the internet speed has improved but hasn't returned to previous levels.

"I congratulated them when they were introduced as Silver medallists," Lim told Korean media after the award ceremony.

When asked if they saw the South Korean pair as their rivals, Kim and Ri both shook their heads.

South Korean broadcasters have repeatedly run videos of the selfie, with many commentators reflecting on the significance of a rare moment of unity.

"This is the true spirit of the Olympics," one commentator said.

Only fair justice can restore order

Govt must allow independent probe into deaths of protesters

Try as it may, the government can no longer circumvent critical questions about the role of security forces and ruling party cadres in the deaths of protesters. Five trends that have emerged from the law enforcement measures taken in response to the violent events of July 18-21 are blaming the violence squarely on BNP-Jamaat (without evidence); mass arrests, often through block raids; gross violation of Supreme Court guidelines for arrests and remand; making destruction of public properties—rather than the deaths—a central focus of investigation; and suppression of student organisers and protesters through various tactics. All this has reaffirmed doubts about the government's sincerity to ensure justice for the horrific tragedy that befell our nation.

Against this backdrop, the prime minister's statement on Wednesday about seeking cooperation from the United Nations and other international organisations to conduct a "fair and proper investigation" into the nationwide violence offers a ray of hope. This comes after repeated calls for credible investigations into the deaths. Even the UN and the European Union also demanded a thorough and impartial probe. The PM, we may recall, earlier said the government would seek "foreign technical assistance" for the judicial inquiry committee. It has already indicated that the commission—initially tasked with investigating only the six deaths of July 16—can now probe all the killings that have since occurred.

Where does it all leave us? We have no details yet about the extent of any possible UN involvement in the process or how it will sit with the ongoing investigations by police. But we have to be reasonable about our expectations. With the entire law enforcement machine keyed to political manoeuvres, how much help the judicial commission or any team headed by the UN will have from relevant state departments in, say, collecting or verifying evidence remains to be seen.

As things stand, there is a huge gap between what's being said or sought publicly and what's being done on the ground. Leave aside the widespread panic caused by arresting nearly 11,000 individuals, including many students, over the last 13 days. Even while the PM made her UN probe call, there were reports from different parts of the country about security forces violently disrupting the protesters' "March for Justice" by charging batons and using other heavy-handed tactics. Many protesters were held, many injured. Clearly, protesters continue to be targeted as they were before. Now consider the fact that no legal steps have been taken against any member of the security forces involved in the killings. The disparity couldn't be more obvious, indicating that the government is still in denial, and without a complete turnaround in current practices, justice may continue to elude us.

To this day, the number of people who died varies widely—at least 163 as per by this daily, 150 as per the government, 211 as per Prothom Alo, 266 as per the student platform. The actual number could be much higher. So many deaths cannot go unaddressed or unpunished. The government must realise that nothing short of a fair investigation into its own forces—who shot indiscriminately at the protesters, aided by party cadres—will restore public order or give credibility to its efforts. Any investigation also must delve into how the conflicts became so violent in the first place, and lead to accountability for those truly responsible. The government should also stop harassing the protesters and ordinary citizens immediately.

Stop the downward economic spiral

Fresh sovereign rating downgrade shows much remains to be done

S&P Global's downgrading of Bangladesh's long-term sovereign rating from BB- to B+ is but another indication that while the nation's focus has been trained on ensuring justice for the lives lost in recent violence, the economy continues to take a hit because of the government's failure to resolve this crisis. Following the unrest that resulted in the death of so many individuals, a five-day complete internet blackout, and subsequent curfew imposition, many economic sectors have struggled to bounce back even after the situation has become less tense. The lack of internet connectivity has particularly hurt IT and business-processing outsourcing firms and export-oriented industries. Even the S&P, alongside citing persistent pressure on Bangladesh's external metrics, particularly the decline in foreign exchange reserves, also mentioned in its report how the government is grappling with widespread protests, and that the "highly concentrated political environment" may undermine the predictability of future policy responses.

The S&P downgrade is significant as it may erode confidence in our economy among investors and businesses, and could directly affect Bangladesh's foreign direct investment (FDI) prospects. It may also result in interest rates for foreign loans rising. This means that the economy faces a double whammy as it tries to stay on the path to recovery from a 9.7 percent inflation and a 35 percent reduction of foreign exchange reserves over two years. This path has been beset by problems predating the recent unrest.

For example, on the back of a statistical mismatch of export data between two major sources, Bangladesh Bank published revised figures in early July, and the S&P report mentioned that exports have declined 5.9 percent in FY24. While remittance inflow grew by 10.7 percent in the same period, the most recent data from the central bank shows that remittance inflow in the first 28 days of July was 16 percent lower compared to the full month of July a year ago, and 35 percent lower compared to June this year. Recent events have but exacerbated all these longstanding issues, highlighting once again that the economy is structurally unprepared for instability.

One may recall that Moody's previously downgraded Bangladesh's sovereign credit rating in May 2023, citing heightened external vulnerability and persistent liquidity risks, as well as institutional weaknesses. Another global credit rating agency has now downgraded Bangladesh a year on, which indicates that the authorities have failed to take lessons from the previous setback. As things stand, any economic recovery cannot be even started without first resolving the ongoing crisis through ensuring justice for those killed in the protests. So the authorities must take the latest rating downgrade with the seriousness that it deserves.

What does our labour market look like for educated youth?

Dr Sayema Haque Bidisha

SAYEMA HAQUE BIDISHA

The student movement for the reformation of the quota system in government jobs highlights the importance and urgency of re-evaluating the current labour market scenario in Bangladesh. The reason behind the educated youth's overwhelming preference for public sector jobs, particularly those in Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS), must be understood in a greater detail and also through a critical lens of youth unemployment.

BCS aspirants queue up in front of the central library of Dhaka University, waiting to get in to study for the exam.

In this context, we should also keep in mind that Bangladesh is going through a demographic transition with the youth (15-29 years old) constituting 36.7 percent of the total labour force (LFS 2022). However, according to the Labour Force Survey (LFS) 2022 data, the rate of unemployment among the youth (eight percent) is much higher than the national average (3.53 percent). Among the unemployed (reported to be unemployed for more than two years), as many as 14.7 percent are also found to have received tertiary education. This poll of educated unemployed is certainly a serious concern for the country's labour market. Besides, as many as 22 percent of the youth are found to be NEET (not in employment, education and training), with the male NEET being 16.2 percent and the female NEET being as high as 27.1 percent. With such a large proportion of our youth not being in the mainstream labour market activities and another significant proportion being unemployed, one of the most crucial challenges of Bangladesh's labour market is to effectively utilise our favourable demographic profile.

> Our educational institutions, starting from the primary level, do not offer such skills with due importance and, as a result, a large mass of the youth population, especially those from the rural areas and underprivileged backgrounds, seriously lack such skills in most of the cases. In addition, skill mismatch due to poor academia-industry linkage is also partly responsible for shrinking the domain of private sector employment for graduates.

However, from the demand-side point of view, if we explore the employment opportunities for the educated youth in particular (those with tertiary level of education), for the salary-based employment, there are basically two broad streams: public sector jobs and private sector employment. In addition, there is a separate stream comprising different self-employment activities, including entrepreneurial activities, freelance work, and digital platform economy-based jobs. Although all such jobs require a common set of eligibility in terms of education and skills, it is obvious that each of these categories requires different skill sets of its own. In this context, high-skilled private sector employment in most cases requires strong interpersonal communication skills both in the native language as well as in English, along with computing and data management skills and teamwork in many cases.

Our educational institutions, starting from the primary level, do not offer such skills with due importance and, as a result, a large mass of the youth population, especially those from the rural areas and underprivileged backgrounds, seriously lack such skills in most of the cases. In addition, skill mismatch due to poor academia-industry linkage is also partly responsible for shrinking the domain of private sector employment for graduates. Therefore, it can be argued that a "push factor" is working for a significant mass of educated youth searching for high-skilled jobs with decent salary and benefit structure. In addition, there are also complaints and accusations of nepotism and favouritism, which discourage the young people coming from underprivileged backgrounds to compete for them.

On the other hand, we can say that there is a "pull factor" for public sector jobs and it is not only due to the reasonably decent salary and benefits, but also for the stability and job security associated with employment in the public sector. In addition, public sector employment is traditionally considered prestigious, with high possibilities for climbing up the occupational ladder, and is also seen as a source of power and social status. It is therefore not surprising that a young graduate will consider public sector jobs, especially the BCS cadre ones, as the most desirable.

It is not only in the context of salary-based employment but also for different self-employment ventures that there exist several challenges, all of which again "pushes away" the potential young graduates from such ventures. On the one hand, there are challenges in the context of availability of credit, market access, and required infrastructural support, while on the other hand, there are limited policy support and strategic directions for those who want to build and progress their career with their own efforts. A relevant question in this context is whether we actually need so many graduates or not, and whether we should put greater emphasis on specialised short courses, diplomas and technical and vocational education and training (TVET)-based employment instead. However, to attract more young people to TVET-based education and employment, we need to deal with the social stigma attached to it, and at the same time we must work on modernising the training programmes.

The government also needs to re-evaluate the overall labour market scenario for the youth and take necessary steps to broaden the horizon of their employability. In this regard, greater collaborative efforts of industry and academia are required to deal with the issue of skill mismatch and due emphasis should be given to develop soft skills of students through a wide range of initiatives. In this connection, the importance of quality education focusing on basic language, analytical and computing skills, especially at the primary level, cannot be overemphasised.

Finally, with a view to facilitate the entrepreneurial activities of the young graduates, availability of cheaper sources of credit, market linkages, suitable digital infrastructure, budgetary incentives, etc must be ensured, and a favourable ecosystem for the graduates seeking self-employment activities must be built.

In the aftermath of violence

"Are you okay?"

Friends, family and relatives from abroad all share the same concern. They keep asking while I keep reassuring them that I am okay, at least physically. That was more than enough to be grateful about, I explain. These days, they ask more questions, difficult ones, and one of these questions keeps ringing in my head.

One of my school friends from Delhi asked how I felt and I had no answer to that.

In my mind, I kept rewinding time to figure out when was the last time I really felt something. I tried very hard to remember the last thing I felt. Was it the annoyance of traffic jams caused by the quota protests? Or the deep-seated shame of being unable to empathise with the plight of my peers? Perhaps it was the shock of witnessing violence unfold on my own campus, or the momentary relief of our halls being freed from student politics. Maybe it was the anger at a system that demanded martyrdom before acknowledging legitimate grievances, or the frustration of being unable to stand in solidarity with the protesters, and the sorrow of scrolling through countless obituaries on social media? Was it the fear of becoming another victim, or the pride of belonging to a generation that had etched its name in history?

I do not know. The truth is I have been feeling so much and so little at the same time. There are things I feel a little more these days, like helplessness and vulnerability. And then there are things I no longer feel, like sleep and hunger. I spend hours on social media seeking updates and then regret being so adamant. The desire to stay informed is matched by an equal desire to escape the relentless barrage of distressing news. I cannot sleep in the comfort of my own home knowing what my peers are going through. Their dialogues haunt me as nightmares, pulling me out of a slumber of despair. I keep thinking how the list gets longer every day and how I can no longer keep up with remembering their names. I realise that the victims have formed a closer circle around me, from strangers to people I know. How do I label this feeling that seems to be strangling me every day, embracing me in a cloud of remorse and contempt?

So, as I refresh my news feed for the hundredth time, I realise another day has passed and I still do not have the answer to their question. There is nothing much I do these days, except for sharing these stories and saying a silent prayer. The weight of grief is suffocating, and I cannot imagine how long I can endure it. I carry the burden of shared loss because this is where I belong. I do not remember the last time I felt like this, all of it seems very new. It started with an excruciating pain which has now given way to numbness. My tears have dried up and are replaced by a sense of emptiness. I feel hollow if that is something you could feel, and I know that it is here to stay for a while.

All this while I realised that we are capable of feeling way more than our hearts can contain. Yet, amidst the despair, a flicker of hope remains. This makes me feel strong and alive when everything else is falling apart. It is a testament to the resilience of the human spirit, a force that united thousands of us in the face of adversity. This hope, fragile though it may be, is the only anchor in the storm. No matter what lies ahead, I want this hope to persist. It is probably the only feeling that makes sense right now.

Enough!

Dr Mohammad Shamsuzzaman
is associate professor at the Department of English and Modern Languages in North South University (NSU).

MOHAMMAD SHAMSUZZAMAN

Police patrol. Paramilitary fly and fire. Army amble amid curfew. Smokes lick the sky. Shrieks and screams can be heard from many places. A slow-motion mayhem is all set. The horror unleashes. They cry. They sigh. They die. Clashes and confrontations renew. Bullets still pierce. Blood still drips. Bodies still drop. The atmosphere is spooky.

This is not a scene from a horror movie. This is what unfurled in Bangladesh during the third week of July. We are jinxed since. A part of the whole state apparatus appears to be up against its student populations. They are brutally killed and fatally wounded. No one knows exactly how many students have already perished. Victims, including civilians, are legion. As of July 30, The Daily Star confirmed 163 deaths. No student movement has been attempted to be quelled by any government since our independence in 1971 that costs so many lives. This is perplexing, paralysing!

Shockingly, a disconnected voice reminds us that the government has deployed only five percent of its power to deal with the defectors, who are the agents of anarchy. They (read: the government) don't own up to the terrible mess that the country is now. They look for scapegoats. They swagger around like saints and angels, whose failure is someone else's fault. Whatever they did, and do, bolsters democracy and fosters development. Rigged elections don't bother them. A muzzled press doesn't embarrass them. Epic corruption charges against government officials seem to them infractions of a slapstick proportion. They ignore. Consequently, the potential for crime, corruption, and discrimination metastasises. People feel divided and vulnerable. They yet stand no criticism. When they encounter a conflict with their beliefs, values, and vision, they become confrontational and condescending. They trot out labels for othering. One of the common labels they almost religiously drizzle is Razakar—the traitor. This time around, the label fell on the wrong ears, and exploded agitations nationwide.

And that's how we've reached where we stand now. Students from universities across the country were protesting against the quota system in civil service. On July 21, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court ordered that 93 percent of jobs in civil service will be merit-based. Case closed!

If it were! The country simmers in anger and uncertainty, for, in the meantime, what the government did went against every rule. Patience and negotiations were not their currencies of reconciliation. They threatened repression. They lauded the muscle power of their student wing. Nothing seemed enough to deflect the students from their demands. The government pulled the levers of power immediately. Police swung into action. They appeared exhausted. Paramilitary chipped in. The chaos confounded. The army took over the streets. Curfew continues. Helicopters whir. Guns roar. Sound grenades blast. Whoever lives here, as it seems, lives by luck. Many are not lucky enough against guns and goons. Death sneaks around for anyone, everyone. Why did the government pit itself against its student populations when some of them are not voters yet and most of them are disinterested in politics? They are off to the wrong genies. Students mustn't have been the excuse for the government to lock everyone down in their houses.

The government proceeded from the assumption that they would weather the crisis and would come out strong, as they did in the past with protests and movements. Their tactics and rhetoric seemed tested. They appeared invincible. Abu Sayed, a student of Begum Rokeya University in Rangpur, punctured their aura of invincibility. Abu Sayed was killed live on July 16. He stood open-air with a stick in his hand, pretending to dodge a fusillade of rubber bullets. The bullets hit hard. He collapsed to the ground. He bled profusely and lost consciousness before he perished on his way to the hospital. The nation witnessed how state-sponsored violence crushed innocence and courage to maintain its grip on power. People panicked. Anger intensified. The protests were no longer confined to public universities. Students from private universities, colleges, and schools joined. The whole country seemed implicated. The country that emerged subsequently was not the country we thought we knew.

Why did the students have to protest to compete for government jobs on the basis of merit? Jobs are one of the primal needs that a functional country ensures to its citizens. While the country is awash in rhetoric of development, the unemployment rate is still staggeringly high in Bangladesh. Jobs here mean government jobs, given the perks and privileges attached to them. Approximately 400,000 candidates apply for 3,000 positions in the civil service in Bangladesh each year. Such a system also contributes to causing discrimination in social, economic, and political structures by disrupting equilibrium. Students realised that, as did everyone. When, however, the government realised it, it was already too late. The country already paid " such a heavy price," when it finally acquiesced to the students' demand, as Sushmita S Preetha, in her pitch "Did we have to pay such a heavy price for this verdict?" in The Daily Star, claims. It's a sobering time for the country now.

I have never felt so helpless and useless thus far in my life. I wonder what it means to be a teacher in the face of such a crisis. The more I commit to my country, the more I feel connected to my students. I'm deeply invested in helping them forge their future so that the country marches forward. Now that they are on the streets and their lives are endangered, grief and guilt consume me. During the protests, we saw authority without leadership from the merchants of dreams. Whose dream was that nightmare? They used such a big knife to cut such a small political cake. I wish they were more patriotic and political. Their hubris was puzzling!

That upsets me. The country hangs on a cliff to go further south. Every infrastructure totalled, every life perished, and every drop of blood spilt are provocations for further division and destruction. A sledgehammer approach to turning the country on the right track is apparently a recipe for disaster. When Bangladesh bleeds, no one scores any political point, however lofty their political ideologies are. The student movement demonstrates that we lose as a nation when we fight for political space and prestige amid traumas and tragedies. I apprehend times of dread ahead. Toni Morrison claims, referring to her friend, in her essay, "No Place for Self-Pity, No Room for Fear," that this is precisely the time for artists to go to work. Teaching is the art of cultivating wisdom and ethics. Being a teacher, I'm an artist. With prayers and tears, as I resolve to resume my work, I implore everyone to stop bleeding Bangladesh.

It's already ENOUGH!

NETANYAHU'S SPEECH

Congress applauds and AIPAC pays

Yousef SY Ramadan
is the ambassador of Palestine to Bangladesh.

YOUSEF SY RAMADAN

There are big differences between Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's first three Congress speeches and the fourth one that he recently delivered as his war on Gaza approaches its 10th month.

The first difference appeared in the Israeli public sentiment, where Netanyahu transformed from a crowned king whose rivals could not undermine his monopoly, to a problematic figure who convinced the majority of the Israeli public to demand the downfall of his failed administration for the longest war fought by Israel since its establishment.

As for the United States itself, Netanyahu turned from an active, effective and beloved leader who united the superpower behind his leadership, to an active and effective element in provoking a division within the US political and partisan class and dispelling the consensus on the Gaza war. This political division was evident by the empty seats of 120 Democratic Congress members who objected to his mere invitation. Outside Congress, the flag of Palestine rose high, with protesters denouncing Netanyahu and his genocide, calling on the US administration to stop its political and financial support for the war, a scene reminiscent of the strong popular uprisings against the Vietnam War in the last century.

Netanyahu came to his loyal Congress, but this time he arrived wounded and bleeding, stirred by the million demonstrations against his leadership before and during the Gaza war, and by fierce demands for a cessation of the war.

He arrived with mountains of corruption cases on his shoulders. Had it not been for the war, he would have been sent to prison long ago. On top of that, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) has provided an explicit and decisive condemnation of Israel's occupation and illegal settlements, along with its systematic exploitation of the Palestinian people and their inalienable human, historical and political rights. This is in addition to the International Criminal Court (ICC), which convicted him as a war criminal and is now awaiting his prosecution and punishment.

His fourth speech was arranged behind the backs of the Democratic administration to contribute to the undermining of Biden and the success of Trump. The American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) spent a hefty amount to make it the largest demonstration in support of the Republican campaign before President Joe Biden's resounding fall in the crucial debate. Netanyahu was there to deliver the fatal blow to the already weakened president.

During the speech, it was clear that Netanyahu's warm reception was the result of many filled pockets, as is usual for events organised by the AIPAC, and that the applause and standing ovations after every empty sentence were eclipsed by a small sign raised by Rashida Tlaib, with the words "war criminal" on one side and "guilty of genocide" on the other.

The small sign was more honest than the exaggerated applause, simply because it wasn't paid, and because it stood out as a symbol of morality amid a sea of Israeli criminality in front of the world's cameras.

This was a show by Netanyahu—an insult to the US, portraying it as a small Israeli settlement, a vehicle dragged by Zionist horses. Netanyahu explicitly said that Israel is the one who protects the US and not the other way around, and that the American people who demonstrated against the Israeli war of genocide in Gaza are just groups of rogue mercenaries. The calamity is that the representatives of the American people clapped for these insults. Everything is welcome as long as Netanyahu speaks and the AIPAC pays.

Netanyahu knows all this; he is an expert on US politics and its fluctuations, but he does not care about what he knows, especially as he is fighting his last battle.

The US, in this battle, is just a bottomless fuel tank for his authoritarian aspirations. He prepares for the day the Democrats will leave the White House and looks forward to the Republicans and their leader Trump making a comeback, despite his belief that what the Democrats gave him in this war was the most generous of all that was presented to Israel by previous administrations.

Netanyahu, for purely personal reasons, longs for Trump's leadership, who gave him the deal of the century with all its consequences and tragedies, without even checking a word of its details.

This situation will not halt the momentum of popular American progress towards a balance, but it will inevitably benefit Israel and its illegal occupation and settlements. Despite this, Congress and administrations are influenced by considerations of votes and funding, so the American people, who have demonstrated and protested against the war, still have the opportunity to steer towards their goal. Ultimately, it is through the support of the people that battles are won, even those of the Palestinian people.

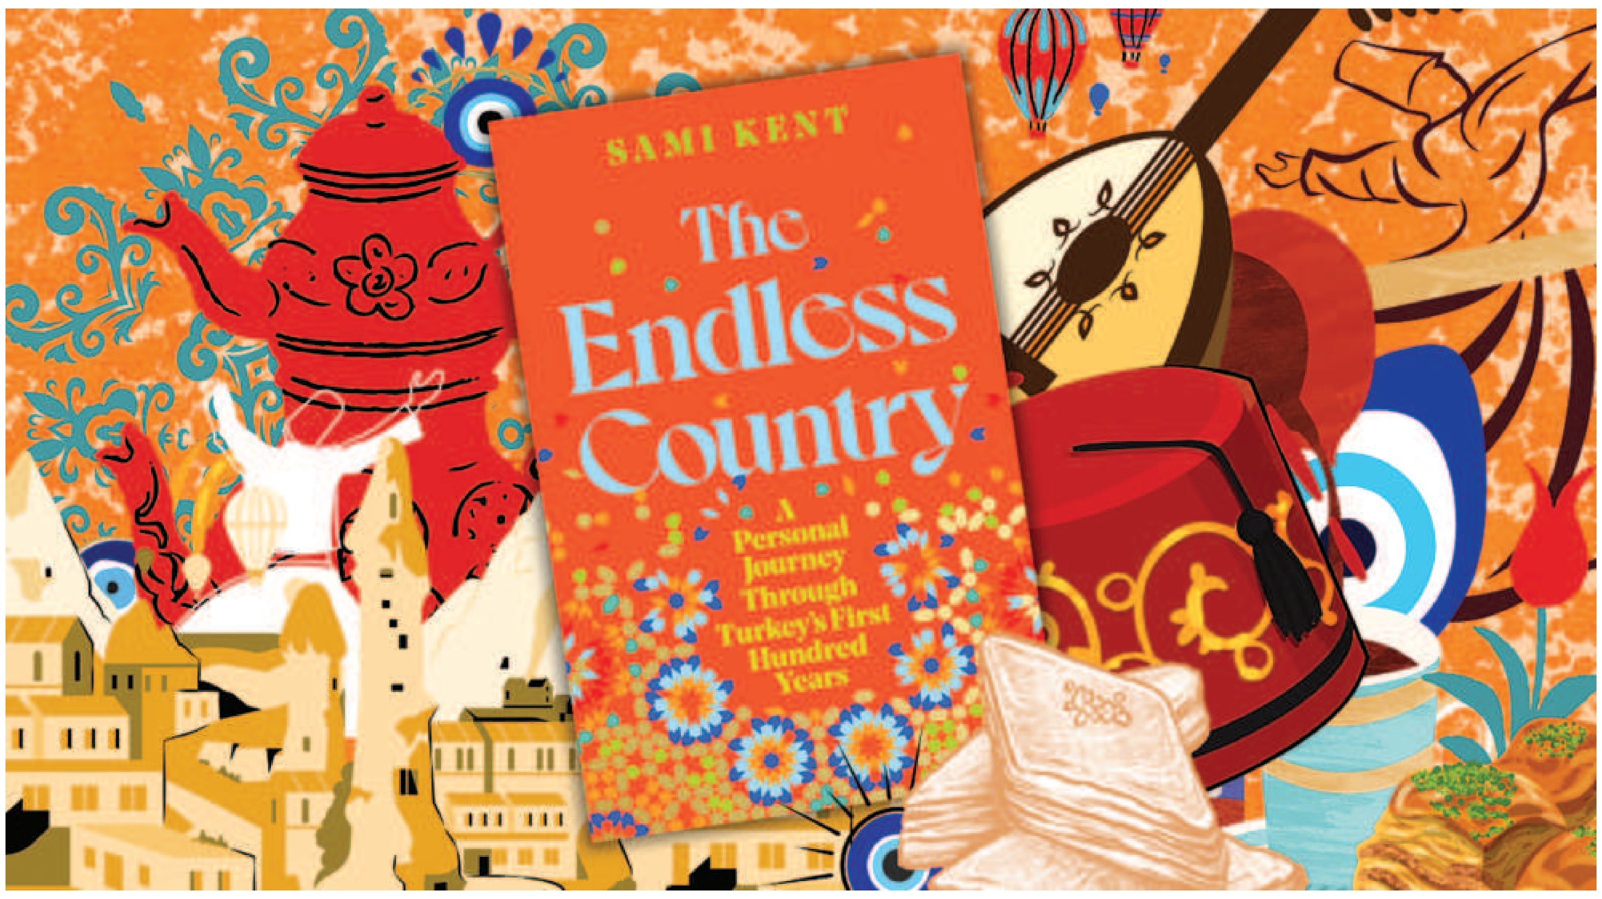
BOOK REVIEW: NONFICTION

Witnessing the Turkish century

Review of 'The Endless Country' (Picador, 2024) by Sami Kent



SAMI KENT
The Endless Country
A Personal Journey Through Turkey's First Hundred Years

ILLUSTRATION: AMREETA LETHE

ISRAR HASAN

In the post-9/11 world, no country's name has been evoked more than Turkey's (or its newly rebranded name of Türkiye) in public discussions by foreign policy pundits and politicians alike, to demonstrate the harmonious symbiosis of the East and West, Islam and secularism, and tradition and modernity. Turkey has been championed as a model that other states in the Middle East, and the broader Muslim world, can emulate. It has been 100 years since the multicultural Ottoman empire was abolished, and Turkey has long been its sole, albeit contested, successor, breaking with its past to create a new "Turkish" identity.

In his book, The Endless Country, Sami Kent, a British journalist of Turkish origin, takes us on a tour of a Turkey seldom known, seen, and heard of. Part-travelogue, part-memoir, and part-history, The Endless Country transverses through the annals of statecraft and culture to demonstrate the major events that have helped shape the country. Kent, the son of a Turkish father, finds himself "betwixt-and-between", never knowing his own culture, and notes how his "Turkishness would be lightly worn."

Over the years, the Turkish model began to assert itself on the world stage, as Erdogan's strongman style leadership steered its course from a heavily top-down secularist form of governance to one espousing conservative, Sunni Islamic values. In the same vein, Turkey has anchored not towards the East or the West, but in itself trying to craft a new beginning. It is between the beginning of the nation-state and its current prognosis that Kent tries to uncover the paradoxes of Turkish society and the state.

Kent avoids the typical reliance on past scholarly studies; instead, he leverages his journalistic acumen to offer a vivid and nuanced portrait of the nation. Through extensive travels across the country, Kent interviews a diverse array of characters: communists, Islamists, bandits, prison guards, political dissidents, and family members. These interviews are not just personal anecdotes, but rather tied to various symbols: headscarves, fezzes, hats, books, ice cream, musical instruments, and languages—each representing different eras and policies of the Turkish state over its century-long history. Kent organises the chapters decade-wise, allowing readers to witness the gradual build-up of modern Turkey. This structure helps in understanding the evolution of Turkish society and politics, balancing moments of hope and despair, and navigating through a quagmire of complex problems.

Turkey's thrust into capitalist modernity involved a top-down approach which wanted to "blow away the Arab winds", and one of the first casualties was the fez, a hat worn by many Turks regardless of religious and political views. The fez, now seen as a "Muslim" hat and inescapably backward, was banned. This was followed by the ban of headscarves, which was uplifted fairly recently in 2013.

In many ways, the modern nation-state of Turkey has largely been synonymous with its spectacular general—the great Mustafa Kemal Atatürk—who moulded Turkey in an image very much unknown to his countrymen: Western, secular, and nationalist—all of which have various contested meanings in Turkish history. The irony is not lost, however, as Kent shows that in order to create a modern state, the founding father of Turkey, Attaturk himself, had transformed the country into a mostly Turkish and almost exclusively (Sunni) Muslim state due to an exodus of non-Muslim minorities. Through his interviews with members of the dwindling Greek and Armenian minorities, and his descriptions of decrepit churches and monasteries, Kent demonstrates the lost cosmopolitanism of Turkey's yesteryears. With conspicuous religious minorities no longer inhabiting the landscape, the focus on religious exclusion is geared towards the Alevis, a Shia Muslim offshoot who have routinely protested for their civil liberties. The formation of "the other" strikes a jarring resemblance to many Muslim majority countries often discriminating Muslim minority sects.

Over the years, the Turkish model began to assert itself on the world stage, as Erdogan's strongman style leadership steered its course from a heavily top-down secularist form of governance to one espousing conservative, Sunni Islamic values. In the same vein, Turkey has anchored not towards the East or the West, but in itself trying to craft a new beginning.

Kent further notes how the volatile cocktail of ethnic and religious tensions have plagued the country with numerous sides claiming victory, but none have been more everlasting than their skirmishes with the Kurds. Thrust into the modes of democracy and the Cold War, Turkey has always struggled with its "Kurdish question" from the 1930s till this day and multiple forms of repression including militarisation, surveillance, and crackdowns on civil societies have taken place. It is particularly in these chapters that Kent shows how the Turkish republic hankers to its past and how, instead of dealing with its demons of the yesteryear, it keeps bringing it to life. It is this modus operandi of the intolerance towards dissent that has led to it jailing the highest number of journalists, and housing Europe's biggest prison, Silivri Prison, earning the moniker "Prison Nation".

The strength of Kent's book lies in his ability to humanise historical, socio-economic, and political narratives. His firsthand accounts and the variety of perspectives he includes offer a rich and textured understanding of Turkey. Marking the pivotal moments in the country's history, from the formation of the Republic to its current malaises, Sami Kent navigates the massive labyrinth of a nation with diverse misfortunes and fortunate happenings.

4 books I was grateful to read this year

SARAH ANJUM BARI

Books are so intrinsically tied to space. A fellow writer from my MFA program recently told me that she's "only buying books [she] actually want[s] to have, not just read." It's true, I feel differently about books that I previously disliked or enjoyed reading and books that I want as a physical presence in my life. A few that fall in the latter category: An author whose voice, craft, or research moves I want to emulate; a book with gorgeous cover art; an edition with an especially insightful preface; or, books on my nightstand that left me, by turns, frustrated, intimidated, laughing, crying, or wrestling with thoughts that fluctuated as I made my way through the text. Some of these books I found through an author, professor, or friend whose taste I trust. Others were related to subjects or texts I'm already drawn to. Reading is never a solitary act; it almost always spins out through such webs of association.

I've come to recognise this as a uniquely different experience from simply liking or disliking a book. Instead, I felt gratitude for specific things about a text—things that I both agreed and enjoyed disagreeing with. Perhaps we all read this way subconsciously—our responses gooey and contradictory, often heightened by emotions. Perhaps we give (social) media rhetoric too much power when we reduce our reading responses to 'good/bad', 'one to five stars', 'would or would not recommend to a friend'.

The Earth Spinner* shares some central concerns with Djinn Patrol, such as a memorable dog, and more importantly the hate born of Hindu-Muslim conflict. Djinn Patrol On The Purple Line
Deepa Anappara
Hamish Hamilton, 2020

Obsessed with the sleuths of Indian television (Byomkesh Bakshi, Karamchand, characters from Crime Patrol), nine-year-old Jai wants to do some "detectiving" into why children are going missing from the Delhi slum he calls home. As with most famous detectives, Jai decides that a skinny street dog he calls Samosa will be his sidekick and key to finding clues. Meanwhile, it's his bookworm friend Pari who gets closest to the truth, asking all the right questions to the missing children's family and neighbours. Their friend, Faiz, believes it is djinns who are abducting their classmates, while the rest of the slum soon begins to blame Muslim families like Faiz's for the crimes.

Deepa Anappara's novel delights in the tropes of mystery noir, with its world feeling familiar to that of Slumdog Millionaire and Katherine Boo's reportage in Behind the Beautiful Forevers. But while both those works brought a western, partially-outsider gaze to the poverty and corruption of slum-life in India, Djinn Patrol is interested in speaking through the minds of its most marginalised characters. The young, the abused, the tortured—a little boy escaping his violent home; his mother who must work through her rich employers' family party while her son is missing; a woman whose abused soul has taken to haunting a traffic signal—these are the characters we get to know intimately.

A crisply choreographed climax does arrive, but the book seems to be about, instead, recentering stories and pushing the reader's perspective not only into political peripheries, but also into the mind of a frustrating, endearing narrator who is too young and mercurial to be reliable. You believe in his passion for solving these crimes, but it's a hard ask to trust him. Mostly, your heart is caught in your throat for the child's safety. It makes for a breathless and heartbreaking reading experience.

The Earth Spinner
Anuradha Roy
Hachette, 2021

Anuradha Roy's writing is graceful and unassuming because it doesn't scream its politics. She tells simple stories that reveal complex social dynamics. Just by sharing their pasts before a reader, her characters gain some semblance of freedom or catharsis from their difficult lives.

The Earth Spinner shares some central concerns with Djinn Patrol, such as a memorable dog, and more importantly the hate born of Hindu-Muslim conflict. But Roy is more interested in showing how art is inextricably tied to politics, and how identity politics itself is such a deeply embedded and problematic part of life in India. Her protagonist, Elango, is a potter whose family has, for generations, devoted itself to the primarily Hindu artform. But Zohra, the woman he loves, belongs to an ancestry of Muslim calligraphy. Roy gives us multiple love stories—Elango and Zohra's, Elango and Chinna's (the dog he befriends from the woods), Chinna and the entire neighbourhood's, and that of Elango and young Sara, his pottery student and the narrator of the book.

The idea of all their unions is manifested in a clay horse that Elango is creating based on a burning horse he sees in his dreams, onto which Zohra's grandfather will etch the Arabic verses of Kabir. Descended from Hindu mythology, the burning, underwater horse denotes apocalypse as well as a balance between fire and water, desire and purity, man and woman. Its physical form in their lives becomes a site on which art and language can shed divisions of caste or religion. A tall promise and a fevered dream, one that crumbles against the harsh reality of communal violence.

Constructing A Nervous System
Margo Jefferson
Pantheon, 2022

Towards the end of a History of the Essay seminar I took last year, we had to create a family tree of essays for ourselves. It brought up the question of how we considered ourselves 'related' to certain pieces of writing—work that forms part of our socio cultural or political history, work that we're literally, familially tied to, writers whose style have informed our own, essays that made us realise what we like, why we want to write, what we don't want to write.

Margo Jefferson, professor of writing at Columbia University and a Pulitzer-winning giant in the world of criticism, takes on a similar project in Constructing A Nervous System. The memoir presents the 'nervous system' of writers, artists, (Jazz) musicians, athletes, and other cultural milestones that have informed Jefferson's mind and heart. But she's writing particularly about engaging with art (as a Black woman) that won't imagine you unless you're white. "Too much of white art requires a negative capability that negates whole parts of one's self", she writes.

It's the way she marries language and form to replicate the concept of a nervous system that blows your mind. Her prose feels sinewy—she's teasing apart and garlanding pieces of culture across time and space, with her own mind as the connecting force. "Temperamental autobiography", she calls it. The effect is like witnessing a mind shaping itself in real time, like watching an animated x-ray.

Archer Sagor faces early elimination

SPORTS REPORTER

Archer Sagor Islam, the only Bangladeshi athlete to qualify directly for the 2024 Olympics, has ended his Paris campaign with a 6-0 set-points defeat against Mauro Nespoli of Italy in the 1/32 elimination round of men's individual recurve event yesterday.

The 18-year-old archer from Bangladesh, who had finished 45th among 64 participants in the ranking round of his event, failed to put up a fight against the three-time Olympic medallist at the Esplanade des Invalides.

Sagor lost the first set by 30-27 points before putting up a bit of a fight in a 27-26 defeat in the second set. However, the teenager from Rajshahi lost the third set by 28-25 points to face an early elimination.

Sagor is the third of five Bangladeshi participants in the Summer Games this year. Earlier, shooter Robiul Islam finished 10m air rifle event with a 43rd finish among 49 contestants while swimmer Samiul Islam Rafi finished 49th among 69 swimmers in 100m freestyle event.

Swimmer Sonia Khatun and sprinter Imranur Rahman are yet to compete.

GOAT Biles is back

AGENCIES

Simone Biles could claim her ninth Olympic medal in today's all-around final two days after leading the United States women to a gymnastics team gold in Paris.

Biles is the big favourite coming into the event after qualifying for the final by a healthy margin, and the drama may centre on the race for silver featuring a Tokyo rematch between defending champion Sunisa Lee of USA and Brazil's Rebeca Andrade.

Lee held off Andrade for gold in the Tokyo all-around final, from which Biles withdrew due to a potentially dangerous mental block known as the "twisties".

The 27-year-old American -- considered the greatest gymnast of all time – appears to be a different person to the one who abruptly pulled out of the Tokyo Games.

"After I finished vault I was relieved because, phew, there were no flashbacks or anything," Biles told a packed press conference after clinching her fifth Olympic gold.

Biles said her second team gold -- eight years after her first -- felt different.

"It was just like we were a little young and naive," she said of 2016. "So it didn't hit the way that it does now.

"Now that I'm much older, we have so much more experience and we're out here really having fun and enjoying what we're doing."

Triumph over adversity: Lind dreams of medal

AFP, Paris

For Danish table-tennis player Anders Lind, just making the Paris Olympics is a triumph over adversity: after breaking two vertebrae in a serious car crash, he feared he would never walk again.

Now the 25-year-old is into an improbable Olympic last 16 and dreaming of a medal.

When doctors x-rayed his spine after the crash in 2021, "they said maybe I'll never walk normally again," Lind told AFP after his win on Wednesday.

"They said maybe I'll have some nerve damage, and that with the bones that broke, there was a 70-80 percent probability that I would be paralysed," he added.

Even if he could walk again, none of the doctors he saw said he would be able to resume top-level sport -- news he said sent him spiralling into depression.

But with the help of a corset and zimmer frame, Lind began the long road to recovery that has taken him to performing in front of a packed Olympic crowd in Paris.

Despite having a metal rod inserted into his back, Lind said he suffers no major physical ill-effects from the accident, although he cannot bend as well as he used to.

Mentally, the near-death experience has given him a sense of perspective.

"If I have a bad match, I can look back and say, 'It's not as bad as it was then'," he said.

His setback has also given him a fierce determination that pulled him through in his last-32 match against Poland's Milosz Redzimski in a game in which he made a number of comebacks to prevail eventually.

A medal after the agonies he has suffered would be sensational, but the shock defeat of world number one Wang Chuqin has blown the draw wide open, he said.

"With the top seed going out, I'm dreaming for a medal. It's still a long shot, and it's very unlikely, but there is a chance, and if the chance comes, I'm going to take it," Lind said.

Back in coaching, Maruful eyes SAFF U-20 final berth

SPORTS REPORTER

Veteran coach Maruful Haque is looking forward to guiding the Bangladesh under-20 football team to the final of the SAFF Under-20 Championship in Nepal later this month as he returns to coaching after a year-long sabbatical.

The former national team head coach, who left Sheikh Jamal Dhanmondi Club early last year and then worked as a technical advisor to Chittagong Abahani last season, has been given the charge of the under-20 team by the Bangladesh Football Federation for the first time.

Talking to The Daily Star after conducting the first training session in Kamalapur yesterday, the successful club coach said he would try to focus on the tactical side of things in the South Asian event, which will take place in Kathmandu from August 18 to 28.

Bangladesh have been pitted against Sri Lanka and Nepal in Group A while Group B features India, Bhutan and Maldives.

"I am getting to know the players personally although I've seen most of them play in the Bangladesh Premier League," Maruful said. "With only around two weeks left for the SAFF Under-20 Championship, it will not be possible to focus on the players' fitness. So I would try to focus mainly on tactical aspects of the players, majority of whom played in the last premier league."

The under-20 team features three players – Mehdi Hasan Srabon, Mojibor Rahman Jony, and Chandon Roy -- with senior national team experience while eight players come from the BFF Academy. The coach feels the team is strong enough to make it to the final.

Bangladesh had played in the final in the last edition as well, eventually losing to hosts India after extra time.

"We were runners-up last time around. So I'm pretty confident we will reach the final this time too," said Maruful, who will also guide the team in the AFC U-20 Asian Cup Qualifiers in Vietnam next month.

Bangladesh will play against hosts Vietnam as well as Syria, Bhutan and Guam in that qualifying campaign, with 10 group winners and five best runners-up teams slated to qualify for the final round.

Maruful feels that he would get more time for that competition, hence he is setting the target high. "We will get more time to prepare for that tournament. Our target will be to qualify for the final round," the coach said. "We always do well at youth level and the teams like Syria and Vietnam are only mid-tier teams in Asia. So we can definitely target the final round."

Taskin on red-ball track, Shakib available

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh are awaiting key returnees to the Test outfit ahead of the Pakistan series in mid-August with ace all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan confirmed as available while pacer Taskin Ahmed, who had decided to sit out Tests owing to injury issues at the beginning of the year, is likely to return to the red-ball format.

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) cricket operations chairman Jalal Yunus addressed the media yesterday at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium and gave updates on players returning from injuries or otherwise.

"He [Shakib] is available [for the Pakistan Tests]. He has talked with me, the board, and also the selectors," Jalal told reporters yesterday.

Shakib, currently playing the Global T20 League in Canada, will either return to the country before the series or join the team directly in Pakistan. Shakib has played in just four Tests in the last two years and questions regarding his availability for the longer format keep resurfacing ahead of any Test series.

"If time is not available then he will move directly from Dubai to join the side [in Pakistan]. Or else, as he has been told, he will join the side in Dhaka and go through one or two days of practice before departure," Jalal added.

Bangladesh will play two Tests in Pakistan on August 21 and September 30. Keeping the series in mind, six national team stars have already been named in the 'A' team's tour of Pakistan -- preceding the national team's Test assignment in Pakistan -- to play the first four-day fixture on August 10.

Meanwhile, Taskin Ahmed began training in Mirpur and also gave a fitness test on Tuesday.

Taskin had issues bowling in red-ball cricket owing to a shoulder injury and had decided to sit out Tests. He played his last Test in June last year although he had continued in other formats, featuring for the Tigers in the T20 World Cup in the USA and the West Indies in June. On Tuesday, he bowled with a red ball during an individual practice session.

Taskin has been given the green light to continue on the trajectory to return to Tests by physios following the assessment but a final call is to be made by BCB chief physician Debashish Chowdhury when he sees the reports.

"Taskin had an assessment yesterday [Tuesday]. He is being considered for red-ball. It will be the selectors' call," Jalal confirmed to the media on Taskin being considered for Pakistan Tests.

Meanwhile, another Test prospect Ebadot Hossain had been sitting on the sidelines since an ACL injury last year in July saw him miss out both the ODI and T20I World Cups.

"Ebadot is recovering. We are in communication with him and he has recovered about 70 percent. Hopefully, he will recover more in the next two months. He is still in rehabilitation," Jalal said.

Social media curbs lifted

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday lifted the restrictions on social media platforms, including Facebook, TikTok and WhatsApp, bringing a sigh of relief to the tens of thousands of F-commerce entrepreneurs.

The development comes after Zunaid Ahmed Palak, the state minister for telecom and ICT, held a meeting with the representatives of the social media platforms yesterday.

While representatives from ByteDance, the parent company of TikTok, were present at the meeting held at the headquarters of the Bangladesh Telecommunication Regulatory Authority, officials of Meta, the parent company of Facebook, WhatsApp and Instagram, joined in virtually from Singapore. YouTube sent an emailed reply.

"We, through the BTRC, enforced some restrictions for a certain period, but we have now withdrawn those -- there are no barriers on Facebook, TikTok and YouTube operating in Bangladesh's cyberspace," Palak said after the meeting.

The restrictions on the platforms were lifted to facilitate the business of e-commerce and F-commerce sites and students who depend on the platforms for their studies.

"Facebook, in the meeting, promised that they will be more cautious in the future. We asked Facebook how the post of Tarique Zia (Rahman), who is a convicted and absconded person, stating 'Hasina's killing force has murdered our sons on the streets' meets its community standards. Which community standards allow such words?"

Olympic spirit trumps cross-border tension

AFP, Seoul

Images of Olympic table tennis players from North Korea and South Korea taking a selfie together on the medal podium in Paris went viral in South Korea yesterday, hailed as a rare show of cross-border unity.

Nuclear-armed North Korea declared the South its principal enemy earlier this year and tensions between the two countries are at one of their highest points in years.

But after South Korea won bronze and North Korea silver in the mixed doubles behind China, South Korea's Lim Jong-hoon took a group photo after the medal ceremony.

North Korea's Ri Jong Sik and Kim Kum Yong, the South's Shin Yu-bin and the victorious Chinese team Wang Chuqin and Sun Yingsha all beamed into Lim's phone, a South Korean-made Samsung.

281 more held over violence centring quota protests

STAR REPORT

Law enforcers arrested at least 281 more people in the capital and elsewhere in the country in 36 hours preceding 6:00pm yesterday amid the nationwide crackdown on alleged saboteurs over the recent violence.

Of them, 205 were held in 31 districts and the rest in the capital, according police and court sources.

The Dhaka Metropolitan Police produced 76 arrestees before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court of Dhaka during the same period. The court sent most of them to jail and placed some of the arrestees on remand.

Several thousand named and several hundred thousand unnamed individuals have been accused in those cases.

The cases were filed, mostly by police, with different police stations over violence, vandalism, arson, illegal gathering, rioting and assaulting law enforcers, said DMP sources.

The country witnessed violence after peaceful demonstrations of the quota reform protesters came under attack by Chhatra League men on July 15 on different university campuses.

Among those arrested in the 31 districts, 19 were held in Pabna, six in Madaripur, eight in Rangpur, three in Feni, 31 in Gazipur, two in Tangail, 18 in Rajshahi, five in Bogura, six in Gaibandha, 16 in Narayanganj, five in Khulna, seven in Mymensingh, two in Kishoreganj, four in Satkhira, three in Cox's Bazar, seven in Naogaon, six in Cumilla, three in Panchagarh, 17 in Chattogram, three in Chandpur, two in Magura, seven in Savar, two in Brahmanbaria, 11 in Noakhali, five in Laxmipur, and two in Barishal and one each was picked up in Thakurgaon, Moulvibazar, Joypurhat, Netrakona and Natore.

CLOSURE OF SCHOOLS, UNIVERSITIES

Academic calendars in total disarray

Most primary schools to open Aug 4

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and
ARAFAT RAHAMAN

The month-long disruption to university education and two-week long closure of schools have led to the cancellation of public and school exams, upsetting academic calendars and hampering the education of crores of students.

The government shut down all schools, colleges and universities on July 16. Activities at public universities, however, have been halted since July 1, when teachers went on work abstention to demand the reinstatement of the previous pension scheme in place of the Prottoy scheme.

Meanwhile, uncertainty hangs heavy on the academic lives of a large number of students as the reopening of secondary schools and universities are yet to be declared.

Yesterday, the primary and mass education ministry said primary schools across the country, apart from the 12 major city corporations – Dhaka North, Dhaka South, Khulna, Chattogram, Rajshahi, Rangpur, Barishal, Cumilla, Sylhet, Narayanganj, Gazipur and Mymensingh -- along with Narsingdi district, will reopen on August 4.

Meanwhile, the situation at universities took a more volatile turn as the students demonstrating for quota reforms are yet to call off their movement, while agitating teachers continue their protest.

Many public university students, especially those from colleges under the National University, said they were already facing session jams and this prolonged closure will only make matters worse.

Prof Muhammad Alamgir, acting chairman of the University Grants Commission (UGC), yesterday told The Daily Star that no decision has yet been taken regarding the reopening of universities.

Investigate allegations of rights violations

2 US senators, 2 UK MPs urge Bangladesh govt

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Two US senators and two UK MPs have called on the Bangladeshi authorities to urgently conduct an independent and impartial investigation into alleged human rights violations.

UK MP Rupa Huq stressed that Bangladesh's probe into the violence has an international element.

In a statement on Tuesday, US Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chair Ben Cardin and Senator Cory Booker also called for respecting the rights of the protesters and working in good faith to address their grievances.

They condemned Bangladeshi security forces for using force and violence against student protesters. "The security forces involved in these horrific acts include a paramilitary unit whose leaders have faced US sanctions over human rights abuses."

The government put the death toll in the violence at 150.

But according to The Daily Star's count, at least 163 people were killed.

The death toll from the violence could be much higher as this newspaper could not reach many hospitals, where dozens of critically injured patients were taken.

Also, many families reportedly collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene, and this newspaper could not contact those families.

Matiur goes on early retirement amid probe

The government granted early retirement to former customs official Matiur Rahman, who was embroiled in allegations of corruption in June.

Over a month ago, the finance ministry transferred him to the Internal Resources Division (IRD) from the Customs, Excise & VAT Appellate Tribunal of which he was the president.

The government also removed Matiur from the position of director of state-run Sonali Bank PLC in June amid allegations over his illegal wealth.

Matiur applied for voluntary retirement on completion of his 25 years in service, said an IRD order yesterday.

The application was granted, and he will go on voluntary retirement without financial benefits on August 28.

Imran offers conditional talks with Pak military

REUTERS, Islamabad

Pakistan's former prime minister Imran Khan has offered to hold "conditional negotiations" with the powerful military as he serves a year into a jail term that he said he was given on trumped up charges designed to keep him out of power.

Khan did not specify what he wanted to discuss with the military, but in a post on his official X account yesterday said that one of the conditions for negotiations was that "clean and transparent" elections be held and that "bogus" cases against his supporters be dropped.

He said he had appointed Mahmood Khan Achakzai, a close political ally and a known critic of the military, to represent him in any talks. The military has previously ruled out talks with Khan.

Female sharks make babies alone in Italy

AFP, Rome

Italian researchers have noted the first case of "virgin birth", or reproduction without fertilisation, in an endangered shark species, a scientific journal reported this week.

The findings published in Scientific Reports concern the first case of the phenomenon in the common smooth-hound shark, Mustelus mustelus, a species threatened by illegal fishing that inhabits the Mediterranean and other warm waters.

Researchers from the Experimental Zooprophylactic Institute of Piedmont, Liguria and the Aosta Valley found that two female M mustelus sharks under observation in captivity had exhibited parthenogenesis -- in which a female can reproduce asexually without the need of sperm to fertilise the egg -- each year since 2020.

The two 18-year-old sharks have been at the Cala Gonone Aquarium in Sardinia since 2010.

Jamaat-Shibir BANNED

Govt issues gazette citing Anti-Terrorism Act, says it has evidence of the party's 'involvement' in recent violence

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The government yesterday banned Jamaat-e-Islami and all its front organisations and entities, including Islami Chhatra Shibir.

After the law ministry's approval, the home ministry yesterday issued a gazette notification banning the anti-Liberation party and all its associate outfits.

The gazette came into effect immediately, meaning Jamaat and its front organisations are now not allowed to be in politics.

The ban came three days after a meeting of the Awami League-led 14-party alliance, with Prime Minister and AL chief Sheikh Hasina in the chair, unanimously recommended banning Jamaat-Shibir for their alleged involvement in anti-state activities.

According to yesterday's gazette, the government took the decision as per section 18 (1) of the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009 and listed it as a banned entity under the second schedule of the act.

The gazette came into effect immediately, meaning Jamaat and its front organisations are not allowed to be in politics now.

The section reads: "For the purposes of this act, the government, on reasonable grounds that a person or an entity is involved in terrorist activities, may, by order, enlist the person in the schedule or proscribe the entity and enlist it in the schedule."

The notification said the government has enough evidence that Jamaat and Chhatra Shibir were directly involved in the recent killings, and destructive and terrorist activities and had also incited them.

The International Crimes Tribunal in several verdicts held Jamaat and Chhatra Shibir (previously known as Islami Chhatra Sangha) liable for committing genocide, war crimes, and crimes against humanity during the Liberation War in 1971.

The notification mentioned the verdicts the International Crimes Tribunal-1 delivered in the case against former Jamaat ameer Ghulam Azam and also the ones International Crimes Tribunal-2 delivered in the cases against Jamaat leaders Abdul Quader Mollah and Muhammad Kamaruzzaman.

Five top leaders of Jamaat were sentenced to death for their crimes against humanity committed during the Liberation War.

UN free to probe any incident of violence: PM

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday said the United Nations and any country can send their experts to Bangladesh for proper investigations into the recent incidents of violence.

"I want all incidents to be investigated because it should be found out what was behind those incidents and how those happened. I have appealed to the United Nations to send their experts. If any other country wants, they can send their experts also," she said.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk has offered to deploy an independent fact-finding team to assist the Bangladesh government in building trust among all stakeholders and to help de-escalate tensions.

"In these challenging times, my office is ready to support your efforts in resolving the current crisis," he said in a letter to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on July 23.

Violent clashes centring the students' protest led to the killing of at least 201 people, as per The Daily Star count. Also, authorities arrested nearly 11,000 people across the country.

6 organisers freed from DB custody

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The six organisers of the quota reform protests who had been in the Detective Branch custody were released yesterday afternoon.

Badrul Islam, father of organiser Nahid Islam, confirmed their release to this newspaper, saying his son and the five others were freed around 1:30pm.

"I am taking my son home now ... I got a call early in the morning today from the DB office, and they asked me to come and pick him up,"he said.

Protesters will hold programmes, including mass processions and prayers at mosques, temples, churches for those killed, today.

A photojournalist from The Daily Star, who was at the spot, saw the students coming out of the DB office on the capital's Minto Road and get into a black microbus.

Three of the key protest organisers -- Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud and Abu Baker Majumder -- were picked up from the Gonoshasthaya Nagar Hospital in Dhaka on July 26.

Nahid and Asif were undergoing medical treatment there while Baker was with them.

The next evening, DB picked up Sarjis Alam and Hasnat Abdullah.

Then on early July 28, the law enforcers picked up Nusrat Tabassum from her relative's home in the capital's Mirpur.

The six coordinators have since then been kept at the DB office. Detectives claimed that the students were kept in

The government will provide legal support to the HSC examinees who have been arrested in connection with the recent violence centring the quota protests.

They will receive assistance in securing bail if they apply with their admit cards and relevant documents, said a press release from the home ministry, signed by Sharif Mahmud Apu, a senior officer at the ministry.

The government will also provide legal assistance to the detained students who do not face serious charges, according to the release.

In 2013, the HC declared Jamaat's registration with the EC illegal

In 2018, EC scrapped Jamaat's registration, rendering it ineligible to take part in polls

In 2023, the SC upheld the HC verdict

In 2024, Jamaat and its associate bodies are banned

In August 2013, the gazette said, the High Court declared the registration of Jamaat with the Election Commission illegal. The Supreme Court later upheld the HC verdict.

Justice seekers and war crimes victims and their family members have long been demanding the trial of Jamaat as a party. Their voices grew louder after February 5, 2013, when people occupied Shahbagh demanding highest punishment for war criminals and a ban on Jamaat-Shibir.

The investigation agency of the tribunal recommended that charges be pressed against Jamaat after concluding a probe into Jamaat's role in 1971.

Law Minister Anisul Huq on many occasions had said that the government would amend the International Crimes (tribunals) Act-1973 to try parties, but the act was neither amended nor the charges were pressed.

The issue of banning Jamaat came up again after the government blamed Jamaat-Shibir men for the recent violence centring the quota reform protests.

Shyamoli Nasreen Chowdhury, president of Ekattorer Ghatak Dalal Nirmul Committee, said, "With the banning of Jamaat, we are relieved of the curse. We are satisfied with the decision."

She, however, demanded confiscation of all properties belonging to Jamaat and its associate bodies.

"Measures should also be taken so that Jamaat cannot emerge in politics again under a new banner," she said.

Shyamoli, widow of Shaheed Alim Chowdhury, said they have long been demanding trial and ban of Jamaat for committing crimes in 1971.

"Jamaat even came to power and carried out terrorist activities. We are happy as they [Jamaat] are finally banned," said the eminent teacher who testified in a war crime trial.

Prof Anu Muhammad, a former teacher at Jahangirnagar University, said the issue of banning Jamaat-Shibir has been discussed for a long time.

"But the government has banned Jamaat-Shibir to gain political mileage at a time when a massive movement is going on in the country," he said.

JAMAAT'S RESPONSE

Hours after issuance of the gazette, Jamaat Ameer Shafiqur Rahman in a statement said, "We strongly condemn and protest this unconstitutional, undemocratic and unjust decision of the government."

The constitution gives all citizens the right to assemble and organise. The government has violated the constitution by banning Jamaat and Chhatra Shibir, he said.

"The government wants to divert the ongoing movement by banning Jamaat and Chhatra Shibir through an executive order to cover up their misdeeds.

"However, they may try to increase their efforts to blame Jamaat by creating some untoward incidents. The countrymen should be careful in this regard," he added.

BNP'S RESPONSE

The BNP yesterday said it was unfair and unconstitutional to ban any political party without a justifiable, credible, acceptable, and impartial investigation of international standards.

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir in a statement sent to the media last night said, "The right to form a political party or organisation is enshrined in the constitution of Bangladesh. With this constitutional right, anyone can form a political party or organisation."

It also said with these undemocratic activities, the government would not be able to divert people's attention from the BNP's one-point demand, resignation of the government.

"We call upon all those who believe in democracy, irrespective of party affiliations and opinions, to intensify the movement to topple the government," the statement read.

It also noted the "Awami League's past affinity with Jamaat". "They were once allies. During the all-party mass movement against autocracy in the 1980s, the Awami League, along with Jamaat-e-Islami, undermined the movement and participated in an election to legitimise autocracy," it said.

The then leaders of Jamaat met Hasina at her Dhanmondi-32 home and presented her a Quran and jainamaz, it said, adding that many remember the smiling pictures of the leaders of both parties exchanging gifts.

ICT VERDICTS

The ICT-1 in the verdict against Ghulam Azam observed, "... Jamaat-e-Islami, as a political party under the leadership of accused Prof Ghulam Azam, intentionally functioned as a criminal organisation especially during the War of Liberation of Bangladesh in 1971."

The Tribunal-2 in the verdict against Kamaruzzaman observed, "Jamaat-e-Islami had played a substantial role in the formation of the Al-Badr, Razakar, Al-Shams and peace committees [during the war].

"Jamaat had indulged in indiscriminate massacre of their political opponents belonging to the Bangalee nation in the name of liquidating 'miscreants' and 'infiltrators' for which it had used Razakars and Al-Badr."

UN offers to send fact-finding team

Till Sunday, this newspaper was able to confirm 163 deaths.

Since then, The Daily Star has confirmed 38 more deaths that occurred during the violence.

This number could go up even higher as this newspaper could not get confirmation from different hospitals where dozens of critically injured victims were taken for treatment.

The reports of violence against its citizens advocating for fundamental rights have serious implications not only domestically and in terms of Bangladesh's human rights obligations, but also for its international standing, Turk said.

"As one of the largest contributors to the United Nations peacekeeping missions, Bangladesh has consistently been steadfast supporter of global peace and security. However, the use of excessive force, arbitrary arrests and tortures reported during the protests raise serious concern."

He also spoke about the use of bullets, arbitrary arrests, detention, ill-treatment and torture by the law enforcers and violent attacks by groups reportedly affiliated with the government.

The deployment of paramilitary units, such as the armoured police force, Border Guard Bangladesh and the Rapid Action Battalion, poses further risks, he said, adding that he is aware of arrests of the opposition figures.

The Supreme Court ruling narrowing the quota may open a space for meaningful and inclusive dialogue with all relevant national stakeholders to address the underlying issues and grievances.

For a conducive environment for public dialogue, the UN has urged the government to ensure that all operations of the law enforcers are in line with human rights international standards.

An impartial, independent and transparent investigation into all alleged human rights violations is essential to ensure accountability and justice for victims of past violations and to contribute to preventing recurrence, Turk said.

For the longer term, he suggested comprehensive reforms to the security sector to prevent future abuses and safeguard the rights to freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and association.

He welcomed an opportunity to discuss with Prime Minister Hasina directly, either through a telephone call or on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in New York in September.

In response to Turk's letter, Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen said he appreciates the concerns of the UN high commissioner for human rights, but noted that the briefs Turk received about the recent events appeared to have conflated a number of facts and issues.

The students' protest initially was peaceful, but turned violent as the "third forces" comprising BNP-Jamaat and extremist forces eventually infiltrated the movement, Momen said.

The situation was exacerbated to the extent that some lives were lost and certain egregious brutalities occurred under the cover of the students' movement, Momen said. Besides, huge public properties were also destroyed by the opposing political and extremist forces.

As part of the ongoing law and order drive, a number of suspected individuals including opposition political figures across the country have been arrested and taken into custody, Momen said.

However, the government has assured those involved in attacks would be brought to justice through due process of law.

"Regrettably, the overall investigation process has been made somewhat challenging due to the wide circulation of rumours and disinformation at home and abroad," Momen said.

He went on to request Turk's office to refrain from making any conclusive statements that may otherwise influence or shape public perception.

The Bangladesh government remains open to meaningful engagements with the UN Office of the High Commissioner within and beyond the office, Momen said.

Bangladesh's political leadership would be happy to meet with him in person either in Geneva or New York at any time of mutual convenience.

A UN official said Bangladesh authorities have yet to make any approach seeking any support from the UN.

custody "for their own security".

Earlier, in the wake of the countrywide complete shutdown by the protesters and subsequent clashes, Nahid was picked up by plainclothes men from his friend's house in Nandipara area of the capital's Khilgaon on July 19.

The next day, he found himself in Purbachal. He had deep bruises in different parts of his body. He then admitted himself to the hospital, from where DB picked him and the other two up again.

Two lawyers, Manjul Al-Matin and Ainunnahar Siddika, filed a writ with the High Court on Monday, seeking the release of the six coordinators and the court's directives on not firing bullets on students across the country.

The writ was heard by a bench on Monday and Tuesday and was on the cause list for Wednesday.

A court source said the hearing could not be held on Wednesday as one of the judges, Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon, took a two-day leave due to illness.

TODAY'S PROGRAMME

Abdul Kader, one of the coordinators of the anti-discrimination student movement, last night announced fresh programmes for today, including prayers and a mass procession after Juma prayers to press home their nine-point demand.

All mosques, temples and churches were urged to hold prayers for the students who were killed.

Meanwhile, Kader urged all the citizens; including teachers, workers, professionals, cultural activists, human rights workers, intellectuals, students, and even those of madrasas to help make the programme successful.

UN free to probe any incident of violence: PM

The premier was speaking at a programme, organised by Bangladesh Krishak League at the capital's Krishibid Institution, Bangladesh, marking the National Mourning Day.

Hasina, also the Awami League president, said, "We will have to take action against the culprits no matter who they are."

She said her government has attained the status of a developing country for Bangladesh.

"But the country's image is being tarnished abroad by carrying out false propaganda and militant activities. I am leaving it to the people to judge it."

The PM said her government has built the country following the ideals of the father of the nation, but infrastructures were destroyed and people were killed.

"They [the perpetrators] would be tried one day. This is why I want those incidents to be investigated and a fair trial be held."

Hasina said not a single incident related to militancy occurred in Bangladesh after the Holey Artisan attack due to the vigilance of the law enforcement agencies.

"But now they have shown the ugly teeth of militancy under the cover of the quota reform movement," she said.

The PM said there should be no place for militancy and terrorism in Bangladesh.

Talking about Jamaat-Shibir, she said the main strength of the militants is Jamaat-e-Islami and its student front Islami Chhatra Shibir.

"They [Jamaat-Shibir] will be banned under clause-18 of the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009 so that they don't have any social dignity."

She said Jamaat-Shibir would try to carry out destructive activities again. "All will have to try to resist them and save the people. All will have to do it unitedly."

She called upon the people to remain vigilant against any such incident.

Hasina questioned the rationale for continuing the quota reform protests by students despite all their demands being already fulfilled.

She criticised a section of intellectuals for supporting the movement.

"Many of our knowledgeable personalities, dignitaries and intellectuals continue giving their support to this movement. What support are they giving? The demand has already been fulfilled completely."

At the outset of the programme, a one-minute silence was observed in memory of the departed souls of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and other martyrs of the August 15, 1975, carnage.

A special prayer was also offered seeking salvation of the departed souls of the martyrs of the August 15 carnage and those killed in the recent violence.

F-16s delivered to Ukraine 'will be shot down'

Says Kremlin

AFP, Moscow

The Kremlin said yesterday that any F-16s delivered to Ukraine would be shot down and have little impact on the battlefield, in response to reports that the first fighter jets have arrived.

"Their number will gradually decrease, they will be shot down... But of course, these deliveries will not have any significant impact on the development of events on the front," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said.

For more than two years, Ukraine has pleaded with Western allies for the US-made fighter jets -- long considered the crown jewel in the sprawling list of military hardware Kyiv has sought from its Western backers.

BNP-Jamaat used students as shield: PM

UNB, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday reiterated that Jamaat-Shibir and BNP used the student protests for quota reform as their shield to unleash the recent reign of terrorism across the country.

"They [Jamaat-Shibir and BNP] just used the students as their shield," she said while Italian Ambassador Antonio Alessandro called on her at her official residence Gono Bhaban.

PM's Deputy Press Secretary Noorelahi Mina briefed the reporters afterwards.

He said the prime minister mentioned that Jamaat-Shibir and BNP are used to kill people through arson attacks.

She said she has visited different hospitals to see the injured who are getting treatments following the violence.

"We are providing medicare facilities to all equally," she added.

The Italian envoy expressed his condolences for the loss of lives and properties.

A 31-year-old journalist shot dead in Jatrabari. A 45-year-old hotel employee dies from bullet wounds in Badda. A 20-year-old student fatally shot in Banasree. At least 201 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are sons, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

Mehedi dies of bullet wounds while covering news in Jatrabari

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Mehedi Hasan, staff reporter of Dhaka Times, was not just a journalist; he was a son, a husband, a father, and the sole earner of his family.

On July 18, while covering clashes between protesters and law enforcers in Dhaka's Jatrabari area, Mehedi was shot and killed.

Mehedi was the eldest of three brothers and took on the responsibility of caring for his family at a young age.

"He worked hard to keep his parents well, thinking about the happiness of the family," recalls his aunt, Mahinur Begum. "We were so proud when he became a journalist through his own efforts. He was looking after all of us. We can't even imagine that he is gone."

She said Mehedi recently built a one-storey house for his parents in Hosnabad village of Patuakhali's Baufal upazila.

However, that came at a cost; to build the house, Mehedi had to take a loan from a local NGO. Every month, he paid off the loan installments, ensuring that his family had a safe and secure place to live.

RECENT VIOLENCE

Publish list of those who died: Shujan

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) yesterday demanded the publication of a list of people who died in the violence centring the ongoing protest, along with their detailed descriptions.

It also demanded a transparent and credible investigation into the violence and bringing the people responsible to justice.

The citizen's platform placed the demand at a press conference at Dhaka Reporters Unity in the capital.

Speakers at the event said the government must sit with the agitating students, university authorities, political parties, and civil society and accept the logical demands raised by all the sections, including the students, to resolve the deadlock.

Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar said Awami League formed the government in 2008, banking on the support of the young people, but this group has now taken a stance against the government.

"We have to think about why such a situation has arisen," he said.

Expressing solidarity with the demands of the protesting students, he said students are not getting jobs, and their freedom of speech is being curtailed at the university campus.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, said the events surrounding the students' movement affected the entire society.

There is no scope to forgive the deaths of so many people, she said, adding that people will not be silent unless a fair trial is conducted with the involvement of the United Nations.

> " If the government wants to suppress the movement by force and even if it succeeds in that, it will face discontent again in the future, the consequences of which may be more terrible.

> Central Coordinator of Shujan

Dhaka University Professor Robayet Ferdous said the movement to eliminate quota discrimination is no longer limited to students only, as people of all classes and professions have gotten involved there.

He said the government suffered a moral and political defeat as it suppressed the movement by killing people.

We had to bribe him in my prayers before we disconnected the call. That was the last time I spoke to him."

Now, Lucky is left alone to care for their two children -- Al-Amin, an HSC candidate, and daughter Jannat, a six-year-old.

With their house in Natun Bazar area of Khankanapur union in Rajbari still under construction and loans taken to build it, Lucky is desperate. "How do I pay back the two lakh taka we owe? How can I provide for my children and ensure their education?"

Al-Amin said, "My father always told me to study hard so that we could overcome our sorrows. Now, who will tell me those words? Who will bring justice for my father's death?"

Gani's father, Abdul Mazid Sheikh, received the tragic news from an unknown caller around 10:30am.

"The caller said my son had been shot and urged me to send someone to a hospital in North Badda. I didn't even know which of my sons was in danger. Both of them live in Dhaka. I had to call my younger son, Tariqul, to figure out what was happening."

Tariqul, Gani's younger brother, then called his brother's number. Someone picked it up and told him to go to the hospital.

"I found Gani unconscious and bleeding in an ambulance. I rushed him to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, where the doctor told me to bring some medicine. When I returned after 10 minutes, the doctor said it was too late," said Tariqul.

Tariqul said his brother died around 11:30am on Friday.

However, obtaining Gani's body proved to be a gruelling and costly process.

"I got his body from Dhaka Medical College Hospital two days later, on Sunday afternoon," said Tariqul.

He said he was forced to pay bribes totaling Tk 9,000 to get his brother's body, which included paying Tk 500 each to search three rooms at the morgue.

He also paid Tk 7,500 to avoid procedural delays, he said.

"Then I rented an ambulance for Tk 10,500 but was compelled to hire another one through the morgue's in-charge, costing Tk 20,000," he added.

"Finally, we were able to bury my brother. But is this how we treat the body of an innocent man?"

him," said his friend Touhidul Nobby, who brought his body to the hospital.

"We came to Dhaka together from Kushtia for three months, as we started working as interns at an IT-based company as part of our final semester," said Touhidul, Maruf's classmate and colleague.

"We didn't even join the protests. Only 19 days had passed since we came to Dhaka, so we didn't know much about anything around here. We just got out of our house in Banasree to see what was going on. Then we saw a vehicle of BGB approaching towards us and bullets were being fired, so we rushed into an alley as everything got so chaotic there," said Touhidul.

"Maruf and I got separated. So, when he got shot, I couldn't even see it or know it immediately. After some time, when I was looking for him, I saw his body lying on the road. I quickly got a rickshaw and rushed him to the hospital, but the doctor said he was already gone," he added.

The duty doctor at the emergency department of Advance Hospital said a bullet entered through Maruf's back and pierced through his stomach.

Later, Maruf's uncle came to the hospital and took his body back to Kushtia.

"Maruf was a freelancer. He wanted to make a career in web development. He was already earning money so that he didn't burden his family," Touhidul told this newspaper.

Maruf wanted to get done with the internship soon and get back home soon so that he could finish his diploma and start his career, he added.

Instead, his lifeless body went back home, wrapped in a white shroud.

Later, when this correspondent reached out to Maruf's father, Shoriful Islam, he was in no state to talk.

"I don't know what's there to say. I buried my son with my own hands. So, nothing matters to me anymore," said, Shoriful, who runs a shop in the Khoksa area.

"Life has stopped for us. I don't feel like going to my shop. We are trying to accept that Maruf is no more and he will never be back. All we can do is keep praying for him," he added.

secretary Md Abu Sayeed, highlighted the necessity of reviving the Bangalee nationalism.

The statement read, "The party has been banned for the second time in Bangladesh. This fundamentalist group was an accomplice of the Pakistani invading forces during the Liberation War in 1971. After independence, the government of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman banned the party for abuse of religion, opposing independence, and participation in genocide."

The release criticised the subsequent reinstatement of Jamaat by the Ziaur Rahman government, stating that the group's principles have remained unchanged for the last 53 years, making the current ban a reiteration of history.

The ban, executed under the Anti-Terrorism Act, follows the International Criminal Tribunal's previous designation of Jamaat as a war criminal and terrorist group, it added.

Meanwhile, Gonojagaran Mancha and Amra Muktijoddhar Shantan welcomed the government's move.

The government yesterday banned Jamaat and all its front organisations including Shibir as political parties and entities under the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009.

Teachers, students

Prof Samina Lutfa of DU Sociology department, added, "We do not want any forces [law enforcers] at the Dhaka University campus. It is our campus. The forces must be withdrawn immediately."

The teachers then marched to Central Shaheed Minar to observe a minute of silence for the victims.

Besides, over 100 faculty members from Independent University, Bangladesh, expressed solidarity with the protests.

At Rajshahi University, the "University Teachers Network" held a silent procession and rally at the Shaheed Intellectual Memorial at 11:00am.

As the procession ended, plainclothes law enforcers with batons suddenly grabbed some students and moved them towards a police van. Teachers and other students intervened, resulting in their release.

The same officers assaulted two journalists who were recording the incident, said students.

Mohammad Hemayatul Islam, additional police commissioner (crime and operation) of Rajshahi Metropolitan Police, said they primarily detained a student to talk about why he misbehaved with a cop. "We've not arrested anyone," he claimed.

At Jahangirnagar University, a protest march honoured those who died during protests.

Twelve teachers from Daffodil International University joined the programme in solidarity.

In Khulna University, teachers held a human chain and silent march.

STUDENTS' DEMO

In Barishal, police picked up 12 students for "their own security" during the "Remembering Our Heroes" programme.

Abdur Rahman Mukur, officer-in-charge of Bandar Police Station, said, "We have taken 12 students into our custody for security purposes. They are neither arrested nor detained."

In Narayanganj, at least 10 people were injured as police charged batons on the protesters yesterday evening when they tried to gather in front of Central Shaheed Minar in Chashara area to organise a candle light protest.

The protesters said police barred them from gathering there and also charged batons on them.

They claimed that police detained at least three students from the spot.

Police, however, claimed that they were later released.

Contacted, Sahadat Hossain, officer-in-charge of Sadar Model Police Station, denied charging batons on students. He said students gathered there without permission for which they had to disperse them.

Mehedi's two daughters, just seven months and four years old, are too young to understand the tragedy that has befallen them.

In the wake of his death, the family received a Tk 10 lakh worth savings certificate and Tk 50,000 in cash from the prime minister.

His aunt Reba Akhtar said, "His dream was simple -- to raise his daughters well, to give them the opportunities he worked so hard to create. But a bullet shattered that dream."

Mehedi was laid to rest on July 30 in the backyard of the house he built.

Arafat urged protesters to remain vigilant against such infiltrators and to maintain patience and logic to prevent further unrest.

Arafat called on the police to avoid harassing students who participated in demonstrations.

Expressing sorrow for casualties, he said the government is committed to transparent trials through the independent judicial commission.

If needed, the government will seek help from external experts, he added.

He appreciated the prime minister's steps in handling the recent attacks and vandalism.

He said Bangladesh and Italy historically enjoy excellent friendly relations.

In this connection, he mentioned that some two lakh plus Bangladeshi expatriates are the bridge of this relationship and they are contributing to both the country's economies.

Reading out a written statement, Dilip Kumar Sarkar, central coordinator of Shujan, said if the government wants to suppress the movement by force and even if it succeeds in that, it will face discontent again in the future, the consequences of which may be more terrible.

He stressed the need for a fair and transparent investigation under UN supervision into all the violence and ensuring punishment of the people responsible.

Dilip also demanded the withdrawal of all the cases against the students, the release of detained students, and an end to mass arrest through block raids.

BANNING OF JAMAAT-SHIBIR

Govt ready to counter their covert activities

Says law minister

STAR REPORT

Law Minister Anisul Huq yesterday said the government is ready to confront any covert activities by the just-banned Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami and its student wing, Islami Chhatra Shibir.

He made this statement while talking to journalists at the Secretariat.

Asked whether Jamaat-Shibir would go underground once banned, the minister acknowledged the possibility.

"However, we are prepared to handle such a situation," he said.

The minister also mentioned that the government has taken steps to amend the International Crimes Tribunal Act.

"It is not that banned party members cannot be punished. The ban may not directly lead to penalties, but they can still be prosecuted for any crimes committed under Bangladeshi law," he explained.

In response to a question about the fate of the party's assets post-ban, he assured that measures are in place.

He also said the government has taken necessary measures so that any innocent person is not sent to jail in cases filed in connection with violence centring the quota reform protests.

The prosecution has been directed to take initiative in favour of the court's granting bail to those, including HSC examinees and minors, who are not involved in the incident of violence, he said.

Security tightened in the capital

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Dhaka Metropolitan Police has beefed up security measures, especially at the key points to prevent any untoward situations or violent activities centring the ban on Jamaat and Shibir.

"We are ready to tackle any kind of criminal activities and sabotage. We have already strengthened security at major installations, and points of the capital," said DMP Commissioner Habibur Rahman.

Additional check posts have been set up in different major points of the capital so that no one can be able to carry out any subversive activities, said police sources.

The home ministry yesterday issued a gazette notification banning Jamaat-e-Islami, Islami Chhatra Shibir, and all of its front organisations as political parties and entities under the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009.

According to the gazette, the government took the decision as per Section 18 (1) of the Anti-Terrorism Act-2009 and enlisted it as a banned entity in the second schedule of the act.

Ctg drowns in torrential rain

Many low lying areas in port city waterlogged

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Torrential rainfall since midnight led to waterlogging across numerous low-lying areas of Chattogram city yesterday.

Visiting different areas across the port city, this correspondent witnessed people going through a hard time with their daily commute. Roads across Chawkbazar, Bakalia, Agrabad, Halishahar, GEC Intersection, Muradpur, Bahaddarhat, Kapasgola, Shulakbahar, Chandgaon and Katalganj were seen submerged under ankle to knee-deep water, while few vehicles were available.

"I have been waiting for a vehicle to go to office for at least half an hour, so far in vain," said Rashed Iqbal, an office-goer stuck at GEC Intersection.

Mina Das was seen wading through knee-deep water on KB Aman Ali Road.

"I have to attend to my ailing mother-in-law, who is currently hospitalised. I am compelled to tread this dirty water from overflowing drains since I could not find a single rickshaw to reach the hospital," she lamented.

In 24 hours till 3:00pm yesterday, 148.6 millimetres of rain has been recorded in the port city, said Ali Akbar Khan, assistant meteorological officer at Chattogram Met Office.

The downpour, triggered by active monsoon winds over the area, may continue for the next 24 hours, he added.

Meanwhile, Chattogram Sea Port was advised to hoist Cautionary Signal-3, the official mentioned.

He stressed that the incessant rain might put 6,558 families, who live on the slopes of 26 hills in the city, in risk of landslides.

According to officials of Chattogram district administration, the vulnerable families were asked to evacuate risky structures and move to safety.

However, most of them did not pay heed to the warnings, said local sources.

Contacted, Abul Bashar Mohammad Fakhruzzaman, deputy commissioner of Chattogram, said they were asking people through loudspeaker to leave their homes on the risky hill slopes and come to shelter centres.

"The shelter centres have adequate accommodation capacity, but many are still remaining in their houses. We cannot force them to evacuate their homes, so we are requesting them using loud speakers in different vulnerable areas," he added.

Govt to consider technical support from the UN

Says foreign secretary

UNB, Dhaka

Foreign Secretary Masud Bin Momen yesterday said the government first wants to see the outcome of the investigation being carried out by the judicial inquiry commission instead of engaging in anything parallel to that.

"We want them [commission] to work and complete their process," Masud told reporters after briefing the development partners at a state guesthouse.

The foreign secretary, however, said they will surely consider taking technical-related assistance from the United Nations to that end.

"We are hopeful that they [Inquiry Commission] will fairly, impartially and transparently investigate each incident to hold the responsible persons accountable and bring them to justice," Masud said.

Masud's comments came after UN Human Rights Chief Volker Türk said his office is also available to deploy an independent fact-finding team, which would assist in building trust among all stakeholders and to help de-escalate tensions.

The foreign secretary said the government already responded to the 14 foreign missions who wrote to Foreign Minister Hasan Mahmud recently.

"We have addressed their issues in the reply," he said, adding that today the development partners wanted to know more about freedom of assembly, and wanted to know whether any force is being applied or anyone is arrested.

He said there was no problem where people were protesting peacefully but there were some problems in some places where the people tried to create disruptions going beyond peaceful atmosphere.

Banning Jamaat-Shibir not enough

Sector Commanders' Forum calls for upholding ideals of Liberation War

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The ban on Jamaat and Shibir is not sufficient on its own, said the Sector Commanders' Forum-Liberation War '71 in a statement yesterday. They advocated for a collective effort from the government, various organisations and cultural society to steer Bangladesh towards a progressive and democratic path in line with the Liberation War ideals.

SHAYESTAGANJ UPAZILA IN HABIGANJ

Wastes being dumped near reserve forest

MINTU DESHWARA

For the past several years, local residents have been dumping household wastes in the open on Olipur-Shahjibazar road in Brahmandura union under Shayestaganj upazila of Habiganj.

Just on the other side of the road lies the Ranghunandan Hill Forest Reserve, one of the oldest forest area in the Sylhet division. A rail track also passes along the road.

Visiting the area recently, this correspondent saw a heap of garbage has piled up on the roadside, leaving the road and walkway dirty and slippery, causing nuisance to the residents, passengers of vehicles and pedestrians alike.

"Currently, wastes from houses and markets in the neighbourhood are being disposed of on the roadside in Olipur area under supervision of some locals," said Abdur Rauf, a local resident.

Nannu Chowdhury, another resident of the area, said the situation has been like this for the last five-six years, making it difficult for people to use the road due to the stench and litter produced from the garbage heap.

Mohan Mia, a member of Brahmandura Union Parishad, said, "There is no place or Secondary Transfer Station (STS) in the area to dump household wastes, so people are discarding those in the empty space next to the railway track."

He urged the authorities concerned to set up a waste dumping zone in the area.

Tofazzal Sohel, general secretary of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon in Habiganj, said wastes are being discarded in the open right next to a reserve forest, posing threat to the environment and wildlife.

Contacted, Tariq Rahman, assistant conservator of forests in Habiganj, said the Forest Department is currently working on a solution to address this issue.

"The matter has been informed to the higher authorities for further action," said Saifullah, assistant engineer (Roads) of Bangladesh Railway in Shayestaganj upazila.

Contacted, Hossain Mohammad Adil Joj Mia, chairman of Brahmandura Union Parishad, said they have informed the upazila administration and steps will be taken soon to resolve the issue.

Government spreading lies: Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday alleged that the government, along with some pro-ruling party officials in law enforcement agencies, is spreading lies in a coordinated effort about the killings during the student protests.

He said this is merely an attempt to obscure the truth.

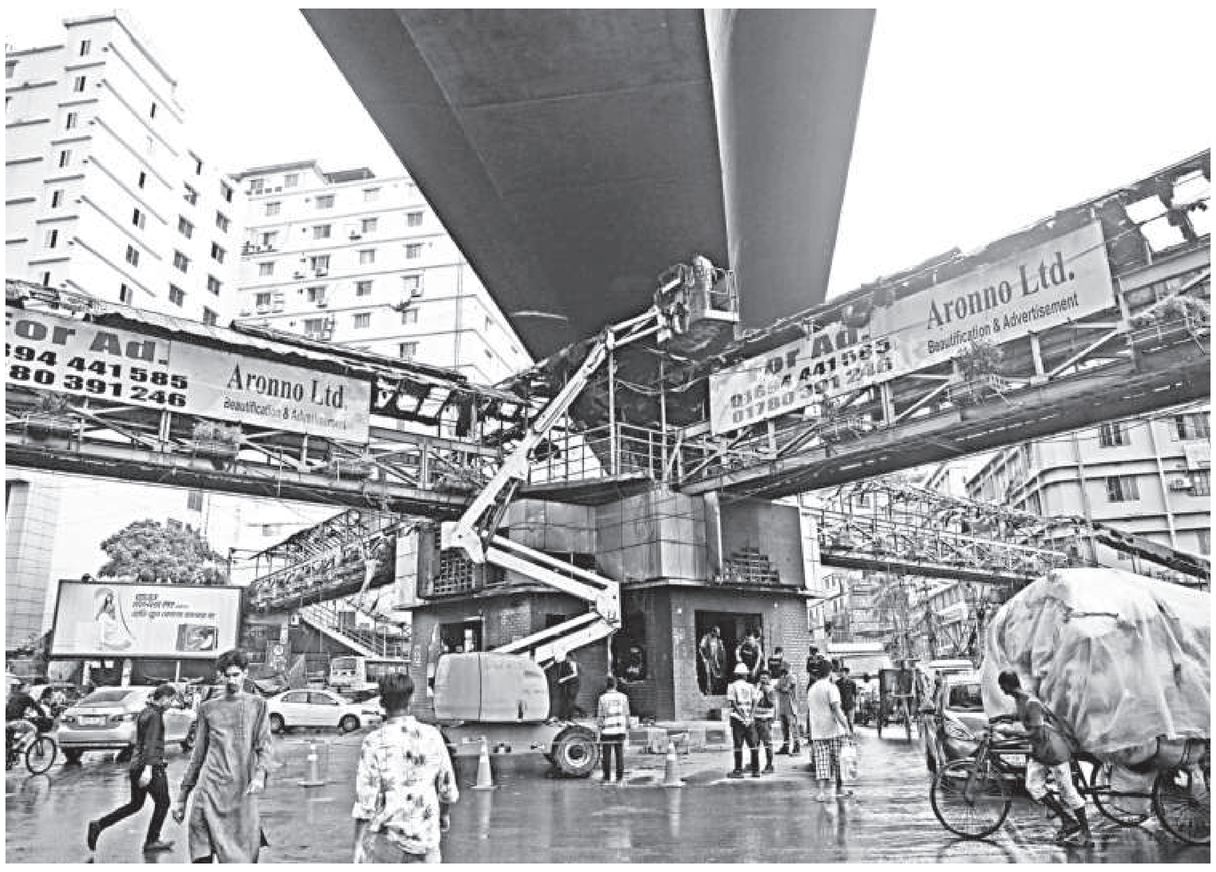
In a statement, he urged all government officials and employees, including those in the administration and law enforcement agencies, to stop oppressing students by ignoring the unjust and illegal orders, instructions, and pressures.

The BNP leader also cautioned that as the torture intensifies, mass resistance will only grow stronger in response.

He said the government is pitting the law and order forces and the administration against the students in a well-planned manner, which is an ominous sign for the state.

"The head of government and government minister-leaders and some Awami-minded members of law enforcement agencies are constantly resorting to lies and saying that the so-called 'third power' forces have carried out the shootings and massacre, but people all over the world saw that the general public including students did not have firearms," the BNP leader said.

He said firearms were seen in the hands of law enforcers and the Chhatra League and Jubo League. "Despite this, the government continues to repeat this chorus of lies in a superficial attempt to obscure the truth."



Employees of Dhaka Mass Transit Company Limited inspect a section of the metro rail at the Mirpur 10 intersection area yesterday. During the recent unrest in the country, this foot-bridge was set on fire, which is why the DMTCL is checking to see if any damage occurred to the metro rail.

Titas regretted the temporary inconvenience to consumers saying that the adjacent areas may experience low pressure in gas supply for the same reason.

DEMAND JUSTICE FOR STUDENTS

DOWEL BISWAS

In a powerful show of solidarity with the nine-point demands of the anti-discrimination protest, a diverse group of professionals from the fields of film, television, photography, theater, journalism and other visual media gathered for a rally. The demonstration started on 11:15am yesterday at the Farmgate intersection in Dhaka.

During the rally, attendees were seen delivering their speeches despite the downpour, demonstrating their unwavering commitment to the cause. Their statements focused on demanding justice for the students killed in the quota reform protests, an end to mass arrests, and the cessation of legal actions against the protesters.

The rally was a poignant reminder of the ongoing struggle for justice and reform in Bangladesh, highlighting the role of visual media professionals in amplifying the call for accountability and change.

Calling themselves Drissho Madhyam Shilpi Shomaj (Visual Media Artistes Association), the members posed a significant demonstration in support of the ongoing student protests against the violence in the 2024 quota reform movement, also the nationwide crackdown on students that has seen the arrest of thousands of students. Although the protest was scheduled to take place in front of the Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban on Manik Mia Avenue, they had to change their location to Indira Road. However, the demostration later moved to the Farmgate intersection.

In a powerful statement, the group declared, "We demand justice for all killings. End violence, mass arrests, and harassment." This call for action aligns with the students' nine-point demands, which have sparked widespread unrest and controversy across the country. The recent violence and mass arrests have ignited a firestorm of criticism and calls for accountability.

With slogans, including the famed Ganatantra Mukti Pak, Swairachar Nipat Jak, placards, songs, and banners -- celebrities stood firm showing their staunch support for the protesters.

The protest stands as a bold assertion of the artistes' commitment to justice and human rights. The demonstrators are not just reacting to the immediate incidents of violence, but are also making a broader demand for the protection of civil liberties and the rule of law.

The association has made it clear that their protest is not just a moment of solidarity but a call to action. They demand justice for the murders associated with the movement, an end to the violence perpetrated by state forces, the cessation of mass arrests and harassment, and the immediate release of detained students.

Reflecting on the historical context, the group notes that the great Liberation War was fought for a Bangladesh rooted in justice, equality, and human dignity. They remind the nation that these principles are enshrined in the constitution and must be upheld. "As citizens of this country, our constitutional right is to live in safety and receive fair treatment under the law," the statement asserts.

The protest has garnered significant attention, with the group urging media houses to cover the event. They had called on daily newspapers and electronic media to send correspondents and camera crews to document the demonstration, ensuring that the voices of the protesters are heard and their demands are spotlighted.

"Salute to the young ones who had to lose their lives to get justice," said Ashfaque Nipun during the demonstration. "They are true heroes. As for the media industry, I am sure that any losses occurred will be overcome if the state becomes more humane."

Azmeri Haque Badhan, Bangladesh's only actress to officially attend the Cannes Film Festival, said, "It could have been my daughter at the protest, she could have lost her life." The actress teared up as she was saying this. "Any state, that kills its own people to assert power, cannot be a democracy. The government has to take responsibility for this."

Among the notable figures present were Shahidul Alam, Mosharraf Karim, Siam Ahmed, Akram Khan, Rafiath Rashid Mithila, Sabila Noor, Amitabh Reza, Eresh Zaker, Nazia Haque Orsha, Syed Ahmed Shawki, Wahid Tarek, Ritu Sattar, and several others who braved the rain to make their voices heard.

Earlier in the day, the court of Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Saddam Hossain sent eight men, including former Ducsu vice-president Nurul Haque Nur and BNP activist Mahmudus Salehin to jail after police produced them before the court upon completion of their five-day remand in a case filed over the vandalism of the Kazipara Metro Station in the city's Mirpur on July 19.

Quader now says no shoot-on-sight order information and broadcasting, said none of the police, Rab, and BGB personnel was allowed to open fire, they had to work in line with the country's constitution.

"But some law enforcers might have violated the law on the ground. We will bring those to book following an independent judicial probe," he said while addressing the media at the secretariat.

This newspaper found at least 44 people were shot deadsince the "shoot-on-sight" order was mentioned.

"According to the law, a written government order [gazette] must be sent to the forces, authorising them to 'shoot on sight'. The government order clearly outlines the circumstances under which the forces are allowed to shoot on sight e.g. breaking a curfew. I have not heard of such a written order being published," said Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hossain, eminent security and defence analyst.

When the defence is deployed "in aid of civil power", they have to be sanctioned by a magistrate to shoot to kill.

"The army and the BGB need a magistrate present on a spot in order to shoot and kill someone. I don't know if any magistrate was present on the spot when people were killed. The police may have magistracy power to shoot to kill -- that I don't know for sure. But then the question is, which rank has that power? Were members of that rank present on the spot where the shooting happened?" questioned Sakhawat, also a former election commissioner.

"If they have been tasked with guarding a key-point installation, then they [army, BGB) can shoot to kill without a magistrate. If a magistrate is not present, then they must later answer to a magistrate why they shot to kill."

He added that according to the rules of engagement, the armed forces cannot shoot to kill without a warning. "They must draw a line on the ground and if the opponent crosses the line, then they are obliged to fire."

The home and law ministers, and the chiefs of police, Rab, and BGB did not respond to our calls and text messages seeking their comments if there were any "shoot-on-sight" order, and if not, why law enforcers shot people so indiscriminately.

Justice Khandaker said announcements will be made in Rangpur over loudspeakers from today to inform the people of the commission's arrival.

Statements regarding the death of Sayed will be recorded on the first day. The statements on the deaths of Sajjad Hossain, Moslem Uddin Milan and Md Manik Miah will be recorded on August 6, and Md Merazul Islam and Md Abdullah Al Taher on August 7, he added.

The recording of testimonies would start at 9:00am every day at Rangpur Circuit House.

He urged the people to come forward for the testimonies and warned against any form of intimidation against the people who will making statements and giving evidence to the commission.

Besides identifying those responsible for the deaths and injuries during the quota reform protest from July 16 to July 21, the commission has been tasked with unearthing the reasons behind the violence surrounding the protests.

whether Richardson can hold off Jamaica's Shelly-Ann Fraser-Pryce, the ageing five-time world 100m champion seeking her third Olympic gold in the discipline.

Richardson is seeking to become the first US woman to win an Olympic 100m title since Gail Devers in 1996.

While Lyles and Richardson might grab the initial headlines with the finals on Saturday for the women and Sunday for the men, there will be a huge array of talent on show in the French capital.

Sweden's pole vault king Armand 'Mondo' Duplantis will seek to push his own limits for victory with a potential tilt at a 10th consecutive world record, while two of the most mouth-watering events are in the same discipline: the 400m hurdles.

Three years ago in Tokyo, the hurdles produced two of the most astonishing races ever run in Olympic history, made all the more remarkable as they were in a spectator-less stadium.

First up, Norway's Karsten Warholm smashed his own world record by a staggering 0.76sec to win the men's hurdles in 45.94sec.

Twenty-four hours later American Sydney McLaughlin-Levrone did the impossible and improved her own world record by 0.44sec to 51.46sec.

The two hurdles race again promise to be cracking races in Paris, with Warholm under pressure from American Rai Benjamin and McLaughlin-Levrone from Dutchwoman Femke Bol.

The men and women's 800m races also look likely to throw up two absolute must-see races, with two world records under threat.

Algerian Djamel Sedjati has his eyes on Kenyan David Rudisha's 1:40.91 while, in absence of champion Athing Mu, Britain's Keely Hodgkinson comes to Paris as the athlete to beat in the women's two-lap field, having run a life-time best of 1:54.61 in London two weeks ago to show she can upgrade her silver from Tokyo.

In Paris, the irrepressible Kenyan Faith Kipyegon will be gunning for a third successive Olympic title at 1500m.

The men's 1500m offers one of the keenest rivalries on the circuit as British team captain Josh Kerr goes head-to-head once more with the defending Olympic champion Jakob Ingebrigtsen.

Brac University teacher Saimum Reza Talukder said Arif Sohel, a coordinator of the quota reform movement at Jahangirnagar University, was arrested for an arson attack on Setu Bhaban in the capital though he was leading the protests on his campus.

Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of the Bangladesh Environmental Lawyers Association, said they want assurance that the six released coordinators would be able to carry on doing their works freely and safely.

"Do you think us as slaves whom you can just pick up at will and detain for as long as you wish? Then you offer us noodles, polao, chicken, or eggs and circulate those images to the media.

"We have seen political arrestees receiving treatment at the PG hospital for long. In the latest case, you picked up the tortured students without giving them treatment. We don't want this kind of law enforcement agencies.

"We don't want the police of the Awami League, BNP, or Jatiya Party.... You [police] should work for the people and be the police of Bangladesh," she said.

Samina Lutfha, an associate professor of sociology at DU, said, "You are in power to protect the people of Bangladesh, not to cause bloodshed on the streets. Stop torturing the people of Bangladesh."

Human rights activists Farida Akhter, Shireen Huq, Nur Khan Liton, Association for Land Reform and Development Executive Director Shamsul Haque, Prof Gitiara Nasreen of DU, Prof Mirza Taslima Sultana of JU and Prof Sayeed Ferdous were also present.

Rushad Faridi, an assistant professor of economics at DU, announced that they would hold their next protest rally "Droho Jatra" at 3:00pm today in front of the Jatiya Press Club.

He called upon the people from all walks of life to join the rally.

16-yr-old Alfi gets bail

according to his birth certificate.

Alfi's father Shahjalal told The Daily Star that his son on July 18 was hanging out with his friends at Parkermor near his home, which is also close to the Begum Rokeya University. He was in his college uniform.

When violence erupted around Parkermor, panicked Alfi ran towards the opposite direction to his home and suffered shotgun pellet injuries to his leg, said his father.

Alfi's father Shahjalal said they looked for Alfi all day but at night he received a call from someone claiming to be a law enforcer. The person said Alfi was in their custody and that he would be released the next day, July 19.

Shahjalal called the person the next day but this time he said Alfi would not be released.

On July 16, Begum Rokeya University student Sayed was shot and killed during the quota reform protest near his university.

Video footage shows police shooting Sayed, who posed no threat to the law enforcers. He died soon afterwards.

But contradicting what is clear as daylight, the First Information Report filed by police says Sayed was not a victim of police firing.

"The protesters fired weapons and threw chunks of bricks from different directions, and at one stage, a student [Sayed] was seen falling to the ground," read the FIR.

Abu Maruf Hossain, additional police commissioner of Rangpur Metropolitan Police, yesterday said police picked up Alfi and later showed him arrested in the Sayed murder case, which was filed on July 16.

He said they would drop his name from the case.

EAST-WEST PRISONER SWAP

WSJ journo among 26 freed in Russia prisoner deal

REUTERS, Moscow

Jailed US Wall Street Journal (WSJ) reporter Evan Gershkovich and ex-US Marine Paul Whelan were among 26 prisoners from the United States, Russia, Germany, Poland, Slovenia, Norway and Belarus being freed in a major east-west exchange yesterday, Turkey's presidency said.

It said 10 prisoners, including two minors, had been moved to Russia, 13 to Germany and three to the United States.

Turkish intelligence had announced that it was coordinating an extensive prisoner exchange, amid signs of a major swap between Russia and Belarus on one side and Western countries including the United States and Germany on the other.

"Our organisation has undertaken a major mediation role in this exchange operation, which is the most comprehensive of the recent period," the National Intelligence Agency (MIT) said in a statement.

Both the Kremlin and the White House declined to comment when asked about a possible exchange.

Flight tracking site Flightradar24 showed that a special Russian government plane used for a previous prisoner swap involving the United States and Russia had flown from Moscow to the Russian exclave of Kaliningrad, which borders Poland and Lithuania, before heading back to the Russian capital.

Reuters footage showed a Russian government plane on the ground in the Turkish capital Ankara.

Whelan and Vladimir Kara-Murza, a Russian-British dissident, both jailed in Russia, had suddenly disappeared from view in recent days, according to their lawyers.

Iranians gather for the funeral procession of assassinated Hamas chief Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran, Iran yesterday. The Islamic Republic's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei led prayers for Haniyeh ahead of his burial in Qatar, having earlier threatened a "harsh punishment" for his killing.

SHIP COLLISION

India govt summons Sri Lanka envoy

REUTERS, Mumbai

India summoned the Sri Lankan envoy yesterday to protest following a collision between one of its fishing boats and a Sri Lankan naval vessel that killed a fisherman, with a second missing, authorities said.

The collision took place 5 nautical miles north of Katchatheevu, an island at the focus of contention between the neighbours, although India ceded it to Sri Lanka 50 years ago. Indian fishermen are barred from the waters around the island.

"The government of India has always emphasised the need to deal with issues pertaining to fishermen in a humane and humanitarian manner," India's foreign ministry said.

Sri Lanka did not want an escalation of the issue and looking to work with India for a solution, Foreign Minister Ali Sabry told Reuters. "We understand this is about livelihoods and lives," he added.

HEAVY RAINS

Hundreds rescued from Himalayas in north India

12 people killed

REUTERS, New Delhi

Emergency workers rescued nearly 1,000 people who were stranded in different parts of the Himalayas following torrential rainfall in northern India, which caused widespread damage and left at least 12 people dead, officials said yesterday.

The capital Delhi received intense rainfall late on Wednesday, totalling 147 mm (5.8 inches) in eastern parts of the city and its suburbs, the India Meteorological Department said. At least seven people died in Delhi, according to local media.

Three people died and parts of two bridges washed away after a cloudburst in Uttarakhand state, officials said, and bad weather was hampering communications in the terrain.

Rescue workers saved over 1,000 people who were stranded in different locations on the Kedarnath route and a patch of the national highway was washed out, district official Saurabh Gaharwar said by phone.

ISRAELI OFFENSIVE IN GAZA

Destruction of water wells deepens misery

REUTERS, Gaza

Israel's military blew up more than 30 water wells in Gaza this month, a municipality official and residents said, adding to the trauma of airstrikes that have turned much of the Palestinian enclave into a wasteland ravaged by a humanitarian crisis.

Salama Shurab, head of the water networks at Khan Younis municipality, said the wells were destroyed by Israeli forces between July 18-27 in the southern towns of Rafah and Khan Younis.

The Israeli military did not respond to the allegations that its soldiers destroyed the wells.

It is not only ever-present danger from Israeli bombardment or ground fighting that makes life a trial for Gaza's Palestinian civilians. It is also the daily slog to find bare necessities such as water, to drink or cook or wash with.

People have dug wells in bleak areas near the sea where the bombing has pushed them, or rely on salty tap water from Gaza's only aquifer, now contaminated with seawater and sewage.

Children walk long distances to line up at makeshift water collection points. Often not strong enough to carry the filled containers, they drag them home on wooden boards.

Gaza City has lost nearly all its water production capacity, with 88 percent of its water wells and 100 percent of its desalination plants damaged or destroyed, Oxfam said in a recent report.

Palestinians were already facing a severe water crisis as well as shortages of food, fuel and medicine before the destruction of the wells, which has deepened the anguish brought on by the Gaza offensive, now in its 10th month.

COGAT, the branch of the Israeli military that manages humanitarian activities, told Reuters it has coordinated water line repairs with international organizations and "dozens" were done in the last month including one to the northern Gaza Strip.

Other work including power repairs at a desalination plant and construction of additional lines was under way.

Hamas fighters "have been known to attack civilian infrastructures and humanitarian aid routes, adding to the complexity and danger of delivering much-needed humanitarian aid to the region," COGAT said.

All Gazans can do is wait in long lines to collect water since US, Qatari and Egyptian mediators have failed to secure a ceasefire from Israel and its arch-foe Hamas. Not only is there a shortage of water, much of it is also contaminated.

"We stand in the sun, my eye hurts because of the sun, because we stand for long (hours) to (secure) water," said Youssef El-Shenawy, a Gaza resident.

Iran, allies plan joint retaliation against Israel

Say sources, analysts

AFP, Beirut

Iran and armed groups backed by it are preparing coordinated action meant to deter Israel but avert all-out war, sources and analysts said, after the killings of top Hamas and Hezbollah figures.

On Wednesday, Iranian officials met in Tehran with representatives of the so-called "axis of resistance" -- a loose alliance of Tehran-backed groups hostile to Israel -- to discuss retaliation for the deaths of Hamas's leader and Hezbollah's top military commander, said a source close to Lebanese group.

"Two scenarios were discussed: a simultaneous response from Iran and its allies or a staggered response from each party," the source who had been briefed on the meeting told AFP, requesting anonymity to discuss sensitive matters.

Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei threatened a "harsh punishment" for the killing of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran, which the group blamed on Israel, also vowing revenge.

Hezbollah leader Hassan Nasrallah was speaking yesterday at the funeral of Fuad Shukr, the group's top commander leading operations in Lebanon's south, where the group has been exchanging near-daily fire with Israel since the Gaza offensive began in October.

"There is a very strong likelihood that the response will be coordinated... among other resistance actors," said Amal Saad, a Hezbollah researcher and lecturer at Britain's Cardiff University.

Trump attacks Harris's racial identity

Says she opted to 'turn Black'

REUTERS, Chicago

US Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump falsely suggested to the country's largest annual gathering of Black journalists on Wednesday that his Democratic rival Kamala Harris had previously downplayed her Black heritage.

"She was always of Indian heritage, and she was only promoting Indian heritage. I didn't know she was Black, until a number of years ago, when she happened to turn Black, and now she wants to be known as Black," Trump said, drawing a smattering of jeers from an audience of about 1,000 people.

"So I don't know, is she Indian or is she Black? Trump continued. "But you know what, I respect either one, but she obviously doesn't, because she was Indian all the way, and then all of a sudden she made a turn, and she went - she became a Black person."

Harris, who is of Indian and Jamaican heritage, has long self-identified as both Black and Asian. She is the first Black person and Asian American person to serve as vice president.

Hours after Trump's comments, Harris told members of the historically Black sorority Sigma Gamma Rho gathered in Houston that his remarks were "yet another reminder" of what the four years under the former president looked like.

Legal manoeuvring can't hide ugly truths

Free all detained students, protesters without delay

The manner in which the government has dealt with the whole issue of the six coordinators of quota reform protests has legal irregularities written all over it. The six were finally released on Thursday afternoon, after nearly a week since being picked up between last Friday and Sunday. All through this period, top law and police officers defended it by using words that seemed carefully scripted. Even on Thursday, the law minister claimed that the six were kept in custody for their own security, and that it was they who had sought protection. But no one is buying it anymore. Legal experts have clarified that the safety claim, putting the onus on the detainees, is a cover for what was actually an abduction by police, which is illegal and unconstitutional. Citing the Appellate Division's guidelines, they said any detainee must be produced before court within 24 hours, which was not done in this case.

We have seen a similar legal manoeuvring in the case of the teenager detained in connection with the death of student protester Abu Sayed. The 16-year-old, Alfi Shahriar Mahim, was apparently not even present at the site of the killing. But police still arrested him for murder, leading to him being held in Rangpur jail for 12 days. The manner in which police approached the whole issue—from bringing false charges against a minor to inflating his age in case documents to preparing a First Information Report (FIR) that totally contradicted with independently verified footages of police repeatedly shooting Abu Sayed, despite the victim posing no threat—indicates that they may go to any lengths to cover their tracks and absolve themselves of any responsibility for the nationwide killings that occurred since July 16.

Reportedly, Shahriar Mahim has now been released, even though he hasn't been cleared of the charges against him. Elsewhere, there has been a conspicuous silence from the otherwise vocal student leaders throughout their detention and afterwards (the only statement they made was through an alleged two-day hunger strike that preceded their release). What does their plight tell us about the integrity of the law enforcement officials? What does it say about the future of the nearly 11,000 people arrested in 673 cases across the country over the last 14 days? These mass arrests and the tenuous legal justifications provided for them make a mockery of our justice system. They also show that, despite recent government claims about being open to a fair and thorough investigation into the killings of so many people in quota-related clashes, the authorities are still unwilling to pursue accountability where it is most needed: its own security forces.

This has to stop. Legal manoeuvring can no longer hide ugly truths or delude citizens. While we want accountability for the destruction and damage caused to public infrastructure by some elements, we believe the investigative focus must singularly be on establishing accountability for those tragic deaths at the moment. And the higher authorities must prove their sincerity by immediately stopping the pointless mass arrests, releasing all victims of legal harassment, especially students and political activists, and aid in the process of investigating the role of security forces during the violent events of July 18-21.

Its impact on the nation's future may be devastating

The ongoing disruption to school and university education and the resulting cancellation of public and school exams are deeply concerning. The government shut down all schools, colleges, and universities on July 16 as tensions began to mount following the crackdown on student protesters by members of ruling party affiliated groups and law enforcement personnel. However, activities at public universities have remained halted since July 1, when teachers went on work abstention to demand reinstatement of their previous pension scheme, followed by students against quota discrimination taking to the streets. As a result of these closures, the academic lives of students across the country have become mired in uncertainty.

It should be recalled that education across the board had been greatly affected for more than a year due to the Covid-19 pandemic. Experts say the setback suffered during that time is yet to be made up for. On top of that, during the first half of this year, classroom activities had already been disturbed because of heatwaves, flooding, and elections. Educationists have repeatedly expressed the need for the authorities to put greater emphasis on recovering from the learning loss caused by the pandemic. But even before that could be done, recent developments have hindered education again.

Admission tests for the cluster of nine agricultural universities for this academic year, scheduled to be held on July 20, have been postponed, along with admission procedures at other universities. And the same has happened in school admissions, too. The HSC and all equivalent exams, scheduled between July 18 and August 1, have had to be suspended. Similarly, half-year exams at secondary schools could not be held on time, along with other important activities, throwing the whole academic calendar into disarray. The education loss that is occurring as a result, coupled with the uncertainty being brought to the lives of young people, are simply impossible to measure. However, their long-term implication for the nation would likely be devastating.

Therefore, the authorities urgently need to create an environment in which schools and universities can reopen, ensuring the safety of all students. This will require all forms of harassment, intimidation and use of violence against our students to stop. Having done that, the government should consult with educationists and experts and figure out a way to recover the huge learning loss that students have had to suffer from since the beginning of the pandemic. Moreover, the government should also talk to the protesting teachers, and ensure they return to classes as soon as possible.

Mindless killing changed everything

Blinded by unquestioned power, the government is refusing to accept the new reality

THE THIRD VIEW

MAHFUZ ANAM

The prime minister and several ministers keep on asking: since the quota reform has already been implemented, why are the students still demonstrating? The repetition of this question only proves how blind to facts and disconnected with the people the government and Awami League leaders are. They are denying or seem to be oblivious to the fact that over 200 killed—the government itself admits to 150—and thousands injured by the indiscriminate firing by the police and Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) has totally changed the situation. In one eye hospital in Dhaka, during the violence, nearly 400 people who sustained eye injuries were treated, 300 of whom had to be admitted, and 250 had to undergo eye surgery. The majority of them had pellet (a particular type of ammunition used by police during the recent violence) wounds in one or both eyes. Imagine what the total figure could be like. We have no count yet of how many will have to amputate one or both arms or legs due to gunshots, and how many more will have to be operated upon. How many will really return to normal life? Everything points to mindless violence that cannot be termed as police action to quell unrest that emanates from usual demonstrations in our part of the world. The evidence is of a mindset of "shoot at sight," as announced by an AL leader.

Today's issue is seeking justice. Justice for the massacre of students and other citizens, the unleashing of a killing machine that the police and BGB turned out to be, the large-scale arrests, the "block raids," the house-to-house search, the false cases, and the insults of terming the demonstrators in general to be agents of destruction and anti-Bangladesh forces.

The all-encompassing issue that has alienated the students and enraged the people is the atmosphere of fear under which all students, youth, politically involved citizens, and people in general are having to live. (A father called this author and said, "I have a school-going son. I become tense with every sound of a car stopping near my house at night".)

The killings definitely stand as the most brutal retaliation by a government on any civic movement in the post-liberation Bangladesh history—and may be that of the subcontinent.

It must be investigated as to what led to such a large-scale killing in the hands of law enforcers.

We shudder at the thought of how a civilian government could allow its law enforcers to attack its own people with such brutality. The killing was not just an event, but one that took place over several days. Wasn't there any reflection, any afterthought and reassessment at the end of the first, second or third day that such heartless and continuous killing of one's own people must stop?

What brought the party that led us during the Liberation War to this? Over 15 years of unaccountable power, greed, cronyism, wealth accumulation, abuse of authority, and the attitude that they are above the law.

Of all the deaths, the most heart-rending is perhaps the story of Riya Gope, a six-year-old in Nayamati, Narayanganj, who was playing on the rooftop of their four-storey building. On July 19 afternoon, when police started firing on the demonstrators on the street near her house, her father Dipak Kumar Gope rushed to the roof to get her; he was carrying his daughter back to their flat when a bullet struck the child's head. She died at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH) on July 25. How could a bullet hit someone on the roof of a four-storey building unless the police took an aim to do so? Was Riya a threat? The explanation will most likely be that it was an accident. But can that be acceptable when she was in her father's arms on the roof of a four-storey building?

Use of helicopters to fire sound grenades and tear gas shells is a new element we saw in crowd-handling by the law enforcers this time around. However, there are disturbing accounts from the public, reporters and especially photographers that rifle shots were fired from these helicopters upon demonstrating crowds. On July 18 and 19, around mid-morning, helicopters hovered over Mayor Hanif Flyover, Shanir Akhra, Kajla and Signboard areas, sometimes sweeping down as they flew and fired on the crowd gathered below. These helicopters were clearly marked with the insignia of our law enforcers.

The case of Sumaiya Akter in Narayanganj adds credibility to this claim. She was 20 years old and the mother of a healthy two-month-old daughter. Hearing the sound of the helicopter and that of the clashes going on outside, following her mother, Sumaiya ventured out to the veranda of her sixth floor apartment to see what was going on. She got hit by a live bullet and died soon after. Where could the bullet come from? Given the height and the location of the apartment, the most likely possibility is that the shot came from a helicopter, as claimed by her family. This gives substance to claims by many others that they saw gunshots coming from helicopters.

How can a protesting crowd be fired upon from the air by their own government? Firing from helicopters is known to occur only when operating in an "enemy" territory or a location captured by armed terrorists. How can our own BGB or Rab or police fire upon our own people in such a manner?

We demand a credible and thorough investigation on the use of helicopters and their firing on demonstrators. While the judicial investigation to probe all deaths should continue, a separate and fast-track probe must be conducted to reveal the truth on this specific matter.

It must also be investigated as to what led to such a large-scale killing in the hands of law enforcers. Who made the threat assessment, and how? At what stage were they allowed to open fire on demonstrators, and who gave the orders to shoot? The rifles used were all modern and sophisticated. BGB used weapons meant to protect our borders. How could they be allowed to tackle student demonstrators with the same weapons? The investigation should also consider whether or not excessive force and disproportionate firepower were used against the demonstrators, none of whom have so far been seen to carry firearms. They were all carrying sticks and iron rods.

It is our considered view that the government and the ruling party continue to live in their own bubble and underestimate the depth of the people's grievances that has resulted from the killings of students and the public. We also feel that peace will not return to the campuses and the streets until justice is done and convincingly seen to be done. Force can be used to "calm" the situation, but it will be temporary. The lengthier the period of uncertainty, the more grievous will be its impact on our economy and the country's international acceptability.

Those who are used to using power to get their way are usually not aware of its limits. We have used Ansar, police, Rab, BGB and even the army, and an extreme measure like curfew. What has been the result? Yes, brutality, death, arrests and harassment can be further ratcheted up. But all that will generate more resentment, deeper hatred, and critical desperation. Such use of force may, at best, show a superficial show of calm, but will never solve our real problem of "power corrupting and absolute power corrupting absolutely" (adopting Lord Acton's time-honoured observation).

We urge the government to no longer hide behind convenient narratives that stand totally contradicted by facts. We further urge them to examine the brutality with which the demonstrators have been treated and the death and injuries that ordinary students and the people have had to suffer, and respond to the call for justice. We also urge them to stop befooling themselves as facts are in people's hands due to modern technology. Yes, there could be a lot of false news and videos in the digital sphere. But there are many credible ones too. Wisdom should compel the government not to brush them aside, which it will do only at its own peril.

Are we failing to understand Gen Z?

MAMUN RASHID

The generation of people born from 1995 to 2010 are commonly called Generation Z (Gen Z), following the alphabetical naming of their predecessors two generations prior, Generation X (Gen X). These young people are characteristically blunt and more aware of their rights with regards to what the market or society has to offer. Gen Z has long held a reputation for being attached to the virtual screen. In fact, for most Gen Z parents, screen time has been a growing concern as uncontrolled exposure to media has resulted in a disconnect from reality—or so we thought.

These "screenagers" have held a principal role in the quota reform movement. They have been successful in mobilising the entire nation's student body, the Bangladeshi diaspora, the generational parents and even the rickshaw pullers in fighting for their cause. So, maybe it's for us to take a fresh look at the Gen Z.

These young people have been using social media platforms, most notably Instagram, TikTok and YouTube from a much earlier age than their previous generations. In fact, 58 percent of surveyed teenagers expressed that they could not stay more than four hours without the internet, while older generations can stay up to 24 hours. This statistic makes internet reliance seem like a weakness for Gen Z, but upon close examination, the habits developed out of this excessive rate of internet usage can be appreciated. With the advent of social media and the generation that has adapted to it, discourse has increased, alongside awareness. This is important because, unlike previous generations, Gen Z uses the internet as a bidirectional platform, where you not only consume but also create. They use this bidirectionality to their advantage by promoting their chosen narrative.

The ability to quickly create content that caters directly to their chosen audience was once a skill that only marketing professionals had. The rise of TikTok and Instagram reels has transferred this skill to every Gen Z member with a mobile phone. Gen Z Bangladeshis have used this specific ability to draw attention to their campaign and bring in international actors to the discourse. Their growing familiarity with internet resources allows them to find relevant contacts, write relevant emails and generate responses when necessary. Hence, their activism has taken a far different shape and can reverberate throughout the population far quicker than before. They also receive and process information faster, which has both its advantages and disadvantages.

The biggest disadvantage is the creation of echo chambers where like-minded Gen Z come together to support each other and increase the strength of their opinion which is hard to breach. The advantage is that when this opinion becomes incredibly strong, it pours out of the echo chamber and takes the form of a movement like the quota reform movement. The constant access to information not only keeps them informed but also motivates them.

The advantage is that when this opinion becomes incredibly strong, it pours out of the echo chamber and takes the form of a movement like the quota reform movement.

Gen Z has now developed their own form of communication, including new words that remain largely foreign to older generations. This creates a disconnect between them and older generations—including lawmakers, politicians and people in power. But it cannot be avoided that this generation appears to be more informed and more actionable in their own right. So, their concerns surrounding different matters cannot be taken lightly. In fact, their insights might prove to be most useful in future development-related decisions.

Gen Z in Bangladesh and worldwide have expressed deep concerns with regard to issues such as mental health and climate change, both of which need to be taken seriously. They are already mobilising policy discourses on social media through activist groups that create discussion online without requiring a physical organisation or entity. The marketing world and even policymakers across the developed world are increasingly taking cognisance of their emerging choices and priorities. The same should be happening in Bangladesh.

This generation also has a fresh take on established ideas, such as creating work-space cafes to motivate student's learning which can take on conglomerates such as leading coffee chains in the near future. Their predominantly risk-taking nature has allowed them to introduce upcycling and thrifting culture in Bangladesh, which was previously unheard of in the country. Most notably, this risk-taking nature is not simply a characteristic that fades as the generation ages, which is more apparent than ever. In fact, backed by experience and good judgement, their ideas are worthwhile investments.

Politics has to change to cure Bangladesh of economic ills

What is good politics for a party, or any party, may not result in good economics. The ruling class in Bangladesh will ridicule this concern, referring to the remarkable economic growth the country has boasted for more than a decade. If the growth in GDP is all that matters, then the discontent shown on the streets and social media platforms is hard to explain. The privileged, who have been exploiting the status quo and would like to ensure it never ends, have an explanation though. They say those who are aggrieved are a small group of opponents of national development.

Is that so? No. Since the demonstrations of disagreement on politics, as it is now in Bangladesh, and policies adopted to regulate everything from politics, law and order, and economy, have been directly or indirectly punished, whenever tracked down, people seek out alternative routes to let out their anger. That is why students, who still have years before joining the workforce, and adults who have long passed the age to apply for government jobs, joined the protesters demanding reforms to the quota system in public recruitment. That's how they became part of the mass rather than people who could be singled out.

However, anyone living in the cocoon of power should have felt the heat of public discontent, if they wanted to, long ago. It is just around the corner at roadside tea stalls in conversations between people worried about income prospects, soaring living expenses, and threats of losing everything to the unfair and biased system.

Prof Anu Muhammad once said the money spent on roads, bridges, and flyovers also drives up GDP, but that may not be translated into better economic well-being of the people. An economy is only successful when the growth in economic output touches all equally, irrespective of their social statuses and connections to political, legal, and economic institutions of the country.

Is this the case in Bangladesh? The answer lies in the corruption status of the country revealed by Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) in January this year. It earned a score of 24 on a scale of 100, according to the Corruption Perception Index 2023. The score is the country's lowest in 12 years and the second worst after Afghanistan in 2023. TIB says that the state institutions responsible for curbing corruption are "under political and bureaucratic influence."

The misuse or abuse of power has a manifestation almost in every small and big industry, the equity market, and even in kitchen markets. The market overall seems to have gone under the control of a few who can influence the state machinery and political and economic institutions to their benefit.

Hence, the government's zero-tolerance-against-corruption stance reiterated in almost every public speech seems nothing but phoney.

Now what happens when those who are being ruled do not trust the ruler? They do not invest their capital to launch or expand a business, fearing everything will be taken away by those who can exercise power. Those who do not have capital feel hopeless about any prospects of elevating their living standards without access to political power. So, they do not consider exploring opportunities, if there are any, to improve their skills, because better skills mostly go in vain when bribery and lobbying play a bigger role in employment and entrepreneurship.

This is the context against which hundreds of thousands of people are leaving this country through illegal sea channels to reach the shores of the European nations, the Middle East, Malaysia, China, and the US, though the risks are well-known, as they are extensively reported by the media, NGOs, and INGOs. In fact, in 2023, the number of such migrants to European countries surged 10 percent to 337,008 from the year before, and in 2022 it escalated 58 percent year-on-year, according to The European Border and Coast Guard Agency.

Illegal migration spiked at a time of praiseworthy GDP growth.

There are reasons, such as climate change and lack of jobs, but those who are giving Tk 5 lakh to Tk 10 lakh, sometimes even more, to migration rackets, by selling ancestral properties or borrowing from unconventional sources at sky-high interest rates, could also think of opening a small business in their upazilas, districts or cities. They don't. The risk of crossing the Mediterranean Sea does not seem as great as overcoming the barriers put in place by law enforcement agencies and relevant authorities to get clearance for a small business. And then the regulatory bodies would keep on twisting the arm of the small investors to get whatever they want.

There are blatant examples within our range of visibility. We, residents of Dhaka, are so familiar with small roadside shops being vandalised every few months, but that is not done to free roads but to extort money before vendors return to the same place with new unofficial permits. One fruit vendor once told me he was tired of setting up his business again and again. So, he decided to try his luck in the Middle East.

People like him fall victim to exploitation again when looking for jobs overseas, by the people who have power, connections, and who can get away with any wrongdoing. The victims do not get justice because the legal system is also under the influence of those who have money and power. As TIB said, the allegedly corrupt keep enjoying unabated protection and even get rewarded.

The migrants become the lifeline of Bangladesh's economy while most of them leave their families behind, not to find a better life but to survive with deep resentment for the unjust political and economic institutions back home. However, the institutions want them to play their due role so they can thrive without any constraints.

Given a chance, though, migrants would just look away and would be busy building their lives elsewhere in another part of the world. Those who can afford that do that, but those who have loved ones, languishing in the corrupt system, send money home.

The government's rhetoric about its development works does not change the reality. The growth has catered to the greed of a small segment of the people, living at the top of society. Those in the middle have got a slice of the pie when those at the top used them to their advantage. The rest have acted as spectators in the game.

This has to change. Unfair economic growth is not sustainable without the participation of the larger population. Signs of that have already emerged. The flow of remittance through legal channels has shrunk, foreign direct investments have plummeted, and money laundering has escalated—by those who would like to park up their illegally-earned money somewhere safe and also by those who fear expropriation of their hard-earned money.

All of these are inimical to national growth in a real sense. For that, politics and economics, dominated by politics, have to change. Fair political and legal systems are prerequisites for fair economic institutions that would support everyone to grow within their potential and abilities. Unless and until that happens, the voices of the repressed would only amplify, may get subdued at times by pressure of state machinery, but would flare up again on the path to culmination.

Surrealism and dark arts: Leaving citizens behind

Keir Starmer pledges to stabilise UK as Labour win huge majority on July 5, 2024.

The British Labour Party has just won an important parliamentary election in early July more by careful targeting of seats than popular acclamation, reinforced by despair with the Tories' record, enabling the Tory-lite Liberal Democrats to pick off Tory-safe seats, while the Tory anti-immigrant, ultra-right (the newly formed Reform Party) appealed to lingering xenophobia from the Johnson-Sunak era. Full disclosure: I am a member of the British Labour Party, concerned about its pre-election trimming of principles, opting for pragmatism in order to give hope a chance. It has been a conflicted place to be in—for example, over Gaza and capping the number of children of poor families who can receive benefits.

Those of us to the left of British politics have had a torrid 14 years since Autumn 2010. The fragility of social democracy has been exposed by the variegated forces of the established ultra-right, which have tempted the British public into their conspiratorial dreams of individuated freedoms. Trump's Project 2025 in the US is similar.

The cultural prerequisites of populism en route to fascism have been evident across our walks of life. Restless egotists, having personally accumulated via underregulated banking, corrupted capitalism, rent-seeking on a grand scale through preferential state contracts and tax evasion (significantly off-shore), seek to consolidate their newfound privileges via the temporary necessity of winning popular support until they do not have to bother any more. The winning of that support entailed finding an enemy of the people, othering them and heaping upon them the causes of all ills. In Britain, these restless egotists, acting straight from the fascist playbook, have not yet fully settled upon their bête noire. For a hidden some, it is still the Jews—a disguised target of the inherent racism of the right though falsely attributed by the right to the inclusive left.

Additionally for the right, all Muslims are tagged as militant Islamicists. Asylum seekers and immigrants are cast in the same light. The definition of "extremism" was continuously widened by the Tory government and used as the basis of exclusion from policy forums and crackdowns on protesters, forgetting that the Tory party has its own share of extremists, racists, and misogynists. Another potential target was anyone who, being relaxed about others' identities, was labelled as members of the woke culture. These targets for othering continue to be "tested" in the marketplace, with the owners and controllers of populist media hard at work experimenting with what trope will work best with a poor and insecure populace.

We resembled the Weimar Republic: our polity daily fragmented into millenarian factions seeking the support of the desperately alienated with nowhere to go. The mobilisation of hatred and blame. Brexit became an amalgam of othering. A lumping together of ghosts and shadows, like Don Quixote tilting at windmills with the support of Sancho Panza, more concerned about his next meal, just like a significant proportion of the UK population. Devotees of a freedom, but only for those who ironically desire to oppress others via negative labelling and violence—culture wars. The comfortable patrician and officer classes making way for the boorish corporals, as the new line of defence for Ponzi capitalism—beer in public, champagne in private. In the Weimar Republic, people stood quietly by, hoping their time as a target of such hate would not come, but it did. And as it will again in the US if a "wounded" Trump pulls off the election in November. That discourse remains in the UK, too, as we cower and listen to the latest oral atrocities of the Reform Party—our latest incarnation of the uber-right.

The Tories persisted with dark arts until their collapse at the polls, announcing another budget last spring. Facing the prospect of defeat, in how many ways could they sabotage the future over which the Labour Party might preside? Who cares about the people? On the back of rising inequality and poverty, the votes of those frightened but clinging to exploitative work matter: so, bring in the "appearance" of tax cuts for such "working" families while taxes and mortgages have actually risen.

During the election, the Tories accused Labour of seeking to increase income tax, having themselves raised it to its highest point historically. This "tax scare" tactic was used throughout the election through the honeyed words of "hard-working families" needing more of their own money, while duped voters flounder as public services are further cut despite warnings even from the neo-liberal IMF. With Labour long signalling the removal of non-dom tax avoidance to divert 3.6 billion pounds to the NHS and school meals, the Tories then parked their tanks on Labour's lawn with their own non-dom proposal riddled with loopholes in order to fund populist tax cuts, even though the polls indicated the maintenance of public services is preferred. With such cynicism, no wonder support for the Tories came down to 24 percent of a low turnout, itself the dangerous sign of an alienated society.

Free and fair elections are no longer sacred in the UK either. The Tories worked hard on voter suppression within the UK by insisting there is widespread fraud, especially among Labour-voting Muslim areas apparently, thus requiring formal ID in the polling booth, which inhibits the poor—an estimated 400,000 denied the vote. Meanwhile, they extended the franchise to three million overseas expats who seek to escape UK taxes, banking on their bizarre pro-Brexit preferences!

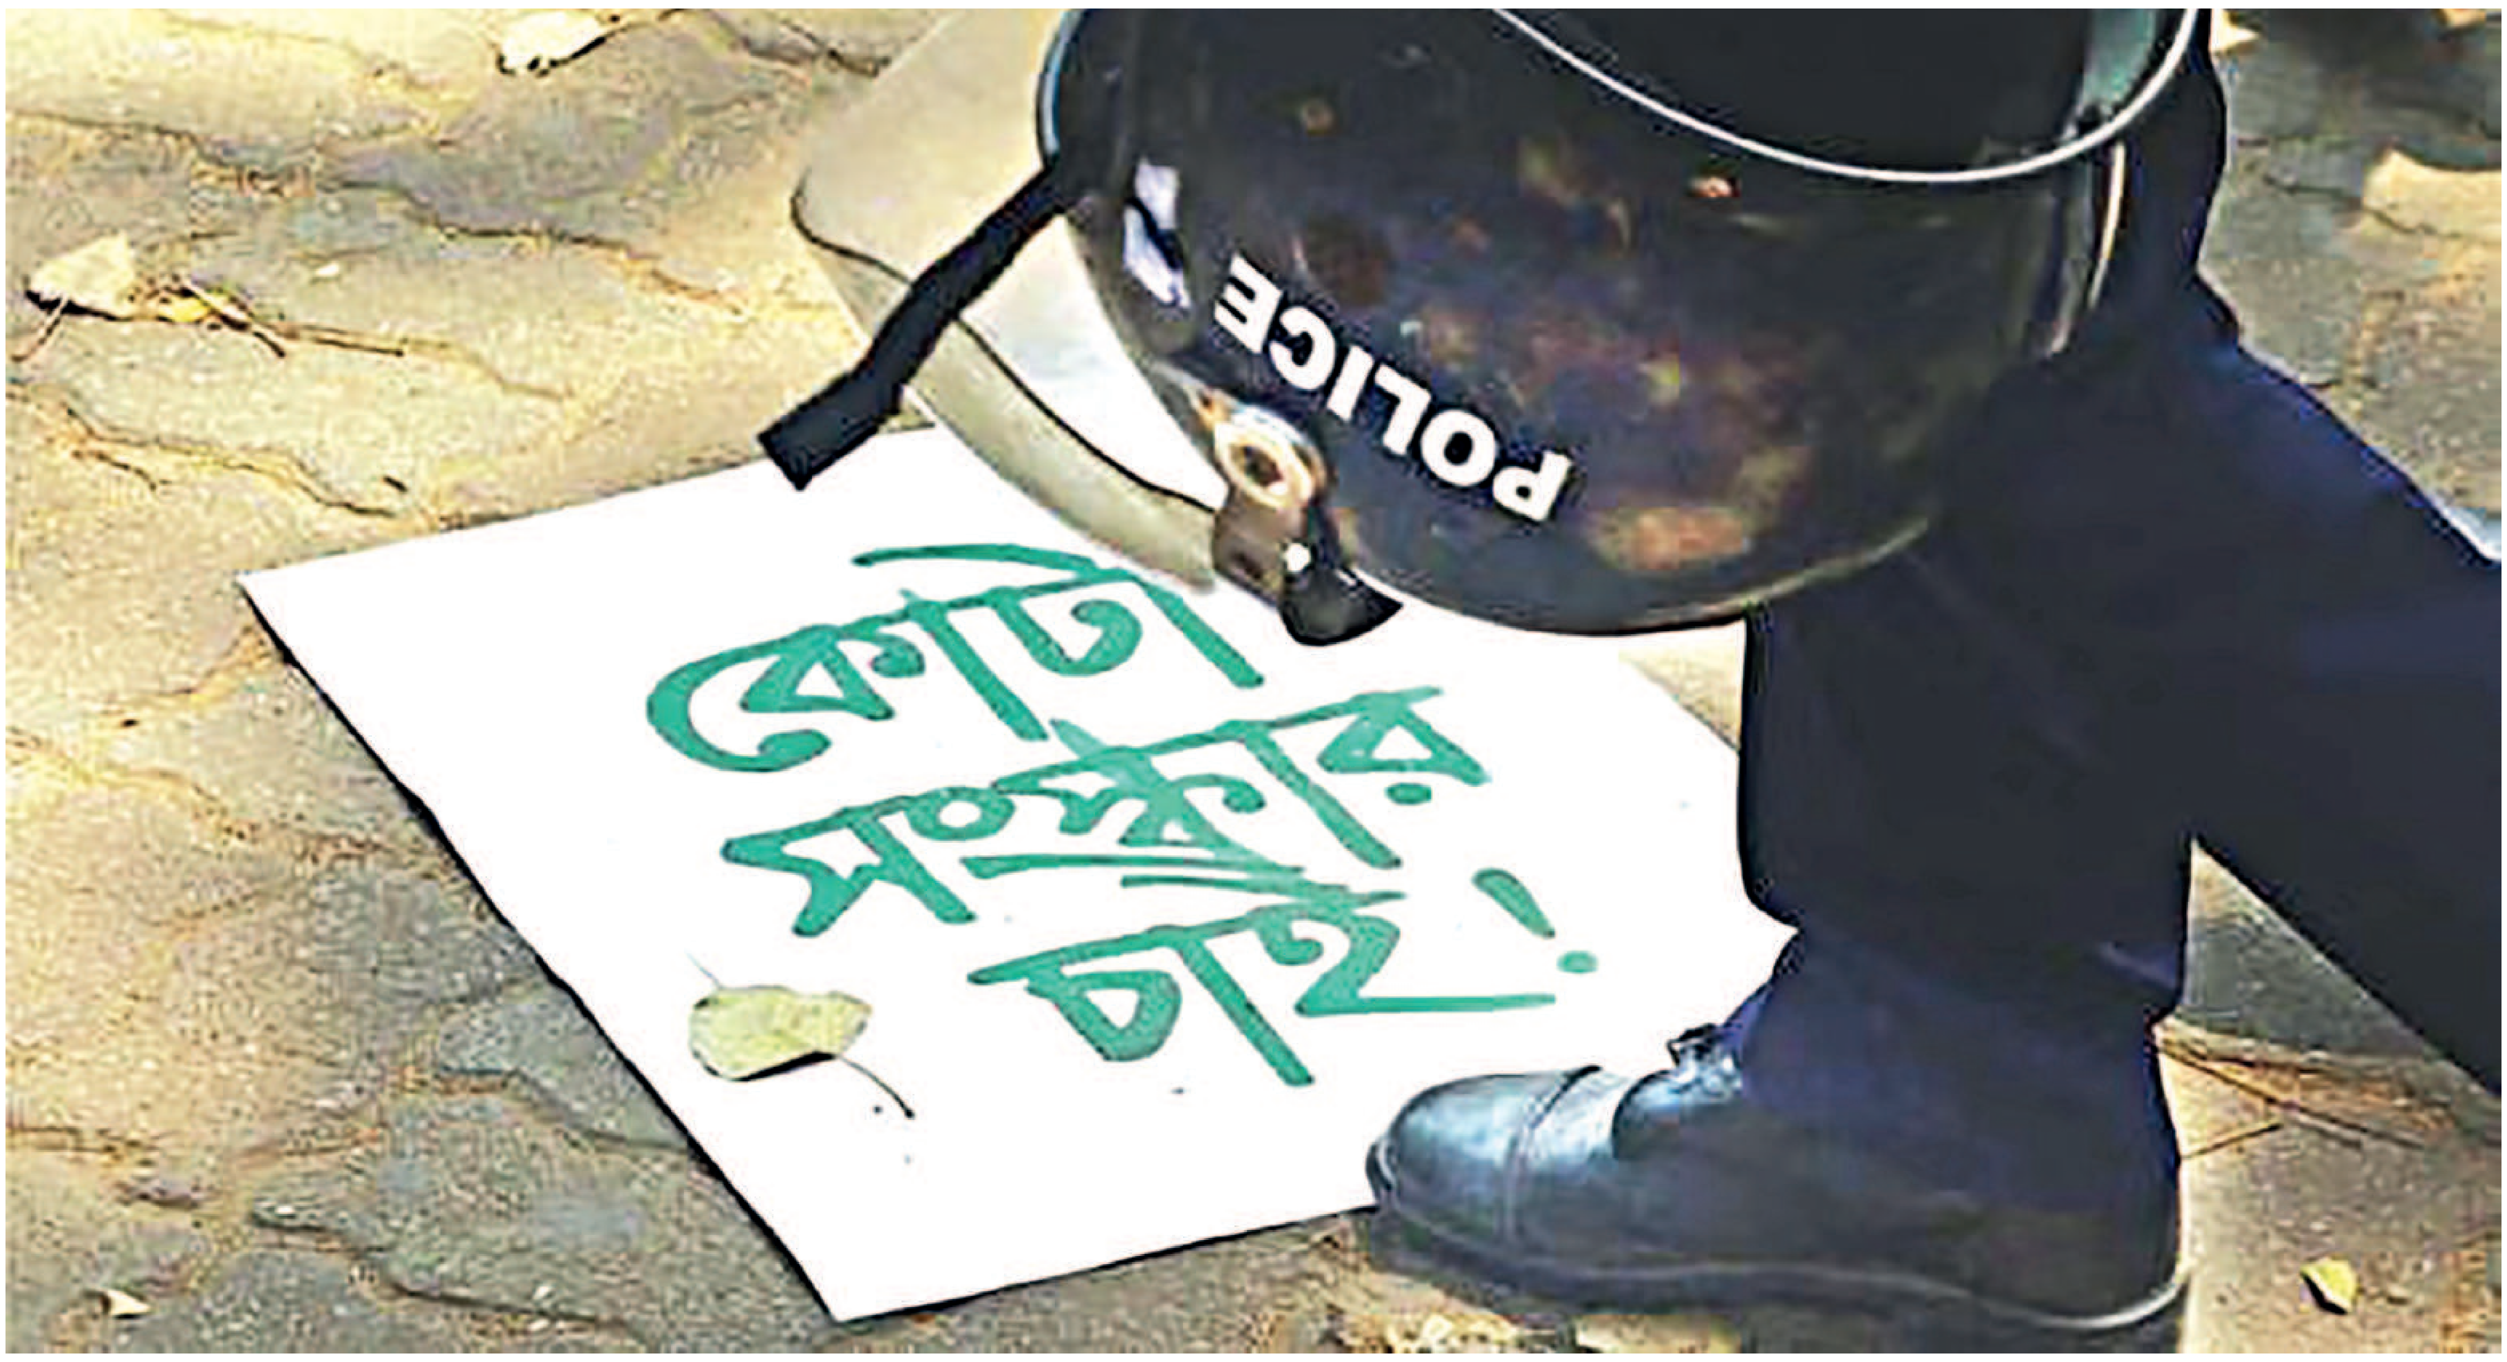
During Covid, the Tory leadership behaved like Italy's Christian Democrats and the mafia in the past by fast-tracking PPE contracts through personal "VIP lanes" for their mates to make millions and then contribute as donors to Tory election coffers. Before this, they attempted to bypass the parliament by illegally proroguing it in order to use a statutory instrument for the hardest version of Brexit.

Strangely, these advocates of sovereignty had no compunctions of undermining it when it suited. And when the UK Supreme Court ruled on the illegality of their manoeuvre, supporters in the tabloid press owned by Tory donors headlined the judges as "enemies of the people." Also, they sought to extract the UK from international human rights treaties (some originally drafted by the UK) in order to remove asylum seekers to Rwanda as a deterrent to UK entry, and to separate families of visa seekers and to remove citizenship from long-term residents, e.g., from the Caribbean, without appeal. Meanwhile, such asylum seekers were corralled into camps, denied an opportunity to work and, ironically, to pay taxes. When challenged, the Tories used their "elected dictatorship" to legislate that Rwanda is a safe haven with a good human rights record (so not a deterrent then?) in defiance of another Supreme Court judgment! The laws to quash protests, e.g., environment, have become draconian. This list of activity from neo-fascist playbook can be extended. How should we think about it?

Some observers have referred to 14 years of Tory policy as planned penury, shifting more of the population to insecurity and reliance on voluntarism. Some concluding facts for the day of the election (July 4): the UK government debt was highest as percent of GDP since the 1960s; eight million waiting for health treatment for 18-52 weeks; four million children in poverty households; lowest rate of aggregate economic growth since 1948 and worse per capita; business investment almost 10 percent lower than the rest of G7 countries; fall of UK goods trade below G7 since Brexit by 15 percent; UK tax revenues as share of GDP highest since World War II; real average weekly earnings in 2023 below their 2003 peak (under Labour); almost three million food bank parcels given out in a year up to March 2023 (higher now); high economic inactivity including a surge in long-term sickness now to a record high of 2.8 million; inflation up to 11 percent last year, reduced to two percent for the election and likely to rise again; mortgages on family homes up by hundreds and even thousands of pounds a month; energy prices at record highs; local government authorities filing for bankruptcy, at least seven so far, due to cuts in central funding for statutory adult and child care; local council tax to rise by 4.5 percent, funded at the household level by alleged tax cuts on income; reduction in capital gains tax (i.e., for the rich) down from 28 to 24 percent (Labour now revising this); increase in licences for North Sea oil and gas extraction (now revoked, though a disastrous "pipeline" of agreed projects remains); new gas-fired power stations approved, and Tories fighting off a protest against a new coal mine; completion of new rail infrastructure in London, while cancelling links to England's northern cities; and a drastic reduction in UK overseas aid.

Only space prevents me from continuing this litany of failure, which sustains the Tory need for othering racial and ethnic minorities and immigrants alongside its "culture" wars.

I simply ask: in what sense was the UK, under the Tories for the last 14 years, a role model for anywhere? Believe it or not, it remains a rich society, the sixth richest economy globally. But only for its top two quintiles. Under the Tories, the emperor lost its clothes—if it ever had any. Its international rhetoric of "leave no one behind" is a hollow slogan at home. And now a Tory leadership race is seeking to leave more of the UK population behind.



RIGHTS WATCH

On the disproportionate use of force on protests

Especially when an unarmed or lightly armed person is killed, it is deemed to be disproportionate. Furthermore, it needs to be remembered that right of self-defence is not a right of the attacker but rather of the victim, which does not apply to the law enforcement agencies in most situations.

RAFID AZAD SAUMIK

The reason we have law enforcement agencies in modern states is to protect the rights of the citizens. However, when disproportionate force is used against the citizens by states using these agencies, the very same rights are violated. Below is an analysis keeping the quota reform movement in the background.

Freedom of assembly and freedom of expression are fundamental rights as per our Constitution under articles 37 and 39, and also under our international obligations e.g., the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. Restrictions may be imposed on such rights but they have to be reasonable, objective, and proportionate.

Under section 128 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898 (CrPC), the law enforcement agencies may disperse an assembly by force. However, the amount of force needs to be proportionate to the circumstance of each particular case (Queen-Empress v Subba Naik And Ors, 1898). Evidently, if a protester is shot (even with a rubber bullet) when he/she is keeping his/her arms open expressing anger towards the inhumane response of the law enforcement, it cannot be regarded as a proportionate response.

The law enforcement agency may argue that they are justified in using such force as self-defence. However, the fourth paragraph of section 99 of the Penal Code 1860 (PC) clearly emphasises the requirements of necessity and proportionality. Especially when an unarmed or lightly armed person is killed, it is deemed to be disproportionate (State of U.P. v Ram Swarup, 1974). Furthermore, it needs to be remembered that right of self-defence is not a right of the attacker but rather of the victim, which does not apply to the law enforcement agencies in most situations.

Additionally, police may use force to effect arrest of the protesters, which is allowed under section 46 of the CrPC. However, judicial interpretations of this provision again shows that the actions of the police need to comply with the requirements of necessity and proportionality (Dakhi Singh v State, 1955). Section 46(3) also prohibits the causing of death while using such force unless the person is accused of an offence punishable with death or imprisonment for life. It needs to be noted that the Police Regulations Bengal 1943 (PRB) in regulation no. 154, 155 mention similar requirements.

Next, coming to the question of criminal liability and legal defences, criminal charges under sections 302, 304, 323, 325, etc of the Penal Code can be brought against law enforcement officers for causing deaths and injuries to peaceful protesters. Section 132 of CrPC makes the job difficult as it restricts the option to initiate prosecution against such person without the sanction of the government. Even if prosecution is initiated against the responsible officers, the same provision mentions the 'good faith' and 'superior order' defences. As for the good faith defence, it requires due care and attention, and as for the 'superior order' defence, it cannot be pleaded when the order is manifestly illegal.

Moreover, the legal defences under sections 76 and 79 of the PC of 'believing in good faith to be bound by law' and 'believing in good faith to be justified by law' also do not apply when the law enforcement agencies could not have reasonably believed that they were obligated to or justified in using such disproportionate force that result in deaths (Jahir Mia and Islam Howlader v State 13 DLR 857).

But only putting all the blame on the subordinate police officers is unfair and ineffective. The superior police officers who enable and allow such acts can be held responsible as well as abettors. The legal defences for them should fail when the acts that cause large number of deaths and injuries are not the result of a mere mistake of fact in good faith but rather utter disregard to the principle of proportionality.

At times, attacks and use of force befall on protesters from non-state individuals or political activists. Needless to mention that there is absolutely no legal justification of such attacks when attackers are not part of the law enforcement force and have no authority to interfere with protests and assemblies. Furthermore, attacks, killings and human rights violations often also come as results of continuous dehumanisation, incitement to violence, and acts of abetment in the online sphere. Such acts clearly constitute offences under sections 25, 31, etc. of the (infamous) Cyber Security Act 2023 and other laws.

Lastly, in addition to criminal remedies, constitutional remedy is also available under Articles 44 and 102 of the Constitution. Indeed, for violation of Article 32 (fundamental right to life and liberty) the state has been asked to provide compensation in an array of cases.

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

The new quota scheme

LAW DESK

Positive discrimination or affirmative action schemes are permitted under articles 28(4) and 29(3) of the Constitution of Bangladesh. The preamble to the constitution envisions an egalitarian and exploitation-free society where there is fundamental freedom and dignity.

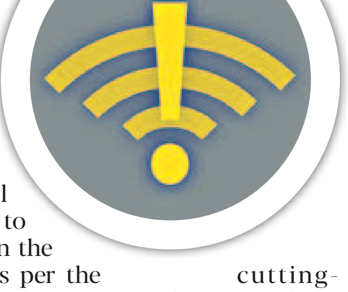
Indeed, quota reform is a policy decision, however, policy decisions are always to be guided by the fundamental principles enshrined in our constitution. In order to do 'complete justice' under the tenets of article 104 of the constitution, the Appellate Division (AD) of the Supreme Court went on to resolve the contention and also recommend specific percentages of quotas, while acknowledging the government's prerogative to revise the same as/if needed. After the AD overturned the decision of the High Court Division, the government circular was made in the same light. The new quota scheme is applicable to all government jobs across all grades.

As per the circular, this new quota scheme is applicable to all governmental, semi-governmental, autonomous, semi-autonomous, self-governed and statutory authority (shoshashito and shongbidhiboddho kortripokkho). Overall, seven per cent quotas are now reserved within the scheme. Five per cent quotas are reserved for the children of freedom fighters, martyred freedom fighters, and Beerangonas. One per cent quotas is reserved for the indigenous community and one per cent for persons with physical disabilities and 'Tritiyo Lingo'. The circular also says that if the quota seats are not filled, the seats will be filled from people who have no quota. Except this seven per cent, rest of the seats are now open for all based on merit. The new circular will come into effect immediately.

While this is certainly a welcome move on part of the government, we ought to still reflect on how things could pan out, had there been meaningful dialogue between the government and the protesting students early on.

RIGHTS ADVOCACY

Internet outage and OUR RIGHTS



At present, internet is no more a luxury, rather a day-to-day necessity for our survival. Internet not only keeps us in touch with the world at large, it also works as a medium to exercise an array of civil and political rights of the citizens (ranging from freedom of speech and expression to the right to use and impart information).

Our Constitution enshrines a range of civil and political rights which are subject to reasonable restriction. The international human rights instruments also are mindful to the necessity to put reasonable restrictions on the exercise of rights and freedoms. However, as per the cutting-edge jurisprudence on human rights, such restrictions cannot be imposed in a way so that the 'minimum core' of concerned rights get infringed.

Evidently, the digital divide makes it a challenge for everyone to use internet on par. However, its absence affects almost everyone in a globalised and internet-based economy where transportation of basic goods and services depend on how internet function. Moreover, internet outage tends to have a disproportionate impact on people who are otherwise marginalised and depend on uninterrupted services of internet for basic monetary transactions to live on.

It is true that internet may also work as a medium for spreading mis- and disinformation. However, it is important that any measure taken to tackle such spread is necessary in a democratic society and is informed by fundamental human rights of all. Furthermore, any measure to tackle such spread also has to be proportionate to the risk or threat sought to be evaded. We also need to be mindful that absence of internet too may create a convenient breeding ground for mis- and disinformation to spread.

In sum, internet has its own share of boons and banes. However, in today's world, internet plays a major role in keeping necessary services accessible. In any case, the absence of internet strikes at the root of many of our lives, livelihood, and exercise of rights.

LEGENDARY LEDECKY in pursuit of more history

AFP, Paris

American great Katie Ledecky remains on course for enriching her greatness but admitted it is not "getting easier" after powering to the Olympic 1500m freestyle title yesterday, adding an eighth gold medal to her glittering collection.

The 27-year-old was untouchable, surging home in 15min 30.02sec, an Olympic record and more than 10 seconds ahead of France's Anastasiia Kirpichnikova in second. Germany's Isabel Gose won bronze.

The win elevated her as the first woman swimmer to win gold at four Olympics.

Among men, only fellow Americans Michael Phelps and Ryan Lochte have achieved the feat.

It was also her 12th medal overall after adding a bronze in the 400m freestyle behind Australian winner Ariarne Titmus.

Ledecky will also swim the 800m freestyle in Paris in the afternoon today, with Titmus standing in her way of winning a fourth straight title.

Should Ledecky manage to make it to the 800m freestyle final, she will have a chance to climb a step higher in her already storied career as she will be vying for a ninth Olympic gold, a feat only achieved by gymnast Larisa Latynina of the Soviet Union.

But so far for Ledecky, landing an eighth gold was a reward for three more years of hard toil after she claimed the title in Tokyo.

"It's not easy, it doesn't get any easier so I do try to enjoy it each year," she said.

"There's different perspective that I have different years. Different challenges that you face each year in training and as you get older.

"I definitely appreciate it a lot and have a lot more perspective than I did back in Rio or London."

In the 1500m freestyle Thursday, Ledecky went out hard and was a body length clear after 100m with her lead growing to five seconds at the halfway mark.

She never relented, her advantage continuing to build as she reinforced her reputation as the greatest distance swimmer the sport has seen.

The result was never in doubt with Ledecky setting the last six world records and now holding the fastest 20 times ever swum.

"My mind wandered a lot," she admitted. "I was thinking about my teammates that I train with back home."

A rivalry to spice up Olympics football

AFP, Paris

There is no love lost between France and Argentina on the football field these days and their quarterfinal meeting in Bordeaux on Friday will add spice to the men's Olympic tournament.

The last-eight clash between the rivals is in many ways exactly what was needed for a competition lacking in star names.

It will be the first meeting of the nations since Argentina players were recorded singing racist chants about their French counterparts as they celebrated winning the Copa America in mid-July: a video posted by Argentina's Enzo Fernandez featured a song sung by some members of the squad about France's players of African descent.

FIFA announced that it would investigate the chants, which targeted France's star striker Kylian Mbappe among others, and included racist and homophobic insults.

Argentina players have already been booed by rival fans during the Olympic tournament and can expect another heated welcome from the French crowd.

"With everything that has happened recently, everyone in France was affected, so we will see what happens in the quarterfinals," warned France's Crystal Palace striker Jean-Philippe Mateta after the hosts finished the group phase with three wins out of three.

Friday's showdown will also be the first between the sides since the 2022 World Cup final in Qatar which Argentina won on penalties after an epic 3-3 draw.

Only two members of Argentina's Olympic squad, Nicolas Otamendi and Julian Alvarez, played in the 2022 game, and none of France's.

That perhaps removes a little of the edge, but in purely footballing terms it will still be a fascinating contest.

Argentina are chasing a third Olympic gold after triumphing in 2004 and in 2008, the latter with a young Lionel Messi in their ranks.

France are going for football gold on home soil 40 years after taking the title at the 1984 Games in Los Angeles.

Both sides do have legendary coaches, however -- France with 1998 World Cup-winner Thierry Henry, Argentina with his fellow former Barcelona star Javier Mascherano, who won Olympic gold as a player in Athens and in Beijing.

Whoever prevails will advance to a semifinal in Lyon next Monday against either Egypt or 2004 silver medallists Paraguay, who meet in the last eight in Marseille.

It will be the first meeting between Argentina and France since Argentine players were recorded singing racist chants about their French counterparts as they celebrated winning the Copa America in mid-July.

This will also be the first face-off between the sides since the 2022 World Cup final in Qatar which Argentina won on penalties after an epic 3-3 draw.

Pan's 'unreal' swim ignites debate

AFP, Paris

Australian Olympian-turned-swimming coach Brett Hawke questioned the legitimacy of Pan Zhanle's record-breaking 100m freestyle world record.

Teenager Pan secured Olympic gold on Wednesday with a time of 46.40 seconds, surpassing his own world record of 46.80 seconds set in February, winning by a body length.

Hawke, a former Australian Olympic sprinter who coached Brazil's Cesar Cielo, the first man to break 47 seconds, asserted that Pan's record time was "not humanly possible."

"I am angry at that swim... for a number of reasons," he said in an Instagram video.

"That's not real, you don't beat those guys -- Kyle Chalmers, David Popovici, Jack Alexy -- by one full body length in 100 freestyle. That's not humanly possible, okay," added Hawke.

The victory occurred amid a doping controversy involving the Chinese swimmers.

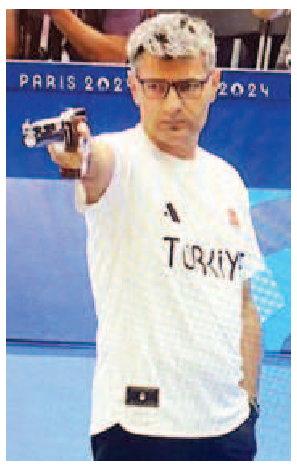
"I was tested after the race and we will see the result," said Pan.

Silver medallist Kyle Chalmers, who won 100m gold in Rio and silver in Tokyo, accepted Pan's performance without question.

Asked if he thought the record was clean, he Australian replied: "... I trust that he's done everything he possibly can to be there and he deserves that gold medal."

Dikec's silver with casual style gains viral fame

SPORTS DESK



Turkish shooter Yusuf Dikec has become a viral sensation for his laid-back style and nonchalant attitude on his way to winning a silver medal in the 10-metre air pistol mixed team event of the Paris Olympics.

On Wednesday, Dikec turned up in a plain t-shirt, wearing standard spectacles, without any specialised optical gadgets or noise-cancelling headphones like his contemporaries and took aim with his left arm inside his pocket.

The 51-year-old, a former non-commissioned officer of the Turkish Gendarmerie, later gave a simple explanation behind his unique shooting style, "I did not need special equipment. I'm a natural, a natural shooter," Dikec reportedly told Turkish media after winning the medal.

He and his partner Sevval Ilayda Tarhan made history together, winning Turkey's first ever medal in shooting. The duo came close to winning the top prize, but lost 16-14 to the Serbia's Zorana Arunović and Damir Mikec in the final.

However, social media cared little, as it exploded over the images and clips of Dikec casually shooting his way to an Olympic medal.

Many social media users have also joined in the fun, with memes referencing popular characters from movies -- calling him "Turkish John Wick" for instance -- and video games.

This is the fifth Olympic appearance for Dikec, who has been competing in every edition since Beijing 2008.

Dikec has won several medals from World and European Championships in various pistol events, including gold medals in ISSF World Cup and European Championships.

"Happy isn't enough to describe how I feel," said Zheng Qinwen after she stunned top seed Iga Swiatek in straight sets (6-2, 7-5) in Paris yesterday, becoming the first Chinese player to reach an Olympic Games tennis singles final.

Bangladesh women's football team captain Sabina Khatun, Maria Manda, Monika Chakma and Ritu Porna Chakma have been offered contracts from Bhutan's Royal Thimphu College SC to play for them in the preliminary stage of the inaugural AFC Women's Champions League on August 25-31.

"During the two FIFA friendlies against Bhutan last week, Royal Thimphu approached us to allow Sabina, Ritu, Maria and Monika to play for them in the upcoming AFC Women's Champions League," said Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) women's wing chairman Mahfuza Akhter Kiron.

"We initially denied to release players for the sake of their preparation for the upcoming SAFF Women's Championship, but later agreed to release them after consulting with head coach Peter Butler."

Royal Thimphu College have been pitted against Iran's Bam Khatoon and Hong Kong's Kitchee SC in group stage of the 13-team competition, devoid of any Bangladesh club.

Quader now says no shoot-on-sight order was issued

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said the directive to "shoot on sight was misinterpreted", and that the order was not given to law enforcers.

He said this while speaking at a press briefing at the party president's Dhanmondi office.

However, he did not clarify who was misinterpreting the order.

On July 20, Quader announced the government's decision to impose nationwide curfew and deploy armed forces.

He also mentioned at the time "shoot-on-sight" order while talking to journalists after a meeting of the AL-led 14-party alliance at the Gono Bhaban.

He, however, did not say who gave the order and to whom.

Hours after that announcement, the home ministry issued a gazette notification imposing a nationwide curfew and deploying armed forces to assist the civil administration in ensuring national security and protecting lives and properties.

But the government did not issue any gazette notification regarding the "shoot-on-sight" order.

The Daily Star yesterday looked into the websites of the home ministry and BG Press, but found no such gazette notification there.

Yesterday, Mohammad Ali Arafat, state minister for Death toll rises to 201

One more person, who suffered shotgun pellet wounds during the recent clashes centring the quota protests, died at Popular Hospital in the capital's Dhanmondi area yesterday.

Selim Talukder, 31, a factory worker in Narayanganj, was shot in the Rampura area on July 18.

According to his family, Selim was on his way to the office from his residence in the capital's Middle Badda when he was caught up in a clash between the police and protesters.

Selim's sister said that her brother suffered at least 56 pellet wounds in his chest and 18 in his head and underwent treatment in the intensive care unit of a private hospital for 14 days.

With this, at least 201 lives have now been lost since July 16 in clashes centring the protesting seeking

QUOTA REFORM MOVEMENT

Free all detainees within 24 hours

Demands eminent citizens' platform

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

All the detainees, particularly the students who staged quota reform protests, must be released within 24 hours, a group of eminent citizens demanded yesterday afternoon.

Speaking at a human chain, they said although the six coordinators of the quota reform movement have been released, many people, including students, teachers and ordinary citizens, are still in police custody.

The programme was organised under the banner of Aggrieved Citizens' Society in front of the office of the DMP's Detective Branch on Minto Road.

"The people of Bangladesh pay taxes. Using guns and bullets bought with taxpayers' money, police personnel shot people, including students," said Debapriya Bhattacharya, a distinguished fellow at the Centre for Policy Dialogue.

He demanded probes by international organisations like the United Nations into the recent killings of people, including students and children.

He said educational institutions must be reopened after the withdrawal of all law enforcement and security agency personnel from the campuses.

Prof Asif Nazrul of Dhaka University's law department said, "We want justice for the killings. We want those who ordered the killings to be brought to book."

He said three out of the six coordinators of the quota reform protests were tortured by a state agency before being picked up from a city hospital. Those involved in their illegal detention should face abduction charges, he added.

Iftekharuzzaman, executive director of Transparency International Bangladesh, said all law enforcement agencies, including the DB, have "resorted to lying and cheating to deceive the people".

The repeated deception has fostered a belief among the law enforcers that they can act with impunity indefinitely, he said.

"Admit the truth that you have shot students indiscriminately, detained them without any cause, and wronged many, including students and teachers, depriving them of their rights."

Mentioning the arrest of a 16-year-old boy over the killing of Abu Sayed in Rangpur, Shaheen Anam, executive director of Manusher Jonno Foundation (MJF), said, "Didn't we see how Abu Sayed was killed?"

She said students have been picked up by law

16-yr-old Alfi gets bail after 13 days in jail

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Dinajpur

Alfi Shahriar Mahim

The 16-year-old boy, Alfi Shahriar Mahim, who was arrested in the murder case of Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayed on July 18, got bail yesterday after languishing in jail for 13 days.

Mostafa Kamal, judge of Women and Children Repression Prevention Tribunal-1 of Rangpur, granted him bail after a short hearing, said Alfi's lawyer Jobaidul Islam.

The lawyer said the case, which was filed with Tajhat Police Station under Rangpur Metropolitan Police, was transferred to the children's court as the accused was underage. The hearing was scheduled to be held on August 4 after Alfi's father filed a bail petition on July 30, said the lawyer.

He added that the hearing was held yesterday as police took the step.

Alfi's father Md Shahjalal confirmed that his son walked out of Rangpur Jail at 5:18pm.

On July 19, Alfi was produced before a Rangpur court that sent him to jail, said the lawyer.

Alfi, an HSC first-year student at Rangpur Police Lines School and College, is 16 years and 10 months old,

Israel claims killing Hamas military chief

Hamas neither confirms nor denies Deif's death; 35 more Palestinians killed in Gaza strikes

REUTERS, Jerusalem

The head of Hamas' military wing, Mohammed Deif, was killed in an Israeli airstrike in Gaza last month, the Israeli military said yesterday, a day after the group's political leader was assassinated in Tehran.

"The IDF (Israel Defence Forces) announces that on July 13th, 2024, IDF fighter jets struck in the area of Khan Yunis, and following an intelligence assessment, it can be confirmed that Mohammed Deif was eliminated in the strike," the military said.

Hamas neither confirmed nor denied the killing of Deif, but one official, Ezzat Rashaq, said any word on deaths of its leaders was its responsibility alone.

Mohammed Deif

The Israeli announcement came as crowds gathered in the Iranian capital for the funeral procession of Hamas' leader Isamil Haniyeh.

Iran and Hamas have blamed Haniyeh's killing on Israel, which has neither denied nor confirmed a role in the assassination. It did however confirm it killed a senior commander of the Lebanese Hezbollah movement in Beirut on Tuesday.

Yesterday, Hamas official Sami Abu Zuhri said Haniyeh's death would not weaken the group's fighters in Gaza.

But his death was the latest in a series that has targeted the group's leaders. Haniyeh's deputy, Saleh al-Arouri, was killed in a drone strike in Beirut in January. In March, Israel said it had killed Marwan Issa, Deif's deputy.

But now on the 300th day of offensive in Gaza, hopes for a hostage deal and ceasefire have dimmed.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said that at least 39,480 Palestinians have been killed in the Israeli offensive. The toll includes 35 deaths in 24 hours, according to ministry figures.

Yesterday, the Israeli military said it struck against dozens of Hamas targets in Gaza, including fighters and infrastructure. At least 13 people had been killed in the Israeli bombardments across the enclave, Gaza medics said.

An Israeli missile that hit a vehicle at the entrance of Al-Maghazi district in central Gaza killed six people and five more were killed in a strike on a house in nearby Nusseirat, medics said, while an airstrike in Gaza City killed two others.

East of Al-Maghazi, residents said tanks were firing as they tried to push deeper into the area.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken yesterday reiterated appeals for an end to fighting. He said achieving peace "starts with a ceasefire" and called on "all parties" to "stop escalatory actions".

674 cases filed so far over violence during quota protests; Rizvi placed on remand

STAR REPORT

At least 179 more people were arrested in the capital and elsewhere in 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday as the nationwide crackdown on alleged saboteurs as well as protesters and opposition parties continues.

Of them, 63 were arrested in the capital, and 116 in 27 districts, said police.

The Dhaka Metropolitan Police produced those arrested in the capital before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court of Dhaka yesterday.

The court sent most of them to jail and placed some of the arrestees on remand.

According to the latest count, at least 10,947 people, including students, BNP, and Jamaat-Shibir leaders and activists, have been arrested in 674 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts over the last 15 days since July 18.

Several thousand named and several hundred thousand unnamed individuals have been accused in these cases.

The cases were filed, mostly by police, with different police stations over violence, vandalism, arson, and killings.

The country witnessed violence on an unprecedented scale after the peaceful demonstrations for quota reform turned deadly on July 15 when Chhatra League attacked the protesting students on different university campuses.

Among those arrested in 27 districts in the 36 hours till 6:00pm yesterday, 11 each were held in Khulna, Rajshahi, and Pabna; nine in

Spotlight on American sprint duo

Brash, brazen, brilliant. American sprint duo Noah Lyles and Sha'Carri Richardson will look to live up to their billing as Olympic 100m favourites when the track and field programme at the Paris Games starts on Friday.

The reigning world champions are the stars of a recently-released Netflix docuseries entitled "Sprint", giving an up-close and personal view into their lives on and off the track.

At the Stade de France -- with those cameras still turning for season two -- the debate will be whether Lyles, who won three golds at last year's Budapest world championships, can beat defending champion Marcell Jacobs of Italy and go on to be crowned as the rightful successor to sprint king Usain Bolt.

Junta airstrikes on border hospital kill 10

AFP, Bangkok

Myanmar military airstrikes hit a hospital in a city controlled by an ethnic minority armed group close to the China border killing 10 people, local media reported yesterday.

Military planes carried out at least two air strikes on Laukkai city, normally home to some 25,000 people, late on Thursday night, a resident told AFP, requesting anonymity for security reasons.

Local media quoted one resident as saying 10 civilians were killed in the strike.

Myanmar's northern Shan state has been rocked by fighting since late June when an alliance of ethnic minority armed groups renewed an offensive against the military along a major trade highway to China.

The Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) group have held Laukkai since January after more than 2,000 junta troops surrendered there in one of the military's biggest defeats in decades.

MNDAA spokesman Li Jiawen told AFP a military airstrike had hit a hospital in Laukkai, but he had no information yet on casualties.

The protest started with artists painting pictures of demonstrations on red canvas. The performance artists staged a street drama depicting how the protesting students, including children, were shot by the law enforcers.

A group of urban planners formed a human chain at Banglamotor protesting the recent killings while medical students and doctors demonstrated at the Central Shaheed Minar around 10:00am.

Authors, poets, and publishers formed a human chain in front of the Bishwo Shahitto Kendro under the banner of "Poets and Writers against Countrywide Arrests and Oppression".

Authors Shahidullah Faraezi, Mohammad Nazimuddin, and Shudipto Salam, Dhaka University professor and researcher Mohammad Asaduzzaman, poets Tokon Thakur, Bokul Ashraf, and Kajol Shahnewaz, among many others, took part in the protest.

Speaking at the programme, Tokon Thakur said, "We are speechless seeing what has happened centring the quota reform protests. We express our solidarity with the students. We must speak out now. We condemn the brutal killings."

Some teachers and rights activists under the banner of "Pratibad Mancha" formed a human chain in front of the press club.

Addressing the programme, Dhaka University professor Robaet Ferdous and rights activist Nur Khan held the government responsible for the recent killings.

Meanwhile, 626 faculty members of BRAC University yesterday expressed solidarity with the ongoing protest.

In a statement, they said they were deeply shocked by the recent violence that led to the loss of lives and serious injuries. The teachers demanded those responsible be held accountable.

"As educatorscommitted to fostering a just, democratic and inclusive society, we stand by the rights of students to peaceful and legitimate protest. We are deeply concerned that this right has not been respected, and profoundly disturbed by the ongoing harassment that many students continue to face."

Turkey arrests 99 suspected IS members

AFP, Istanbul

Turkey's interior minister said yesterday that 99 suspected members of the Islamic State jihadist group had been detained in recent raids across the country.

The arrests were made mainly in Ankara and in Izmir in the west, as well as in the centre, east and south, Interior Minister Ali Yerlikaya posted on X.

"99 suspects have been arrested in the GURZ-4 operations over the past three days," Yerlikaya said.

"We will not tolerate any terrorist," he added.

Turkish authorities have made several mass arrests of alleged IS members in recent years, most recently a roundup of 147 people announced in March.

After those arrests, Yerlikaya said police had detained a total of 2,919 people suspected of links to the jihadist group.

Two of the assailants who massacred 145 people at the Crocus City Hall in Moscow last March, an attack for which IS claimed responsibility, had spent several weeks in Turkey before heading to Russia, according to local authorities.

Witnesses said students began demonstrating in front of the Board Masjid in Habiganj after Juma prayers while Chhatra League activists took position in Town Hall area.

At one point, locals and activists of different political parties joined the students and started marching. Chhatra League members intercepted the procession and a clash began. Police then used firearms and teargas, leaving at least 50 wounded.

The agitators also threw brickbats and stones at the residence of Habiganj-3 lawmaker Abu Zahir.

In the capital's Uttara-11, at least three people were injured by rubber bullets in a clash between protesters, police and ruling party activists in front of Zamzam Tower around 4:15pm.

The clash broke out when ruling party supporters attacked marching students.

Police fired rubber bullets, threw stun grenades, and used tear gas shells to disperse the crowd, according to sources.

A witness said, "Some people in helmets shot at the students... Coming under attack, the students ran to different alleyways."

Another witness told this newspaper that a student named Tahmid Huzaifa had taken treatment at an Uttara hospital after being hit by rubber bullets.

A nurse at Uttara Adhunik Hospital, requesting anonymity, said they treated two students, who suffered rubber bullet wounds.

Tohidul Islam, additional deputy commissioner (Uttara) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said the protesters set fire to a training school of Special Branch in Uttara.

"We brought the situation under control by 5:30pm by using teargas and sound grenades," he added.

In Khulna, police fired rubber bullets, used teargas, and charged batons as students marched in front of Khulna University around 3:00pm. At least 50 protesters were injured.

Students later gathered near the Sonadanga bus terminal and marched towards Gollamari.

As police swooped on them, they took positions near the local Met office and Zero Point areas.

members, demanding an end to mass arrests, justice for the "July massacre", release of arrested students, withdrawal of curfew, reopening of educational institutions, and the resignation of the government.

Earlier around noon, people started thronging the press club area with banners and posters. By 2:00pm, the street was filled to the brim with demonstrators.

Protesters held placards with slogans such as "Step Down Hasina," "Chhatro Hottar Bichar Chai [We demand justice for the killings of students]," and "Bullets May Hit, But We Won't Quit".

Members of cultural organisations, including Udichi Shilpi Goshti and Charon Sangskritik Kendra, and several cultural personalities recited poems, sang songs, and staged street dramas expressing solidarity with the protest.

After offering Juma prayers at the Baitul Mukarram National Mosque, several hundred people joined "Droho Jatra". Before that, they paraded through different streets.

The protesters then marched towards the Central Shaheed Minar.

Abu Taleb said, "More than 200 people, including students, were killed. We want justice for them. My daughter could have been killed. I joined the protest so that no such incidents [killings] take place in future. The government must take responsibility for the killings and resign immediately."

At the end of the programme, Rageeb Nayeem, president of a section of Bangladesh Chhatra Union, announced tomorrow's mass procession.

Tunisia women jailed for buying candidate endorsements

AFP, Tunis

Tunisia has sentenced four women to jail after convicting them of buying signatures of endorsement for a would-be challenger to President Kais Saied in upcoming elections, a court spokesman said yesterday.

Candidate registration for the October 6 presidential election began on Monday and closes at 5:00 pm (1600 GMT) next Tuesday.

Saied critics from across the political spectrum have complained that new, tougher endorsement requirements are making it nearly impossible to get on the ballot paper.

To be listed, candidates are required to provide signatures from 10,000 registered voters, with at least 500 voter signatures per constituency.

"The court sentenced three women to two-year sentences, which they began serving immediately, and another, who was tried in absentia, to four years," said Alaeddine Aouadi, spokesman for the court in the northwestern town of Jendouba.

Protesters, mainly Houthi supporters, hold posters of Hezbollah senior commander Fuad Shukr, who was killed in an Israeli strike, and assassinated Hamas chief Ismail Haniyeh, at a rally to show solidarity with Palestinians in the Gaza Strip, in Sanaa, Yemen yesterday.

Asif Mahmud, one of six coordinators of the quota reform protests who was in the custody of Detective Branch, also shared a message identical to Mahin's.

Meanwhile, Abdul Hannan, another coordinator, said in a live stream on Facebook, that, on behalf of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement, they are announcing countrywide demonstrations for today.

"No one will cooperate with this government."

He urged all to participate in these programmes so that the government could no longer function.

Contacted, Hannan also confirmed their programmes for today and tomorrow.

Their nine-point demand includes an apology from Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina, and the resignations of Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan, Road Transport and Bridges Minister Obaidul Quader, Education Minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury, Law Minister Anisul Huq, State Minister for Information and Broadcasting Mohammad Ali Arafat, and State Minister for Post, Telecommunications, and Information Technology Zunaid Ahmed Palak.

Andaleeve Partho denied bail, sent to jail

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

A Dhaka court yesterday rejected a bail petition of Bangladesh Jatiyo Party (Manzu) Chairman Andaleeve Rahman Partho and sent him to jail in a case filed over vandalising and setting Setu Bhaban in Dhaka on fire on July 18.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Rashidul Alam passed the order after Abu Sayeed Miah, an inspector of the Detective Branch (DB) of Police and also the investigation officer in the case, produced him before it on completion of his three-day remand in the case.

The court, however, directed the jail authorities to provide him with first class division in jail as per the Jail Code after his lawyer submitted another petition in this regard.

In the forwarding report, the IO said Partho gave important information about the incident which was being verified. So the IO appealed to the court to confine him to jail until the investigation is completed.

While the defence submitted an application seeking bail for Partho on grounds that their client was implicated in the case as part of a conspiracy to harass him politically.

Moreover, another accused garment exporter KM Rezaul Hasanat David, also chairman and CEO of Viyellatex Group, was earlier granted bail in the case. So, his bail petition should be granted.

'Stop mass arrests, release students'

Artists, people join together in protests

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Hundreds gathered in front of Dhanmondi's Abahoni field yesterday as part of a demonstration organised by Gonohottya O Nipironbirodhi Shilpi Shomaj (Artists Against Genocide and Oppression).

The event saw a diverse group of artists rallying against what they claim is "mass murder of protesters and continued oppression of the youth".

The protesting artists presented three key demands: halting the mass arrest of protesting students and common people and releasing all detained protesters, restoring normalcy and freeing educational institutions from the control of law enforcement agencies and ruling party affiliates, and the immediate resignation of the government for the deaths of the protesters.

They also carried various anti-government placards and red cards.

The gloomy weather and heavy rain did not stop them from raging on.

Artist Shaon Chishti said, "We are displaying red cards to express our distrust of the dictatorship and our support for the masses."

The demonstration began with group painting sessions, where artists depicted protest scenes on red canvases.

This was followed by a street drama titled "Astha-Onastha (Trust-Distrust)," illustrating the brutal reality of law enforcement agencies shooting protesting students, many of whom were children.

The performance drew numerous passers-by who spontaneously joined the demonstration.

Following the drama, artists and attendees formed a long human chain, chanting slogans against state persecution of young protesters.

An emotional moment ensued when the names of those killed by law enforcers were announced, with the crowd shouting, "I am present, we are present."

Artists recounted the circumstances of each victim's death, leading many participants to break into tears while shouting slogans like "Down with the Dictatorship" and "Distrust the Dictator, Trust in the People."

Singers and poets performed protest songs and poems, expressing solidarity with the student protests.

Several participants delivered speeches, including rights activist and author Rehnuma Ahmed, who said, "The regime has not published the actual number of people they have killed yet. So far we have learned about Water, water, who needs water?

In a video shared on social media by Mir Mahbubur Rahman Snigdho, his twin brother Mir Mahfuzur Rahman Mugdho, 25, was seen distributing water to protesters after law enforcers fired teargas shells to disperse them in Azampur of Uttara on July 18.

Merely 15 minutes later, he was gone. A bullet hit his forehead and pierced through his right ear after law enforcers opened fire.

He was already dead when his friends brought him to Crescent Hospital.

"Babumoshai, zindagi badi honi chahiye, lambi nahi" was the caption of his profile picture on Facebook. It can be roughly translated to -- life should be meaningful, not long.

Mugdho did live a meaningful life.

He joined the protest on July 18 to help students, who he believed were fighting for a just cause, said his elder brother Mir Mahmudur Rahman Deepto.

From a young age, Mugdho always spoke up against injustice. He was a unit leader in the Armed Police Battalion Scout group and achieved the "National Service Award" from Bangladesh Scouts for his role in rescuing and evacuating people during the 2019 Banani fire, Deepto added.

Firoz Talukdar Palash, 38, an office assistant of a chemical company in Dhaka's Mirpur 12, left his rented house on July 19 to go to Tangail.

It was Friday, so his office was closed, allowing him a brief scope to visit his mother in Ghatandi village under Tangail's Bhuanpur upazila.

He phoned his mother and said, "Ma, ami ber hoyecchi (Mother, I am on the way)".

Soon afterwards on the way, he found himself in the middle of a clash between protesters and police in Mirpur 10, where he was hit by a bullet in his chest.

Some people took him to a private hospital nearby, where doctor declared him dead.

Informed about her son's demise, a bewildered Benu Begum immediately called her son's wife, Reshma, who went to the hospital and identified the body.

Palash's body was taken to the family's home in Tangail on the same night, and was buried there on the next day.

Reshma later returned to Dhaka with their seven-year-old daughter a few days after Palash's burial, said relatives.

Rabbi Miah, 22, was the brightest hope for his family.

Hailing from the impoverished Panchashi village in Jamalpur's Sarishabari upazila, Rabbi was steadily carving a path to a better future. His father, Abdur Rahim, a rickshaw-puller, struggled to afford the education of his two sons.

Despite these hardships, Rabbi's older brother, Antor Miah, had recently completed his post-graduation in political science and was actively seeking a government job. To support the family, he taught at an English-medium school in Dhaka's Gulshan area.

Rabbi was also contributing to the family while pursuing his own dreams. He worked as a junior officer at Walton Base Point in Narayanganj and was a second-year Electrical and Electronics Engineering student at Southeast University. With aspirations of studying abroad, he was preparing for the IELTS exam.

The two brothers had come so far, driven by their hard work, dedication, and the shared hope of lifting their family out of poverty.

However, on July 20, that hope was extinguished by a bullet.

On July 19, Mahamudur Rahman Soikot, 19, was shot in the head when law enforcers opened fire to disperse quota reform protesters on Mohammadpur's Nurjahan Road.

Since that day, Soikot's father has been a familiar figure on Nurjahan Road, often seen standing silently at the spot where his son fell.

The place where Soikot's body once lay in a pool of blood has become a site of silent mourning for a father who can find no words to express his grief.

"My brother had aspirations to become a teacher, and was working hard with his studies and preparations for the job. But a bullet took his life...," said Shabrina Yasmin, sister of Mohammad Wasim Akram.

Wasim, a third-year student of the social science department of Chittagong College, died after coming in the line of fire during a clash of protesters demanding quota reform in government jobs with activists of Jubo League and Chhatra League, in Muradpur area of Chattogram city on July 16.

Hailing from South Mehernama area under Pekua upazila of Cox's Bazar, Wasim was second of five siblings. His father, Shafiul Alam, and elder brother, Arshad Alam, live and work in Saudi Arabia.

They could not see his face for the last time as they are abroad.

"My brother loved me a lot. He used to study from a hostel in Chattogram city since 2019, and visited the family in the village once a month," said Shabrina, a 10th-grader at a local school in Pekua upazila.

During a visit to their house, this correspondent saw Wasim's mother Josna Begum holding his portrait. She kept asking who killed her son.

His uncle Zainal Abedin said she was not in a state to talk to anyone.

"The family's financial condition is not good. Wasim's father and elder brother are working in Saudi Arabia without a valid work permit there," he said.

Mohammed Faruque's death anniv

STAR REPORT

The 25th death anniversary of Prof Mohammed Faruque, former chairman of Bangla department at Jahangirnagar University and Karachi University, will be observed today, said a press release.

To mark the occasion, his family members will hold a daylong programmes -- including Qurankhwani, milad mahfil and special prayers at mosque.

Besides, cooked food will be distributed among the destitute at orphanages. All relatives, friends, students, and well-wishers of Prof Faruque have been requested to pray for the salvation of his departed soul.

HC to resume

fixed July 31 for further hearing and passing order on the matter.

But the bench could not hold hearing on the matter on July 31 and August 1 as Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon, the junior judge of the bench, did not attend office because he was on leave due to physical illness.

Although the six organisers of quota reform movement were released from the DB's custody on Thursday, writ petitioners' counsels said they will raise question about the legality of keeping them detained before the HC during next hearing of the petition.

"Our question is why and under which law they (six organisers) were kept detained for six days in custody and who will take the responsibility for this action. There is no provision in the law for keeping anybody in the custody [of detective branch] in the name of safe custody. What is the meaning of safe custody? All these questions must be resolved," Barrister Sara Hossain, a lawyer for the writ petitioners, told reporters at a briefing on the Supreme Court premises on Thursday.

FLASH FLOODS, WATERLOGGING

31,000 marooned in Cox's Bazar, parts of Bagerhat inundated

STAR REPORT

Over a week of incessant rain has triggered flash floods in Cox's Bazar district, affecting over one lakh people and marooning around 31,000 residents. Roads, crop lands, and households across five upazilas -- Ukhiya, Ramu, Eidgaon, Chakaria, and Kutubdia -- are submerged under water.

The Rohingya refugee camps have also been impacted, with many refugees relocating to higher ground.

Jahangir Alam, the district relief and rehabilitation officer, reported that despite the severe flooding, no one has yet needed to move to shelters.

He expressed hope that if the rain stopped by Friday, the water levels would soon recede.

Bibhisan Kanti Das, the additional deputy commissioner of Cox's Bazar, announced immediate relief measures, including 47 tonnes of rice and Tk 5 lakh for the flood-affected people.

In Ukhiya's Haldiapalong union, 20 villages with around 10,000 residents remain marooned. Chairman Imrul Kayes Chowdhury said residents are facing severe scarcity of freshwater. Food has been arranged for 500 people over the last three days, though the two-tonne wheat allocation from the district administration is insufficient.

Additional Refugee Relief and Repatriation Commissioner Samsuddauza confirmed that many Rohingya refugees have been moved to higher ground due to the floods.

Meanwhile, rainfall since Wednesday night has inundated various areas in Bagerhat district.

Major roads in Bagerhat town, including Sadhana Intersection, Shaltala, Kharadar School Road, District Hospital Intersection, Khan Jahan Ali Road, Rail Road, PTI Intersection, and areas around the district post office, have been submerged in ankle- to knee-deep water.

Low-lying areas in Morrelganj, Sharankhola, Mongla, Rampal, and Kachua upazilas face similar conditions. Several fish enclosures have reportedly been washed away, causing significant losses for local fish farmers.

The flooding has caused immense suffering for commuters, with few vehicles available and many forced to wade through dirty water. Numerous homes and businesses have been inundated, making several areas inaccessible.

As it was a weekly holiday, many residents chose to stay indoors.

However, low-income individuals and daily earners, such as rickshaw pullers, were severely affected. Shahidul Sheikh, a rickshaw puller, expressed his struggle, saying, "I had to come out despite the rain to feed my family, but I only earned Tk 135 by 3:30pm."

Residents voiced their frustrations over poor drainage.

Rafin Hawlader from Mithapukur Paar area said, "Every road is waterlogged, forcing us to wade through knee-deep, dirty water."

Sanchita, living near the children's hospital, shared her ordeal, saying, "Water enters our home even with a little rain. I haven't been able to cook for two days as our kitchen is submerged. We are surviving on dry food."

Rezaul Haque Rizvi, assistant engineer of Bagerhat Municipality, assured that ongoing drainage development work would mitigate the waterlogging issues.

"Currently, five kilometres of drainage work is underway. Once completed, we will excavate five canals in the town to relieve the waterlogging," he said.

children, Unicef urges an end to the detention of children in all its forms. This means that children should not be arrested or detained based on their mere presence in any location or because of their background, religion, or the acts or beliefs of their family members," it continued.

"Supporting children caught up in the violence is a priority for Unicef. I visited the Unicef-supported child helpline 1098 that has seen a 250 percent increase in demand since the violence started. I saw how trained counsellors listen to children's concerns, refer them to the appropriate support and services – and follow up with them.

"In addition, 1,100 social workers, trained by Unicef..., are providing psychosocial help for children whose mental health has been affected by the violence and curfews," he said.

"One of the best ways to help children recover from violence and to keep them safe is to reopen all schools, restart learning, and reunite children with their friends and teachers. 30 million students from pre-primary to secondary school have missed 10 days of school. These learning losses are compounded by school closures earlier this year due to heat [waves], cyclones and floods.

While Unicef welcomes the reopening of primary schools in many parts of Bangladesh from August 4, there will still be around 15.5 million school children who are unable to resume learning. The longer children are out of school, especially girls, the less likely they are to return, jeopardising their future," he continued.

212 deaths, but there is no doubt that the number is much higher."

She called for a neutral investigation supervised by the United Nations to identify and bring the murderers to justice.

Women's rights activist Farida Akhter condemned the killings, saying, "Such a scale of mass murder was unprecedented since the Liberation War. The government must resign, taking responsibility for these deaths."

Former BNP lawmaker Rumin Farhana attended the demonstration to show solidarity but did not deliver a speech. "I have just come here as a participant to express my solidarity with the protesters," she said.

Prominent attendees included artist and author Imtiaz Alam Baig, singer Bithi Gosh, curator and author Amirul Rajib, poet Shehzad Chowdhury, and artist and curator Kazi Tahsin Agaz Apurbo.

Poet and activist Arup Rahee read out the three key demands on behalf of the participating artists. Convener of the demonstration, artist Mustafa Zaman, criticised the lack of democratic environment in Bangladesh, saying, "People are deprived of their voting rights and freedom of expression."

"When the students took to the streets to reform the quota system, the government killed them to suppress their just movement. We have been expressing solidarity with their movement from the very beginning, and we shall continue to do so in the future," he added.

search for his injured friend," Sabonti recalled.

Worried for his safety, Soikot's mother began calling him frantically.

Other family members joined in, trying to reach him on his phone.

Soikot answered one of Sabonti's calls, reassuring her that he was on his way home. He also spoke briefly to his father, promising to call him back soon. However, he did not return.

At 4:00pm, someone answered a phone call from Soikot's father. "Your son has been shot. You can find his body at the morgue of Suhrawardy Medical College and Hospital," said the voice on the other side.

His father was miles away from the capital, helpless, he informed other family members. They hurried to the hospital where they found Soikot's lifeless body.

Soikot, an admission seeker at a public university, was the only brother of two sisters -- Sabonti and Shahrina Afroz Supti.

"I don't know how someone could shoot my innocent brother. Did his hands not shake while shooting such an innocent boy?" Sabrina asked.

Soikot, who wanted to be a cricketer in his childhood, was very calm, his sister said, adding that there were no instances where he had gotten into an altercation with anyone.

"My mother cannot sleep at night. She frequently wakes up and starts crying, recalling his memories. Soikot always told my mother that he would build a new house for her," Sabonti said.

"From whom will we seek justice? The police killed my brother. Should we go to the police who killed my brother for justice?" she asked.

Soikot was laid near his home in a Mohammadpur graveyard.

As Rabbi began recording the police firing on his phone, a bullet struck him in the chest, killing him instantly, said his father, quoting witnesses.

"How are we going to console ourselves, and continue to live on with our hearts burdened with this grief of losing our son?" said Rahim.

Rajia Begum, Rabbi's mother, has been unable to stop her tears even 12 days after her youngest son's untimely death.

Clutching Rabbi's portrait in her lap, she was seen weeping when this correspondent visited their home in Jamalpur on Wednesday evening.

"My son used to call me regularly and would always say that one day he would achieve success and ensure that our family would no longer live in poverty. But it's been twelve days, and my son hasn't called me. He never will..." Rajia sobbed.

A promising life cut short of Khulna University, he got admitted to Bangladesh University of Professionals this March for his MBA.

THE TWIN HE LEFT BEHIND

Among those Mugdho left behind was his twin brother, Snigdho. During the unrest, their family was vacationing in Cox's Bazar, but he and Mugdho stayed back.

Mugdho and Snigdho went to school together, and shared the same circle of friends. As is often the case with twins, Snigdho looks very similar to Mugdho, a face that now serves as a constant reminder to their family of the son they lost.

Since Mugdho's death, Snigdho has been completely traumatised.

"Please talk to my elder brother for details, I am in no condition to speak on record," he told this correspondent.

Their elder brother, Mahmudur added, "Snigdho has gone numb. He still hasn't processed what he has lost."

Snigdho was the first family member to see Mugdho's body. At first, he refused to accept that law enforcers' bullets claimed his brother's life.

For Snigdho, every moment, every memory is intertwined with his brother. It is not just the loss of a brother, but the loss of a part of himself, said Deepto.

Deepto said on the morning of July 18, they went to Cox's Bazar with the family.

"My mother had never seen the beach. Last year, Mugdho took our parents to Sundarbans for the first time. So, I took my parents to Cox's Bazar," Mahmudur said.

However, Mugdho and Snigdho did not go to Cox's Bazar. The reason was twofold -- Mugdho had plans to visit Tanguar Haor with his friends on July 20. Secondly, he wanted to participate in the quota reform protests.

Deepto received the news of Mugdho's death around 6:30pm.

After that, the family tried to return to Dhaka that very day, but were unsuccessful as no flights were available. Travelling by road would have taken too long. So, they returned to Dhaka on an early flight the next morning.

Deepto said he did not know how to break the news of Mugdho's death to their mother. Besides, their mother is a heart patient, so he had to be careful.

First, he told them Mugdho got slightly injured, then he took their phones from them, saying they might hear rumours.

Throughout the night, he prepared his parents for the news. He told his mother that Mugdho was in a hospital, then he told them Mugdho's condition was critical.

After finding out the news of his death, their mother broke down. She lost consciousness at least seven times that day. She has still not fully recovered.

"Among us three brothers, Mugdho was closest to my mother. His death has shattered her world," said Deepto.

THE FRIEND WHO SAW HIM DIE

When Mugdho was shot, his friend Zakirul Islam was by his side.

"The bullet hit him in the forehead, it exited through the right side of his head," he said.

"He died right there on the spot, in front of our eyes," he added.

"Mugdho was giving everyone water. None of us had any firearms or anything else. Yet they shot my friend like this? How can I forget this scene?" he added.

"They shot my son in the chest. He was also badly injured in a leg. Why did they have to kill my son? He did not do anything," she said.

"Who will look after his wife and daughter now? Who shall we ask for justice for my son's death?" Benu asked.

SIX ORGANISERS IN CUSTODY

HC to resume hearing of petition tomorrow

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court will resume hearing and passing order on a writ petition tomorrow that challenged the legality of keeping the six organisers of quota reform movement detained in detective branch's (DB) custody for "their own security".

The petition has been included as item 10 for "order" on tomorrow's cause list of the HC bench comprising Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon.

The petition was filed by Supreme Court lawyers Aynunnahar Siddiqua and Manzur-Al-Matin on July 29 seeking HC orders for the immediate release of the six coordinators of the quota reform protests from law enforcers' custody and stopping the use of live rounds on protesters' demonstrations.

The HC bench held hearing on the petition on July 29 and 30 amid chaos and commotion in the packed courtroom and

SYLHET FLOOD

66,584 houses damaged in three districts

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

As their house was damaged in the ongoing flood, Aftab Uddin's family has been living in Bara Maidan High School shelter for 23 days at Talimpur union in Barlekha upazila, Moulvibazar.

The floodwaters have yet to recede fully from their Murshibadkura village in the union.

Many families in this union, particularly those in the Hakaluki Haor areas, are in a similar peril.

Since the onset of the flood in Sylhet region on June 16, triggered by heavy rains and upstream waters, a total of 66,584 houses have so far been damaged in three districts, including 16,987 in Moulvibazar, 27,597 in Sylhet, and 22,000 in Sunamganj.

Unable to stay in their homes, many families sought refuge in shelters or at their relatives' houses, with the prolonged flood continuing to exacerbate their struggles.

Poor and marginalised people are particularly affected, facing severe challenges to manage their livelihoods, repairing their damaged homes, and providing for their families.

Even though the flood waters have receded considerably from most areas, many people are still unable to return to their homes due to the damages sustained to their houses.

"My mud hut was completely washed away in the flood. I have been compelled to borrow funds to repair the house as soon as possible, since my family would otherwise become homeless for prolonged time," said Satir Mia from Barlekha upazila.

Sumi Rani, district relief and rehabilitation officer in Habiganj, said they have yet to collect detailed damage reports for houses in the district and will be requesting updates from upazila officials for better assessment.

Mohammad Chadu Mia, district relief and rehabilitation officer in Moulvibazar, said they have sent a list of damages sustained in the flood to the Ministry of Disaster Management and Relief, requesting funds for repair and reconstruction of affected homes.

Md Abdul Kuddus Bulbul, district relief and rehabilitation officer in Sylhet, said they are compiling a list of damages and preparing for rehabilitation efforts for those affected.

23 TRIPURA FAMILIES

Landslide threat looms large over them

MINTU DESHWARA, from Habiganj

The indigenous Tripura community has lived for generations in the Satchhari National Park of Chunarughat upazila, Habiganj.

However, the 23 families in the village now face constant fear due to landslides, a threat that has intensified over the past six years.

Relentless monsoon rains have eroded their homes and lands repeatedly, while sand and soil lifting from hill slopes in previous years worsened the situation.

Recently, five families abandoned their homes after landslides jeopardised their safety.

On July 13, the village's only bridge collapsed in another landslide, trapping the remaining 23 families.

Currently, these families live in fear as monsoon downpours continue.

"We've lived with the risk of landslides for years, but the situation has worsened. This year, the bridge collapsed, leaving us stranded," said Sumon Debbarma, a resident.

Shankar Tantubay recounted the recent landslide incident, "In the dead of night, a sudden landslide swept away a significant portion of the village and the bridge. We're now sheltered in the old forest department building."

Sand lifting, previously allowed, contributed to the rapid deterioration of the hill slopes.

"Our roads and trees have been destroyed, and life here has become unsafe," said a villager.

Village headman Chittaranjan Debbarma expressed frustration over the authorities' inaction.

"We've sought assistance from different places, but to no avail. Villagers fear losing everything if urgent action isn't taken."

In 2020, the Bangladesh Water Development Board proposed a Tk 8.21 crore project to protect 480 metres of hill slope in the village.

However, the ministry deemed the cost too high for the benefit of 28 families.

"We were born here. This place is precious to us, and we've always strived to preserve these hills," said Chittaranjan.

Ashish Debbarma, the assistant headman, echoed his sentiments.

Tofazzal Sohel, general secretary of the Habiganj unit of Bangladesh Poribesh Andolon, suggested constructing a guide-wall to protect the village from landslides.

Chunarughat Upazila Nirbahi Officer Ayesha Siddika said plans are underway to relocate the 23 families to a safe area within the reserve forest.

"The hill slopes are causing erosion and landslides, affecting not only the Tripura village but also other areas within the Satchari National Park. Efforts are on to protect the families and preserve their way of life amidst the challenges posed by erosion and landslides," she added.

Mother and daughter die as trawler capsizes

3 others remain missing

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Shariatpur

A woman and her daughter died by drowning after a trawler capsized in the Meghna river in Magherchar area under Gosairhat upazila of Shariatpur yesterday morning.

The deceased were identified as Shahana Akhtar, 50, and her daughter Joli Akhtar, 26. The missing ones are Shahana's two sons Shanto and Shaon, and Shanto's friend Hridoy.

Meanwhile, at least five people were undergoing treatment at the local upazila health complex after being rescued.

Mohammad Akash, a rescued passenger, said, "Rough waves rocked the trawler sideways when a big wave suddenly hit it, causing it to sink."

The upazila administration launched a rescue operation after the incident yesterday, but had to call it off at 5:30pm due to inclement weather, said Pushpen Debnath, officer-in-charge of Gosairhat Police Station.

Quoting passengers of the trawler who survived the incident, the OC said that Shahana, a resident of Dhaka's Narinda area, was going to Magherchar with 10 others to see a prospective bride for her son and finalise the wedding date.

They boarded the trawler at Kodalpur Launch Ghat in Gosairhat around 10:00am yesterday.

Around 10:30am, the trawler capsized mid-river after losing control as strong waves due to rough weather started to rock the vessel.

Locals rescued eight persons and took them to Gosairhat upazila health complex.

Apologise and resign: Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Secretary General Fakhrul yesterday condemned the "attacks by law enforcement and ruling party activists" on students during their prayers and mass procession programme.

He called on the government to apologise and resign immediately.

"Law enforcement and cadres of Awami League, Chhatra League, and Jubo League carried out heinous armed attacks during today's prayer and mass procession program," he said in a statement.

Fakhrul criticised the government for shutting down various social media sites, including Facebook and Telegram, to disrupt yesterday's programme.

Vested people playing govt-vs-students game

Says Quader

BSS, Dhaka

Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader yesterday said even after fulfilling the students' demand for quota reform, a vested quarter is continuing an ill effort to gain its interest by playing the government-versus-students game.

He made the remark at a press conference held at the AL president's Dhanmondi political office.

Quader said students are not the opponents of the government in any situation.

He also said the scope of the judicial probe commission has been extended for a proper investigation into each killing.

Venezuela opposition calls mass protests

AFP, Caracas

Venezuela's opposition leader Maria Corina Machado called Thursday for protests "in every city" in the nation today to denounce the disputed reelection of President Nicolas Maduro.

The oil-rich Latin American nation was plunged into political crisis after Maduro was announced the victor of Sunday's election -- a result that defied pre-election polls and has drawn global criticism.

"We must remain firm, organized and mobilized with the pride of having achieved a historic victory on July 28, and the awareness that to claim victory we will also go all the way," Machado said on social media.

Earlier Thursday, she wrote in the Wall Street Journal that she was in hiding and "fearing for my life" after Maduro's contested victory, which led to hundreds of arrests following deadly protests this week.

Machado reiterated her claim that opposition candidate Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia was the rightful winner, saying he won "67 percent to 30 percent" based on tallies obtained from most of the nation's polling stations.

VENEZUELA

The government-aligned National Electoral Council declared that Maduro won with 51 percent of the vote. Maduro has said he has evidence of his victory and was "ready to present 100 percent of the records."

"You have blood on your hands," Maduro said Wednesday, referring to Gonzalez Urrutia and Machado. "They should be behind bars."

Machado -- who was barred from running in the election by institutions loyal to Maduro -- said most opposition figures were now in hiding.

"I could be captured as I write these words," Machado wrote, calling for "those who reject authoritarianism and support democracy to join the Venezuelan people in our noble cause."

In a message to his supporters, Gonzalez Urrutia wrote on X: "I will never leave you alone, and I will always defend your will!"

Harris secures Democratic presidential nomination

AFP, Washington

US Vice President Kamala Harris effectively secured the Democratic party's presidential nomination yesterday, confirming her remarkable rise to party standard bearer in November's showdown against Republican Donald Trump.

Harris, 59, was the sole candidate on the ballot for a five-day electronic vote of nearly 4,000 party convention delegates. The first Black and South Asian woman ever to secure a major party's nomination, she will be officially crowned at a Chicago convention later this month.

"I am honored to be the presumptive Democratic nominee for president of the United States," Harris said on a phone-in to a party celebration after securing enough votes by the second day of the marathon virtual vote.

In the two weeks since Joe Biden ended his reelection bid, Harris has gained full control of the party, smashing fundraising records, packing arenas and erasing the polling leads Trump had built over the president.

"I couldn't be prouder," Biden posted on X after her nomination.

The nomination milestone came with Harris preparing to hit the campaign trail next week for a swing across seven crucial election states alongside her yet-to-be-named running mate.

The Democratic Party decided on a virtual nomination process -- departing with tradition and mirroring the procedure used in the pandemic-hit 2020 election -- because of an early deadline in Ohio for submitting the names of certified candidates.

The virtual roll call marks the official beginning of the 2024 convention, with the more traditional festivities getting going when thousands of party faithful descend on Chicago on August 19.

The gathering will feature a ceremonial vote for Harris in what is expected to be a raucous celebration of her rise from California prosecutor to historic candidate vying for the nation's highest office.

Trump's White House bid was turned upside down on July 21 when 81-year-old Biden, facing growing concerns about his age and lagging polling numbers, withdrew his candidacy and backed Harris.

WAVE OF MOMENTUM

Energetic and two decades younger than 78-year-old Trump, the vice president has made a fast start, raising $310 million in July, according to her campaign -- more than double Trump's haul.

She and her running mate are scheduled to rally Tuesday in Pennsylvania -- a crucial swing state, where Democratic Governor Josh Shapiro is on the shortlist to join Harris's ticket.

Biden beat Trump in Pennsylvania in 2020 by around 80,000 votes and it is seen as the biggest prize of the closely fought battlegrounds that decide the Electoral College system.

The Keystone State is part of the so-called blue wall that carried Biden to victory in 2020, alongside Michigan and Wisconsin, two states where Harris is due to woo crowds on Wednesday.

Harris will also tour the more racially diverse Sun Belt and southern states of Georgia, North Carolina Arizona, North Carolina and Nevada as she seeks to shore up the Black and Hispanic vote that had been peeling away from the Democrats.

In a sign that the Harris campaign is thinking big, US media reported that a raft of senior advisors from Barack Obama's own historic candidacies in 2008 and 2012 have taken up top positions with her.

Heat claims over 175,000 lives a yr in Europe: WHO

AFP, Copenhagen

Heat kills over 175,000 people a year in Europe, where temperatures are rising quicker than the rest of the globe, the World Health Organization's (WHO) European branch said Thursday.

Of the roughly 489,000 heat-related deaths recorded each year by the WHO between 2000 and 2019, the European region accounts for 36 percent, or on average 176,040 deaths, the WHO said.

The health body noted that temperatures in the region are "rising at around twice the global average rate."

The WHO's European region comprises 53 countries, including several in Central Asia.

"People are paying the ultimate price," Hans Kluge, the WHO's regional director for Europe, said in a statement.

According to the WHO, there has been a 30 percent increase in heat-related mortality in the region over the past two decades.

"Temperature extremes exacerbate chronic conditions, including cardiovascular, respiratory and cerebro-vascular diseases, mental health, and diabetes-related conditions," Kluge said.

He added that extreme heat can in particular be a problem for elderly people and be an "additional burden" for pregnant women.

Krasikov, freed by Germany, is FSB operative: Russia

AFP, Moscow

The Kremlin yesterday confirmed that Vadim Krasikov, freed by Germany in Thursday's prisoner swap deal with the West, is an operative with Russia's FSB security service.

Moscow also said that the children of an undercover spy couple released by Slovenia did not even know they were Russian until they boarded the plane back to Moscow.

"Krasikov is an FSB employee," Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters yesterday, adding that he served in the agency's elite and secretive "Alpha" unit.

Peskov also said that Krasikov "served with some of the people working in the president's security detail".

Krasikov was serving a life sentence in Germany for the murder of a Chechen rebel commander in a Berlin park in 2019 -- an assassination that German judges said was ordered by the Russian state.

An investigation by Bellingcat had previously found Krasikov had links to Russia's FSB, though yesterday's admission was the first time Moscow has publicly confirmed he was an FSB agent.

Putin on Thursday had hailed the return of the Russian prisoners -- some of whom he said had "a direct connection" to the military -- telling them: "The Motherland never forgot about you."

Peskov confirmed that a Russian couple released from Slovenia were also spies.

France's medals

as the wild acclaim for superstar swimmer Leon Marchand shows.

"The bet is off to a good start and perhaps even beyond our greatest hopes, but we remain focused on what comes next and are very clear about the difficulty," Claude Onesta, a successful former handball coach and the architect of France's high-performance sports strategy, said in radio interview on Friday.

In 2017, the year Paris was awarded the 2024 Olympics, French sports officials concluded that the country's national sporting excellence plan needed a reboot, said Yann Cucherat, a former gymnast turned sports official who will lead high performance at France's National Sports Agency after the Games.

France's strategy had not changed since one unveiled for the 1960 Olympics in Rome, and French officials had watched with a mixture of admiration and envy as the British strategy for the 2012 Games in London paid off handsomely, with 29 gold medals for Britain, Cucherat said.

"In high-performance sports, if you're stagnating, you're regressing," Cucherat told Reuters.

France came seventh with 11 golds in 2012, remained in the same spot in Rio de Janeiro with 10 golds but slipped to eighth in Tokyo in 2021 despite winning the same tally.

In 2019, France created the National Sports Agency with the Paris Games five years later as its north star, Cucherat said. Under the control of Onesta, the agency's "Blue Ambition" plan outlined a pathway to success in Paris.

French officials studied the British 2012 model, but chose not to copy it. Onesta told Le Figaro that British officials sought to inculcate sporting excellence in schools, while France sought to lift up levels in clubs across the country.

"We wanted to do it in a French way," Cucherat said.

78 HSC examinees get bail take their remaining Higher Secondary Certificate (HSC) exams, it added.

However, these students have not been cleared of the charges brought against them, said their parents and lawyers. They demanded that the cases against them be withdrawn as soon as possible saying it would put undue pressure on the students ahead of their exams.

In Dhaka, two courts granted bail to 42 college students, who were arrested in 33 violence cases.

Dhaka Metropolitan Magistrate Md Rashidul Alam granted bail to 37 examinees, while Dhaka Senior Judicial Magistrate M Mustafizur Rahman granted bail to five examinees, reports our court correspondent.

Earlier in the day, the defence filed separate petitions with these two courts, seeking bail for the 42 college students.

Of them, 37 were arrested in 29 cases filed with 14 police stations in Dhaka city, while five were arrested in four cases filed in Savar, Ashulia, and South Keraniganj.

The charges in the cases mostly included illegal gathering, rioting, assaulting police, damaging properties, and arson attacks.

Meanwhile, according to multiple media reports, two Chattogram courts granted bail to 16 HSC examinees.

Chief Judicial Magistrate Md Shahidul Islam granted bail to three students while Chattogram Metropolitan Magistrates Md Oli Ullah granted bail to 13.

They passed the order after their guardians appealed to the court, said public prosecutor Iftekhar Saimul Chowdhury.

According to court and Chattogram prison sources, more than 130 students have so far been arrested across the port city and district in violence cases.

In Satkhira, a district court granted bail to six HSC examinees.

Senior Judicial Magistrate Court Judge Md Salauddin Ahmed passed the order in the evening, said defence lawyer Abdul Mazid.

The six students were arrested along with 10 others on charges of attacking police and obstructing government work.

According to ministry press release, the law minister has directed the prosecution team (prosecutors) across the country to be proactive in granting bail to students arrested over the recent violence.

On Thursday, separate press releases from the home and education ministries stated that if any detainees involved in recent violent incidents are current HSC examinees, they would be provided legal assistance for securing bail.

Furthermore, the government would also provide legal assistance for the bail of detained students against whom there are no serious charges.

Meanwhile, the education ministry requested that any information regarding the detention of other HSC examinees be sent to helphsc24@gmail.com.

Facebook again blocked for 7hrs

Student Movement to condemn the killings and arrests of protesters over the quota reform protests.

The sources said an agency under the Ministry of Home Affairs instructed mobile operators to enforce the restrictions around noon.

Officials of mobile service operators said they were asked to lift the restrictions in the evening.

Mobile data users said they could access the Facebook and Messenger services around 7:00pm.

The service shutdown came after the government blocked social media services like Facebook, TikTok, WhatsApp and YouTube across the country on July 17 amid widespread violence over the quota reform protests.

As the violence escalated further, mobile internet was shut down across the country the next day. At least 12.7 crore people use mobile internet in the country.

A day later, on July 18, broadband internet was blocked severely affecting public life and a wide range of economic activities including utility bill payments, online banking, international communications, clearance of goods from ports and digital commerce.

The government restored broadband internet on a limited scale on July 23.

Mobile internet was resumed on July 28 while social media platforms were unblocked on July 31.

Yesterday, Telegram, a messaging platform that allows users to send large files, was blocked.

The Daily Star called State Minister for Telecoms and ICT Zunaid Ahmed Palak multiple times after the service disruption, but his mobile phone was unreachable.

PALAK APOLOGISES

Meanwhile, Palak at an event yesterday sought apology from the young generation for internet disruption and failure to prevent rumours on social media.

He said this while addressing a discussion organised by Singra upazila Awami League at his residence in Singra of Natore, marking the month of mourning, in the afternoon.

Palak said, "If I have made any mistakes, as a worker of Sheikh Hasina, and Awami League, I apologise publicly. I also take responsibility for the internet disruption, and failure to prevent rumours on social media. I promise to accept any punishment or decision in this regard."

Palak said it is not the students' fault for the distance created. "It is our fault. This is our responsibility... we cannot avoid this failure," he added.

"Please don't misunderstand people's leader Sheikh Hasina. If she is not safe, then Bangladesh will not be safe," he said.

Statement from DB office

The six were released from DB custody around noon on Thursday.

"We did not voluntarily give the video message about the withdrawal of the movement from the DB office. No decision on the anti-discrimination student movement can come from the DB office. No decision will be taken as final without the participation of all coordinators and agitating students across the country."

They said in the statement that they were forced to sit on the dining table and then the video statement was forcibly filmed.

"It was assured that we would be released, so our families were called and made to sit for 13 hours and false statements were made to the media. When our teachers came to meet us, they were not allowed to."

They said they sought safety and assurances that they would not be victims of enforced disappearances, arrested, or tortured.

"We wanted to guarantee our right to express. But we were kept in DB custody unconstitutionally and illegally. At first, we were told about security, but later they talked about the court, [that] we cannot be released without a court order."

"No one can be safe in the custody of those who shoot and kill unarmed students and citizens. We don't want this farce security from the government, we want justice for the murder of our brothers and sisters.

"Nahid Islam, Asif Mahmud, and Abu Baker started a hunger strike at the DB office on July 30 in protest of the unjust arrest of the coordinators, and arrest and torture of the students across the country. Later, Sarjis Alam, Hasnat Abdullah, and Nusrat Tabassum also joined the hunger strike."

They said that the hunger strike was kept secret from the family and the media. After over 32 hours of hunger strike, it was called off when the DB chief gave the final decision to free the six coordinators.

"In the last seven days, harassment, torture, and a drama were staged with us and our families in the DB office. We strongly condemn and protest it," they said.

"We were unjustly detained on the orders of the home minister. The government has put law enforcers face-to-face with students and citizens. The government is still continuing its repression on the students and continuing to arrest and torture of the protesting students in the country and continuing to obstruct peaceful programmes.

"The anti-discrimination student movement will continue demanding the trial of the killing of students and citizens and the release of the detained innocent people. Students and citizens across the country will be urged to take to the streets defying the government's propaganda and repression. The blood of the martyrs will not go in vain," the statement ended.

Emir Sheikh Tamim bin Hamad al-Thani also attended.

and several hundred thousand unnamed individuals

The cases were filed mostly by the law enforcers at different police stations over violence, vandalism, arson, and killings.

Unprecedented violence gripped the country since mid-July when students' protests for quota reform in government jobs turned violent following attacks by ruling party men on protesters. More than 200 people have lost their lives since then.

Airlines avoid some Mideast airspace

Cancel flights to Israel as tensions mount

REUTERS

Airlines are avoiding Iranian and Lebanese airspace and cancelling flights to Israel and Lebanon, as concerns grow over a possible conflict in the region after the killing of senior members of Hamas and Hezbollah this week.

Singapore Airlines yesterday appeared to no longer be using Iranian airspace for any of its routes, according to flight tracker Flightradar24. The airline did not respond to a request for comment.

Taiwan's EVA Air and China Airlines also appeared to be avoiding Iran airspace for flights to Amsterdam yesterday which previously had flown over Iran, Flightradar24 data showed.

In a bulletin, OPSGROUP, a membership-based organisation that shares flight risk information, advised traffic between Asia and Europe to avoid Iranian and Iraqi airspace, a day after sources told Reuters that top Iranian officials will meet the representatives of Iran's regional allies from Lebanon, Iraq and Yemen to discuss potential retaliation against Israel.

Many airlines, including US and European airlines, already avoid flying over Iran. Singapore Airlines' flight to London Heathrow early yesterday went north of Iran through Turkmenistan and Azerbaijan, rather than crossing through Iran as it did the day before, Flightradar24 showed.

However, a significant number of airlines were still flying over Iran yesterday, including United Arab Emirates carriers Etihad, Emirates EMIRA. UL and FlyDubai, as well as Qatar Airways and Turkish Airlines.

Over the past two days, Air India AIRID. UL, Germany's Lufthansa Group LHAG.DE, U.S. carriers United Airlines UAL.O and Delta Air DAL.N, and Italy's ITA Airways said they had suspended flights to Tel Aviv.

Nearly two-thirds of Gaza buildings damaged: UN

AFP, Geneva

Nearly two-thirds of the buildings in the Gaza Strip have been damaged or destroyed since the Gaza offensive began in October, the United Nations said yesterday.

"UNOSAT's latest damage building assessment, based on satellite imagery... reveals that 151,265 structures have been affected in the Gaza Strip," the UN Satellite Centre said.

"Of these, 30 percent were destroyed, 12 percent severely damaged, 36 percent moderately damaged, and 20 percent possibly damaged, representing approximately 63 percent of the total structures in the region."

The assessment was based on comparing imagery from May 2023 onward with images from July 6 this year.

"The impact on civilian infrastructure is evident, with thousands of homes and essential facilities being damaged," the agency said.

Israel's campaign against Hamas has killed at least 39,498 people in Gaza, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry, which does not give details of civilian and militant deaths.

UNOSAT said the total debris in the Gaza Strip generated by the conflict amounts to approximately 41.95 million metric tonnes.

The figure is up 83 percent from the nearly 23 million tonnes estimated on January 7.

The conflict has resulted in 14 times more debris than the combined total from all previous conflicts in the Palestinian territory since 2008, UNOSAT said.

The agency estimated that 114 kilogrammes (250 pounds) of debris were generated for each square metre in the Gaza Strip.

Geneva-based UNOSAT says its satellite imagery-based analysis helps the humanitarian community assess the extent of conflict-related damage and helps shape emergency relief efforts.

Meanwhile, France yesterday urged its nationals visiting Iran to leave immediately, after Tehran accused Israel of killing a leader of Palestinian group Hamas on its soil, sparking regional tensions.

"Due to the increased risk of a military escalation in the region, visiting French nationals still in Iran are invited to leave as soon as possible," the foreign ministry said.

The killing of Hamas political chief Ismail Haniyeh in a pre-dawn attack on Wednesday in Tehran has deepened fears of a regional war.

Tehran, as well as the Iran-backed Hamas and Lebanese Hezbollah movements, have blamed Israel, which has not commented.

It has however claimed responsibility for the killing just hours earlier of senior Hezbollah military commander Fuad Shukr in Beirut's southern suburbs.

Israel advanced last year the highest number of settlements in the occupied West Bank since the Oslo Accords of the 1990s, the European Union's representative office in the Palestinian territories said yesterday.

Plans for 12,349 housing units moved towards approval in the West Bank, the EU office said, warning of the impact on a potential two-state solution for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Hezbollah resumes steady artillery fire against Israel

REUTERS, Beirut

Hezbollah forces yesterday resumed rocket and artillery attacks against Israel, ending the lull along the border following Israel's killing of the Lebanese group's military commander in Beirut.

Hezbollah said it had fired a surface-to-air missile at an Israeli warplane flying in Lebanese airspace overnight and forced it to turn back. Its forces also carried out two artillery attacks and two rocket strikes at military positions in northern Israel, it said.

The Israeli military said in a statement it had successfully intercepted an aerial target coming from Lebanon into the Israeli-occupied Golan Heights.

Israeli airstrikes and artillery fire hit several villages in southern Lebanon yesterday, according to Lebanese state media, a day after an Israeli strike killed at least five Syrian migrant workers in southern Lebanon, according to medics.

The Israeli military also said it had hit two Hezbollah fighters in southern Lebanon.

Hezbollah leader Sayyed Hassan Nasrallah said in an address on Thursday that he had ordered calm along the border following the Israeli airstrike in Beirut on Tuesday that killed military commander Fuad Shukr out of respect for the victims and to consider what the next steps should be.

The strike on the Hezbollah stronghold of Dahiyeh in Beirut's southern suburbs also killed an Iranian military adviser and five civilians.

Trump calls US-Russia prisoner swap 'win for Putin'

AFP, Washington

Former US president Donald Trump said yesterday the prisoner swap between the United States and Russia was a "win" for President Vladimir Putin as he continued to offer baseless speculation over the details of the agreement.

Wall Street Journal reporter Evan Gershkovich, two other Americans and a green card holder are back in the United States after being freed by Putin as part of a massive, multi-country East-West prisoner exchange.

Trump set out in an interview with Fox Business why the exchange was bad news for America as he sought to downplay President Joe Biden's success in securing the deal. "The Russians made a great deal. I'm not going to criticize it, because it's good to have them home, but they got a phenomenal deal, and that sets a very bad precedent," he said, calling it a "win for Putin."

Gershkovich, former Marine Paul Whelan and Russian-American journalist Alsu Kurmasheva, along with legal permanent resident Vladimir Kara-Murza, were among 16 prisoners released by Russia.

Firefighters struggle to contain California wildfire

REUTERS

A fast-moving wildfire has killed at least one person in the Rocky Mountain foothills of Colorado, one of a handful of blazes burning across the state, while thousands of firefighters in California struggled to contain the largest fire in the country.

The individual killed in the Stone Canyon Fire, burning about 20 miles (32 km) north of Boulder, Colorado, was found on Wednesday in one of five homes destroyed near Rocky Mountain National Park, officials said.

"We did also today discover human remains in one of the residences," Boulder County Sheriff Curtis Johnson told journalists. "So, I can confirm for you that we do have one fatality associated with the fire."

Johnson did not provide details on the individual's identity.

The Stone Canyon Fire, near Lyons, a community of about 2,000, has burned more than 1,500 acres (600 hectares) since Tuesday afternoon. It was 30 percent contained as of Thursday evening, according to Nathan Hallam, the fire incident commander on scene, who added that he hoped to see the fire begin to shrink significantly by Sunday or Monday.

Evacuation orders were lifted for all of Lyons on Thursday afternoon, along with some outlying areas to the south and west of the blaze.

Meanwhile, another fire is within about 500 yards (457 meters) of some homes in far southwest Denver.

The Quarry Fire burned 420 acres by Thursday afternoon, according to local fire officials. Firefighters were focusing on keeping the fire on the south side of a road and away from those homes.

30 killed in heavy rain, floods in Pakistan

REUTERS, Lahore

Floods brought by torrential rains in Pakistan caused damage that killed at least 30 people this week, authorities said yesterday, as the second-largest city of Lahore was drenched in the most rainfall it has received in more than four decades.

The arrival of the monsoon season has sparked floods and landslides across South Asia in the past week, with at least 195 killed and almost 200 missing in one disaster in neighbouring India.

Rain pummelled Pakistan's north, causing floods, building collapses and heightening the risk of electrocution.

"The 44-year-old rainfall record was broken in Lahore once again," said utilities officials in the northeastern province of Punjab, where authorities tallied six deaths and warned that flash floods were expected in the south this week.

In Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, 12 children were among the two dozen people who died in the last three days of rains and floods in the northwestern province, Anwar Shehzad, a spokesman for its disaster management agency, told Reuters.

Mass arrests causing mass suffering

Govt risks further alienation by continuing crackdown

We fail to comprehend what the government thinks it can achieve through its continued crackdown, which has so far seen at least 10,947 individuals arrested in 674 cases filed in Dhaka and 51 other districts between July 18 and August 1. Is it to pursue justice for the violent events of July 18-21? Is it to buttress its narrative of BNP-Jamaat orchestrating the unrest? Is it to punish students, activists, and anyone who dared to stand up against its security forces and party cadres? Is it to disabuse citizens of the notion that those security forces—including police and BGB—were to blame for the killing of over 200 people? Or is it simply an attempt, ludicrous as it may be, to force-restore public order?

Whatever it is, it is not working. It is not the right way. And it is backfiring, if the rising backlash against government handling of recent events is any indication. So far, the law enforcement focus has been mainly twofold: conduct raids and arrests for the July 18-21 events, and suppress public outbursts at the killings. Even yesterday, shots were fired during protests demanding justice for the killings, with a hearing on a writ petition seeking court order to prevent firing delayed earlier. If we are to stick to the legal measures taken by law enforcers, many disturbing trends about their arrests and case filings have also come to light.

From conducting "block raids" to illegally abducting six key coordinators of quota reform protests to bringing trumped-up charges against listed political rivals to inflating the age of minors implicated in cases to falsifying First Information Reports (FIR) to grossly violating Supreme Court guidelines for arrests and remand to allegedly engaging in "arrest business"—the list of objectionables reported in the media is quite long. This runs in the face of claims by the home minister that the arrests are being made "based on evidence," and not as part of any mass arrest campaign. We have earlier commented on how the mass arrests and block raids, often targeting students involved in quota reform protests, have created widespread panic. Now, the legal hassles facing the arrestees and their families will no doubt add to the overall environment of anger and distrust, further alienating the government.

The recent change in government tone—as evidenced by the slowdown in lamentation for destroyed public infrastructure, shifting focus to the unprecedented tragedy that accompanied it, and signalling openness to international cooperation in investigations—is still seen suspiciously by the protesters out there, and for that, ongoing legal measures by the government are largely responsible. Clearly, building trust has to start from the grounds up. The wounds from those days of reckless firing cannot be healed by reckless arresting. If the government really wants the public to keep faith in its sincerity to conduct a fair and thorough investigation into the July tragedy, it must stop these law enforcement excesses and make way for an independent probe of international standards. It must bring the light on the role of its own security forces in killings.

Take steps to clear port backlogs

Return of regular export-import activities at Ctg port is vital

The deep scars left on our economy by the ongoing curfew and five-day-long internet shutdown (along with internet disruptions that have lasted much longer) are slowly emerging to the surface. Almost all business sectors have been hit hard, including import-export. As per a report by Prothom Alo, international trading activities at Chattogram port, which handles 87 percent of the country's import-export activities, are yet to return to normal, causing continuous business losses and reducing government revenue collection.

For nearly a week, internet blackout hampered the customs clearance process of both export and import consignments. Although internet services have been restored of late, the backlog of activities, which came to a halt between July 20 and 22, will reportedly take at least 10 to 15 days to be cleared. Currently, cargo ships are having to wait three to five days to enter the port instead of the usual one-day delay. It's increasing the cost for importers, who have to pay $10,000 to $50,000 per day for such delays. This not only increases import costs, which are ultimately transferred onto consumers, but the late arrival of imported raw materials to the factories means a delay in manufacturing as well.

For the RMG sector, the long-term implication is failure to meet delivery deadlines and thus the risk of losing buyers to other competing countries. Previously, we warned that the government's repressive way of handling the quota reform movement and subsequent violence would tarnish Bangladesh's image as a stable investment partner. As trade activities struggle to return to normal, and businesses continue to take the hit, the fear of losing our hold on foreign markets is turning into a reality. Even retailers selling imported goods are not spared. The late arrival of a huge amount of stock all at the same time might push the price of products down. Plus, the quality of perishable goods, when released late from the port, is also bound to be compromised.

Thus, it is essential that the authorities take all steps necessary to clear port backlogs urgently. Immediate remedies may include increasing manpower not just at the Chattogram port but all other ports handling cargos, making the customs clearance process faster and easier by reducing interim steps, and increasing the capacity of customs officials. The government also must acknowledge that its ability to reduce tensions by addressing the grievances of protesters properly and to keep the economy afloat through supportive measures is being seriously questioned in the business world, too. It must rise to the occasion and take lessons from its failures for the sake of the nation's future.

Death without weeping

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

We enter the mournful month of August, a time burdened with the memory of excruciating tragedy. The unseen amount of bloodshed witnessed in July has also left an indelible mark on our collective consciousness. As a nation born through the legacy of blood, violence is not unfamiliar to us. However, the recent deaths during the ongoing student protests are grotesque, marking a significant turning point. To paraphrase Lenin, decades have happened in the last two weeks that otherwise would not have happened in decades.

Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, whose death alongside his family members we mourn in August, was a spearhead of many student movements that have pierced through our national history. The estimated death tolls in the Language Movement of 1952 were 12; in the 1969 Mass Uprising, it was 61; in the Dhaka University massacre of March 25, 1971, it was over 220; and in the anti-Ershad protest of the 1990s, it was around 50. In the first three instances, the perpetrators were occupying forces or outsiders, and in the last, a dictator turned against his own people. This time though, witnessing at least 200 deaths, mainly students, in two weeks at the hands of our fellow citizens adds an unprecedented layer to our sorrow. This occurred under the leadership of a prime minister who had earlier survived a devastating grenade attack that claimed 24 lives in one fatal August. The moist soil of freshly buried July victims and the earth under which the deceased victims of past violence rest highlight the urgent need for peace and stability. Enough blood has been spilt. Now we need water to wash away the sins, the guilt, and the blood.

We require compassionate individuals like Mugdho, who bravely made his way through the crowd to distribute water bottles to the protesters, asking, "Does anyone need water?" His water bottles emptied our hearts and moistened our eyes. His death, among many, urges us to escape the cycle of violence and demands a critical engagement with the triangle of violence defining this moment. To climb out of this hole, we must retrace the steps that led us here.

Norwegian sociologist Johan Galtung's theory of the interconnected triangle of direct, structural, and cultural violence offers an explanation. The most visible tip of the triangle right now is "direct violence," epitomised by the police brutality leading to hundreds of deaths, thousands of injuries, and numerous arrests. Despite attempts by police and government spokespersons to blame hidden forces exploiting the situation, citizen journalism empowers us to see clearly and form our own conclusions. While it is true that students became aggressive in response to police violence, this does not justify the use of live ammunition by law enforcers, hyper-incarcerations, and cyber-surveillance. Indeed, unidentified mobs vandalised state property, but real-time efforts to safeguard national property appeared insufficient. The high number of casualties in the streets underscores one brute fact: the authorities and their auxiliary forces unleashed unprecedented violence to quash these young protesters across the country.

This leads us to the unseen origin of the scourge that Galtung speaks of: "structural violence." In this context, "structure" denotes a pattern of collective social action that has achieved a degree of permanence, while "violence" signifies the suffering and injustice deeply ingrained in ordinary, taken-for-granted patterns. The Students against Discrimination movement dared to challenge the system that rendered life predictable, secure, and comfortable for a privileged few. For the majority outside the inner circle, poverty, insecurity, ill health, and violence are prevalent. For them, the only way out was through collective social action aimed at changing the system.

The allocation of 56 percent of government jobs under different quotas, including 30 percent for descendants of freedom fighters, was symptomatic of underlying structural violence. The introduction of over 100 universities and thousands of colleges over the last three decades has created a desire for upward social mobility. In an emerging economy, the myth of the Fourth Industrial Revolution, international jobs, and startups fostered the aspiration that a peasant's son need not remain a peasant. Therefore, they perceive the quota system as a hindrance to the recognition of meritorious individuals. The soaring unemployment rate exacerbates this issue. Sixty-six percent of national university students are jobless. The official unemployment rate is 3.51 percent, while the World Bank puts it higher at 4.7 percent in 2022. They see that the private sector is much more receptive to candidates with better communication skills or family backgrounds. They observe that elites send their children to English medium schools and pursue higher education abroad. The deep-seated anger is not random. That's why a rickshaw puller or a street hawker fights alongside a student for a cause that does not immediately affect them. The problem is not quotas, but rather discriminatory structural violence.

"Cultural violence," the third corner of Galtung's triangle, encompasses aspects of culture that justify or legitimise both direct and structural forms of violence. To upset the students' protest, the government is fighting a two-pronged war: direct violence and cultural violence. It is no coincidence that the manipulation of identity politics has come to light. The vilification of rightful demands for justice and equality is prevalent. The authorities employ political language to dehumanise demonstrators and rationalise their violent response. This cultural violence will perpetuate the cycle of oppression, creating a narrative that obscures the legitimate grievances of the underprivileged and normalises their marginalisation.

How do we exit this self-made hole? First, we need decency and prudence to tell the truth. Then, we need to ensure justice and reparation. Only then can we achieve reconciliation. Reconciliation cannot occur without truth-telling, accountability, and a commitment to dismantling the structures of violence that perpetuate inequality and injustice. Like the pandemic, this moment of crisis presents an opportunity for transformation. We can access change through this portal. We must seize this opportunity to build a more equitable and just society where every young person has the chance to thrive. The lives of the fallen students must inspire the change we so desperately need.

We must seize this moment to build a more equitable and just society where every young person has the chance to thrive.

Will a normal day ever come?

After finishing her lunch, six-year-old Riya went to play on the rooftop of her family's home in Narayanganj. Tragically, her innocent moment was abruptly shattered when a bullet from a law enforcement raid struck her in the head. Similar tragedies have unfolded across Dhaka: four-year-old Ahad was shot while standing on his balcony with his parents, just as he was closing a window—everyday activities violently interrupted by the chaos of violence.

These incidents underscore how even the sanctuaries of home, like balconies and rooftops, are not immune to the reach of violence. This situation calls to mind the experiences shared by Bisan from Gaza, whose Instagram reels poignantly capture the mass-scale violence and disruption in Palestine.

Veena Das, a prominent anthropologist, offers profound insights into how violence permeates and affects everyday life. Her work emphasises that violence is not merely an event, but a process that deeply influences daily routines, relationships, and the broader social fabric.

Das explores the concept of "everyday violence," illustrating how acts of violence, whether state-sponsored or otherwise, are not isolated incidents, but rather deeply intertwined with the daily experiences of individuals and communities. In her studies, she highlights how violence can reshape the very essence of daily life, creating a climate of fear, insecurity, and disruption that affects everything from personal interactions to community cohesion.

The recent violence in Dhaka and the rest of the country has fostered an atmosphere of pervasive fear and insecurity. Students are increasingly subjected to raids, with many being rushed to hospitals with serious injuries. A recent report in The Daily Star highlighted the case of Mehedi, a student who was shot and injured. His father's poignant remark, "I will never tell anyone to send their kids to school again," captures the profound mistrust and anxiety that now pervade the community.

These incidents extend beyond temporary disruptions; they inflict lasting psychological scars. Veena Das's concept of "everyday violence" provides a framework for understanding this issue. She asserts that violence permeates the routine aspects of life, embedding fear deeply into the daily experience. The state's pervasive violence in Dhaka permeates the social fabric, eroding trust and safety. This atmosphere of fear significantly affects social interactions and community cohesion, making it increasingly difficult for people to feel secure in public spaces.

The frequent block raids and the mistreatment of individuals, exemplified by the unlawful arrest and brutal handling of 17-year-old Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz, who was bound with ropes, intensify this sense of insecurity. Such actions inflict immediate harm and contribute to a broader climate of fear, destabilising the sense of safety and stability in everyday life.

My room that once served as a sanctuary of personal expression, marked by yellow curtains and cherished books, is now overshadowed by the omnipresent influence of the authorities. The incessant noise of helicopters and the constant use of sound grenades, purportedly for protection, pervade our private spaces. What were once havens of safety have become zones of fear and control. The enforced immobility, isolation due to internet shutdowns, and the unyielding noise disrupt the peace and safety of our homes. Conversations with friends reveal this unsettling reality: one struggles with the rising cost of living, another cannot sleep without leaving the door open, feeling trapped and vulnerable.

This transformation is not merely physical, but profoundly psychological. James C Scott's Seeing Like a State provides a useful framework for understanding this impact. Scott explains how states impose their vision of order and control on society, often disregarding the complexities of local contexts. The deployment of helicopters and the relentless use of sound grenades, framed as protective measures, exemplify how the authorities' control extends to personal spaces, turning them into extensions of their surveillance and power.

Reflecting on the idea of normalcy amid this reconfigured time and space, it becomes evident that both public and private spheres are profoundly affected by pervasive violence. A return to normalcy seems increasingly unattainable. As Das notes, there is a "mutual absorption of the violent and the ordinary" in such contexts, where violence intertwines with the everyday, anchoring the event to the ordinary in specific ways. This intersection underscores how acts of violence permeate and redefine the ordinary, embedding fear and instability into the fabric of daily life.

Acknowledging these impacts is crucial for moving forward. The community requires systemic change to restore safety and normalcy, ensuring that personal spaces retain their privacy and public spaces are free from fear and violence. The act of witnessing, therefore, becomes vital—not merely as an observation but as a way to understand and address the intertwining of violence and ordinary life, seeking to unravel the pervasive influence of government-imposed disruptions.

Will this trauma ever be cancelled? Can we envision a future where such pervasive violence and control are no longer defining elements of our daily lives? How do we move from this deeply fractured state of existence to a place where normalcy, safety, and privacy can be truly restored?

When rule of (no) law reigns supreme

As the world catches a glimpse, but certainly not the full picture, of the horrors that have transpired in Bangladesh, a lack of transparency and a deliberate, disingenuous, and frankly dangerous effort by the authorities to conceal the truth has emerged. Should one be surprised? Probably not, given how this government has responded to any and all forms of civic dissent over the past decade, from any and all sources, political or not. Even for a political party that has established a track record of misusing its political activists in cahoots with law enforcement agencies to repress rather than protect citizens, this latest crackdown marks an alarming low.

The suppression of freedom of speech and expression, disregard for constitutionally protected fundamental rights, sidelining ideas from civil society on governance reform, rejection of fostering political competition between the opposition and the ruling party, and the rampant politicisation of theoretically impartial institutions of the state stand in direct contrast to the ruling party's own belief that it is the principal architect and only feasible guarantor of the country's economic stability. The economic stability storyline is progressively being rejected by a growing proportion of Bangladeshis, who are disgruntled because the developmental upshots on paper—flaunted through eye-catching infrastructural projects, rather than an innate focus on improving the average person's quality of life – are not benefiting them on a day-to-day basis.

The sheer level of wilful ignorance or, more dangerously, a defensive political posture that compels public sector stakeholders, such as law enforcement personnel, to present an embarrassingly partial or, worse, blatantly incorrect version of events can be described as authoritarian at best and as reckless at the least. This version of events places the majority of the blame on political opponents of the ruling party before any proper independent investigation and without reflecting on the government's own errors. Giving a misleading account of the chain of events that led to significant death and destruction to provide media cover for a political party that is in a crisis of its own making seems to characterise both the authorities' political and public policy reactions in the days following the deployment of the armed forces.

A narrative from both the government and some mass media outlets promotes a version of events that is far detached from the reality experienced by foreign observers, international media outlets, and, most importantly, the country's own citizens. This narrative pits the protection of the state, including vandalised public assets, against the security of the individual, contravening the very principle of the rule of law that should guide the actions or inactions of any government with an ounce of consideration for the overarching health of its relationship with its electorate. Sadly, that relationship was neither respected nor maintained when aggression, rather than reconciliation, was leveraged to tackle innocent protesters and their genuine grievances about a policy matter.

Bangladesh, long accustomed to a robust protest culture and equally forceful government countermeasures, is now experiencing a novel concoction of shock, anger, confusion, fear, and cruelty. Young people feel an extreme absence of hope regarding their individual futures and acute concerns for their own safety and that of their peers. Both the velocity and traumatic scenes of the unrest have left the country reeling, making it more dejected than it has been in a very long time. Since 2014, the Awami League has governed Bangladesh without a proper electoral mandate—anyone who argues otherwise is living in a fool's paradise—and its loss of connection with the pulse of the average voter has highlighted just how out of touch it is with the political sentiments and policy needs of Bangladeshis.

Bangladesh, long accustomed to a robust protest culture and equally forceful government countermeasures, is now experiencing a novel concoction of shock, anger, confusion, fear, and cruelty. Young people feel an extreme absence of hope regarding their individual futures and acute concerns for their own safety and that of their peers. Both the velocity and traumatic scenes of the unrest have left the country reeling, making it more dejected than it has been in a very long time.

Young people—mostly university students and their growing cohort of allies—caught in the crossfire of politically incited violence by ruling party decision-makers, combined with suppression, have borne the brunt of the turmoil. Eyewitness accounts and international media point to one underlying cause: the authorities' heavy-handed response, characterised by indiscriminate attacks on unarmed civilians and blatant violations of basic human rights under the guise of protecting national security. No amount of political cover or attempts to bury the truth through social media control and censorship will succeed.

Beyond the immediate deaths and arrests, consider the long-term psychological impact on young people. They cannot trust their government or seek accountability from the authorities. Forms of civic rebellion and an outpouring of anger, both violent and non-violent, will inevitably appear, as the authorities have turned the people they should serve into their very adversaries.

The government has only one way to improve the situation: it should exhibit humility and an apologetic tone and admit how dreadfully it mishandled a crisis that could have been resolved through reconciliatory efforts with the student protesters. Instead, the government has aggravated the dissatisfaction of a population already burdened by pent-up frustration stemming from the ongoing cost-of-living crisis, high levels of inflation, endemic public sector corruption, outward money laundering by the elites, growing youth unemployment, and the partisan monopolisation of public institutions that benefit only a few.

The experiences of those who have lived through the chaos speak volumes. Testimonials from citizens who are living through these dark days and nights challenge the sanitised versions of events presently being portrayed in the country by the authorities. The government's narrative focuses on the destruction of public assets, including a metro rail station and several government buildings — actions that are absolutely condemnable, but secondary to the suffering inflicted on Bangladeshis by those oath-bound to protect them. The value of human life has been cast aside. The desire to display unopposed and unfettered strength has overshadowed any devotion to the rule of law and the policy stances that should naturally arise from respecting it.

I want to end on a personal note. My words would be stronger and my arguments more forceful in condemning the ruling party for their actions if I were writing for an outlet operating in a functioning democracy. Bangladesh is not such a place. This newspaper, like others in the country, must exercise caution due to operational risks from tools like the Cyber Security Act and an environment where any statement perceived as a threat to the authorities can lead to legal repercussions for both the newspaper and the writer. Thus, while my analysis represents a toned-down version of my true thoughts, there is one central message that we all have: the opposite of the rule of law has prevailed in Bangladesh over the past few weeks. This is not the end, but a troubling indication of what lies ahead.

New student politics demands respect, dignity, and trust

Adnan M S Fakir
’s economics at the University of Sussex, UK.

ADNAN M S FAKIR

It is astounding how little a regime, one that has been in power for 15 consecutive years, understands the new form of student politics. Economic performance legitimacy may have satiated the post-liberation first generation who had lived through the depravities and atrocities of the Liberation War. However, the new generation aspires to more than just economic improvements, and rightfully so. Respect, dignity, and trust are the institutional cultures that speak more to the new student politics than metro rails, flyovers, or graduation to a middle-income country. And in each of these, the regime (and regimes past) repeatedly fails to deliver.

When students embarked on peaceful protests in July demanding quota reformation, it was the perceived disrespect felt after the prime minister's speech on July 14 ("If the grandchildren of the freedom fighters don't get quotas, then should the grandchildren of Razakars get quotas?") that gave the protest momentum. This show of disrespect is a tenet that seems to be repeating itself in the regime's politics. During the 2018 quota reform movement, a similar remark by the then minister of agriculture on April 9 (where she called the protesters "children of Razakars") fuelled students' anger.

Being blind to the anguish of systemic failure and corruption that led to the formation of these movements, while disrespectfully accursing the student protesters, is the first visible failure of the regime in understanding the new student politics. Perhaps this speaks more to the political culture that the people of party politics have cultivated in their ability to handle dissent. But it is this aggressive politics that instils a culture of disrespect and repeatedly rejects possibilities of peaceful, constructive negotiations. This institutional culture of indecency and disrespect is the least of the institutional failures the regime must acknowledge.

When I speak of new student politics, I am, of course, referring to the non-partisan student body—who have repeatedly taken to the streets in the past decade for their rights—not the militarised youth wings of the political bodies, whom the students associate with campus violence, rent-seeking, and corruption. It was the youth wing of the present regime, Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL), that incited the next step of the quota protests, fuelled again by a remark, this time by the AL general secretary (insinuating that the BCL would give these protesters a "fitting reply").

Clashes between the quota protesters and the BCL ensued the very next day; BCL wearing clads of sanctioned impunity from the regime against "unsanctioned protesters."But when the students were able to drive the BCL back, by their sheer numbers, the regime called on its trusted law enforcement agencies—the police, the Rapid Action Battalion (Rab), and the Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB)—to quell the students. No conversation, only dominance.

On July 16, six students were killed, including Abu Sayed, and hundreds more since then. What started with tear gas and rubber bullets transformed into a bloody campaign using automatics and blind shooting from helicopters. When the curfew was imposed, the crackdowns followed.

But it was not just the physical violence and tragic losses that we find hard to process; it was also the stripping away of the dignity of the protesters, their right to protest, their right to dissent. It was a lack of morality, an attitude of authoritarian invincibility, poor politics, and impoverished accountability. Had the regime treated the students as people worthy of dignity, perhaps it would have given them their right to protest peacefully, to vent their grievances that the regime has itself created. It is the culture of viewing people with dignity that the regime needs to adopt in its politics.

I am unsure what exactly the regime was strategising during the days of total internet shutdown and curfew, but its propaganda campaign, led by some top functionaries, backfired gravely. Loss of public trust is possibly the strongest indicator of the decline of any regime.

From the prime minister not initially acknowledging the gravity of the human tragedy as she should have, the information minister claiming that the internet was not intentionally shut down but was disrupted due to the burning of data centres and hundreds of kilometres of cables (when previously acknowledging that the regime was forced to shut down the internet), the home minister stressing that police "remained patient and only fired when they were forced to" (when there are videos of police openly firing at unarmed individual protesters), to the Detective Branch chief claiming that student protest organisers were "detained for their own safety" (when credible sources attest that they were forcibly picked up, one even from a hospital mid-recovery)—the list goes on.

Respect, dignity, and trust are the institutional cultures that speak more to the new student politics than metro rails, flyovers, or graduation to a middle-income country. FILE PHOTO: STAR

In the age of social media, repeating a lie does not make it the truth. Even the repeated narrative about BNP-Jamaat-led violence to justify law enforcement killings loses its weight (although, sadly, perhaps not for the staunchest of regime supporters) when so many killings of students and other civilians were caught on camera. Repeatedly, the regime keeps undermining the importance of trust-building with the new student politics. An institutional culture of "trust" is what is demanded by the new student politics.

Respect, dignity, and trust. Perhaps the regime does understand the new student politics. However, unless it can reform itself to provide these basic tenets to its citizenry—to the new student politics—the regime will be unable to cater to people's needs for rights and freedom, and remain on shaky grounds. As my colleagues have mentioned in another opinion piece, "Those who claim to govern must realise that their power is on lease." The regime must acknowledge that this lease cannot be extended through economic performance legitimacy alone. But foremost, what the regime needs to do is have the courage to publicly acknowledge, apologise, and ensure justice for the martyrs of the quota movement for the nation to move forward.

The collective memory of the draconian acts suffered in the pursuit of the right to protest, without proper justice and political reformation, may lead to repeated cycles of horrors. The people of Bangladesh also need to acknowledge that the burden of transforming society cannot be shouldered by students alone. It can only be carried through by the students, alongside the peasants, the workers, and the oppressed. Let injustice never prevail.

DEBUNKING THE MYTHS

LAKUM MURSALUN

Since its adoption into regular social media apps, the dark mode setting has been a popular screen choice for users of different demographics, particularly young people. Initially known as "night mode", this shadowy-themed feature was initially designed to be used depending on the lighting conditions. However, due to the perceived addictive nature of the alternative along with aesthetics and acclaimed benefits, people have opted to use the dark mode. But, aside from aesthetics, how credible are said benefits?

Dark mode isn't really a recent technological invention, and those who are into programming know that it's been around since the digital revolution started. Most original computers dating back to the '70s had light text on a dark background to save power. Moreover, they used Cathode Ray Tube (CRT) monitors, which were not sophisticated enough to light up the entire screen at once.

Later, to make them conventional and more user-friendly, black text on a white background was introduced. And now, almost 25 years into the 21st century, dark mode has made a comeback with claims such as the feature providing better legibility and improved focus while saving significant battery and reducing eye strain.

Starting with legibility, the claim is that dark mode increases readability and gives you better visual acuity. But vision research says it's actually harder for the eyes to read white text on a dark background. Human eyes are biologically designed to work in daylight. Thus, bright backgrounds with contrasting darker elements are more suited for our vision. Therefore, bright mode is recommended for optimal reading experience and longevity.

Visual acuity, on the other hand, refers to the ability to clearly see the smallest details. When you stare at black writing on a light background, your pupils shrink or narrow down so that you can have clearer eyesight. Oppositely, when you set your eyes on a lighted text with a dark background, your pupils dilate or become wider to allow more light to enter. And vision experts say this makes it harder to focus on the text and even harder for some people with certain eye conditions like myopia and astigmatism.

It is also widely claimed that dark mode saves significant battery life. But in contrast, scientists from Purdue University have found that dark mode saves up to only three to nine percent of battery on OLED screens in average brightness. However, in maximum brightness this can increase to about 39 to 47 percent. So, unless you are using your phone in broad daylight, you won't be saving a whole lot.

Another commonly cited claim is that adopting to dark mode minimises blue light consumption, which helps in falling asleep. However, blue light may not be the culprit that distorts your sleep schedule as this claim lacks credible scientific proof. Researchers believe that the discomfort people experience after staring at displays for too long is due to reduced blinking rather than brightness and suggest that the real solution to better sleep is to not use screens altogether before going to bed.

Research also suggests that dark mode can lead to negative emotions such as depression and gloomy mood because of its encompassing dark aura. Furthermore, dark mode gives comfort in low-light surroundings and reduces eye strain making its users prone to screen addiction. Twitter has revealed that dark mode has made users spend more time on the app than usual.

So, maybe the claim of greater concentration could be true to some extent, but only in terms of keeping individuals hooked on those apps for a longer period – giving users more reasons to be glued to their smartphones. On the contrary, everyone's experience with dark mode is different. Dark mode might bring comfort to people with issues like migraine, headaches, and certain eye conditions, but in general, it might bring more disadvantages than benefits in the end.

The need to recognise propaganda in pop culture

This issue of overt biases toward specific cultures and alignment with the existing power structure's agenda is not limited to Hollywood. Rather, it can fundamentally be found in every culture.

FARIHA LAMISA

Back when I was in high school, I found myself surprised and shaken after reading Elif Batuman's memoir, The Possessed. The memoir, written in the form of an essay collection, borrowed its title from Fydor Dostovyosky's classic of the same name. It recounts Batuman's journey as a graduate student, pursuing her PhD in Russian literature at Stanford University.

While reading the book, I found myself astounded by the rich tradition of Russian literature, which depicts human complexity maybe in its finest form. The more I read, the more I realised that my pre-existing notion of Russia as an autocratic dictatorship was developed through my predominant consumption of Hollywood. Russia and its history, just like any other country, cannot be captured in a binary depiction of good and evil. Rather, it requires adequate nuance in its portrayal, and the country of Pushkin and Dostoevsky cannot get a proper representation in the shadow of the governance of Vladimir Putin and Soviet-style communism.

This issue of overt biases toward specific cultures and alignment with the existing power structure's agenda is not limited to Hollywood. Rather, it can fundamentally be found in every culture.

Fatima Bhutto, in her book about the growing popularity of Asian pop culture titled The New Kings of the World, pointed out that since the 2014 general election of India, which brought Prime Minister Narendra Modi into power, Bollywood collectively shifted towards adopting a right-wing hyper-nationalist narrative, resulting in films that otherise the Indian-Muslim population. Although, not in equal proportion, the Bangladeshi cultural industry too has largely, if not completely, failed its minority community by hardly representing them in the cultural scenario. It would be difficult to find films or series that did an authentic portrayal of minority communities, be it ethnic or religious.

Popular culture is a product of its time, representing the politics and ideas of a specific era. Often, films and television that challenged existing power structures have faced crackdowns from autocratic governments. During the 1971 Bangladesh Liberation War, people who challenged power through art were silenced, which includes Zahir Raihan. Raihan, an acclaimed film director who supported the Bengali nationalist movement against the Pakistani authoritarian government, ended up disappearing and never being found.

ILLUSTRATION: FATIMA JAHAN ENA

When brutal suppression is in place, ruling parties maintain their grip on popular storytelling sources to spread their narratives in a more sophisticated fashion. For example, the CIA has actively funded Hollywood films to portray the organisation in a positive light, justifying torture in its military operations abroad. This includes the Oscar-winning 2012 film Zero Dark Thirty, where torture has been justified as a necessary evil despite its factual inaccuracy.

Needless to say, the dominant power structure has always made it difficult to narrate the tale of the oppressed. Elites across the globe have tried with all their might to keep the popular mediums of storytelling to fit their narrative. It would not be wrong to say that they do often succeed due to superior resources. However, we need to question who is producing the narrative and what purpose it serves.

In the age of rapid technological advancement where the battle of narrative is intense, it is important for us to make ourselves digitally literate and to question what we see and recognise its ideological orientation. It is not wrong to adopt and promote a specific ideology. However, doing that at the cost of truth is vile. As a result, we need to question and corroborate what we see. By the mere act of identifying the rhetoric behind what we consume, we may effectively end up recognising when we are trying to be dictated against our interest and when we are being fed propaganda.

It was a brilliant final tournament. Obviously, it's not the perfect ending. It would have been amazing to have won a medal. But I feel good. I'm happy with how it's finished. I'm glad that I got to go out here at the Olympics and finish on my terms, because at times in the last few years, that wasn't a certainty.

Alcaraz ready for 'special' Olympics tennis final

AFP, Paris

Carlos Alcaraz said it will be a "special moment" for him when he will be bidding to add Olympic gold to his four Grand Slam titles at Roland Garros on Sunday.

On Friday when Alcaraz thrashed Canada's Felix Auger-Aliassime 6-1, 6-1 in just 75 minutes, the 21-year-old became the youngest man to reach the final since tennis returned to the Olympics at Seoul in 1988.

He will meet Novak Djokovic in Sunday's gold medal showdown if the top-seeded Serb overcomes a knee injury and Italy's Lorenzo Musetti in the second semifinal.

"The final is going to be a really special moment for me, in my life, in my career, so I'm going to try and enjoy this moment," said Alcaraz.

"It's going to be difficult, but it's also going to be special. I will try to be focused on myself and try not to hear all this, all the fans, all the people that say 'I'm going to win'.

"I just want to give 100 per cent my best tennis and hopefully I reach my goal to get the gold."

Spanish star Alcaraz, playing on the same Roland Garros court where he won a maiden French Open in June, broke the 19th-ranked Auger-Aliassime three times in the first set, racing away with six consecutive games.

Alcaraz broke again in the fourth and sixth games of the second set on his way to claiming a fourth successive win over the Canadian having lost the first three of the pair's series.

Wimbledon champion Alcaraz is the fourth Spanish man to reach the Olympic men's final after Jordi Arrese at Barcelona in 1992, Sergi Bruguera in Atlanta four years later and Rafael Nadal who won gold at Beijing in 2008.

He now can also become the youngest men's champion since tennis returned to the Olympics in 1988.

Done in 46 seconds, but debate goes on

AFP, Paris

Algerian boxer Imane Khelif's 46-second win at the Paris Olympics on Thursday sparked a furious row about gender eligibility rules.

Italian boxer Angela Carini retired hurt and shrugged off attempts by Khelif to shake her hand, before collapsing to her knees and sobbing uncontrollably in the middle of the ring.

Khelif advanced to the quarterfinals of the women's 66kg category after unloading two strong punches to the face of Carini, who had blood on her shorts and was unable to carry on because of a badly hurt nose.

"My nose started dripping (with blood) from the first hit," said the distressed Carini, who also broke down in tears when talking to reporters.

The 25-year-old sobbed: "I fought very often in the national team. I train with my brother. I've always fought against men, but I felt too much pain today."

Khelif and Taiwan's Lin Yu-ting, who was set to fight on Friday at 57kg, were disqualified from the 2023 world championships in New Delhi run by the International Boxing Association (IBA) but deemed eligible to box in the women's competition in Paris.

Both boxers also competed at the Tokyo Olympics three years ago.

The IBA, in a statement on Wednesday, said Lin and Khelif were disqualified from the world championships as "a result of their failure to meet the eligibility criteria for participating in the women's competition".

"The athletes did not undergo a testosterone examination but were subject to a separate and recognised test, whereby the specifics remain confidential," it added.

The International Olympic Committee is running the boxing in the French capital because of governance, financial, and ethical issues at the IBA.

IOC spokesman Mark Adams told reporters this week that they "are women in their passports and it's stated in there that they are female".

With a host of public figures, including Italian Prime Minister Giorgia Meloni and US presidential candidate Donald Trump, weighing in on the matter, the debate seems to go on as Khelif is set to return to the ring on Saturday.

While Meloni said the fight was "not on an equal footing", Trump declared on his Truth Social network: "I WILL KEEP MEN OUT OF WOMEN'S SPORTS!"

Lyles to kick off double dream in 100m

REUTERS, Paris

American Noah Lyles will bring his "main character energy" to the Stade de France on Saturday as he begins his quest for the Olympic sprint double in the men's 100 metres heats.

He failed to qualify for the shorter sprint at the Olympics three years ago and won bronze in the 200 - his signature event - before embarking on a period of self-reflection.

Lyles clocked 9.81 seconds to win at the London Diamond League meeting in his final Olympic tune-up event last month, a promising sign for American fans.

While most bookmakers would put him as a strong favourite in the longer sprint - he has not lost a 200 metres race since Tokyo - he could face a tougher road in the 100, as he takes on young challengers from the United States' archrival Jamaica.

Oblique Seville handed him his only 100 loss of the season in Kingston in June and Kishane Thompson set the world leading mark of 9.77 at the Jamaica team trials. That duo will be hungry to get their country back to the top of the podium eight years after retired great Usain Bolt last took the gold.

While the defending Olympic champion would typically command a decent share of the spotlight, Italian Lamont Marcell Jacobs has rarely been a factor on the track following a series of injuries since his shock win in Tokyo three years ago.

Instead, Kenyan Ferdinand Omanyala appeared on everyone's radar when he won his national trials in 9.79, while Lyles' compatriots Kenny Bednarek and Tokyo silver medallist Fred Kerley remain perennial contenders.

BILES, ANDRADE poised to soar

AFP, Paris

US gymnastics great Simone Biles will likely have to bring out the "big guns" again on Saturday as she vies for her third gold medal of the Paris Olympics in a women's vault final that again pits her against defending champion Rebeca Andrade of Brazil.

Biles shook off a sub-par uneven bars routine to edge Andrade for all-around gold on Thursday, two days after she and her USA teammates captured gold.

One difference-maker for Biles was her signature Yurchenko double pike vault, which has a difficulty score so high that even with an imperfect landing she out-scored Andrade. "I wasn't planning on it," Biles said of opting for the double pike in all-around.

"But I just knew how phenomenal of an athlete (Andrade) is. So I was like, 'OK, I think I have to bring out the big guns this time."

To retain the vault title she won in Tokyo, where Biles withdrew from multiple events because of the mental block gymnasts call the "twisties," Andrade might have to up her own firepower.

The Brazilian edged Biles for the vault world title last October and has indicated she could unveil a never-before-seen triple-twisting Yurchenko vault. If she pulls that off it would carry a difficulty score of 6.0 -- closer to the 6.4 of the double pike version now known as the Biles II.

After her close call in the all-around, where Biles trailed for the first time since the halfway point in Rio, Biles quipped that Andrade was making her life too stressful. "I don't want to compete with Rebeca no more. I'm tired!" Biles said. "It's way too close."

But she added: "I knew if I did my work, it would all be fine."

Playing on his PSG home ground, Morocco captain Achraf Hakimi put on a player-of-the-match performance as his side outclassed the United States on Friday to reach the semifinals of the Olympics men's football. Hakimi was among the scorers as Morocco, who will play either Japan or Spain in Monday's semifinal in Marseille, dispatched the USA 4-0 in front of a packed crowd. PHOTO: REUTERS

Cricketers to undergo fitness test today amid unrest

SPORTS REPORTER

With a watchful eye on the ongoing unrest in the country, the Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) has decided to go ahead with the previously scheduled physical assessment test of the cricketers in the Test fold at the Bangabandhu National Stadium (BNS) today.

"We are observing the situation and are in communication with the management. Our prime focus is to ensure everyone's safety, not just the players," BCB cricket operations in-charge Shahriar Nafees told The Daily Star on Friday.

"We will take the final decision after observing the entire day. But as of now, everything is on track," he added.

The players will complete a 1.6km time trial at the BNS between 6:00 AM to 7:30 AM under their strength and conditioning coach Nathan Kiely before moving to the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium in Mirpur for a gym session and other fitness tests, scheduled from 8:30 AM.

Kiely and other coaching staff including head coach Chandika Hathurusingha have already reached Dhaka ahead of the Tigers' preparation camp for their two-match Test series against Pakistan.

Spin-bowling coach Mushtaq Ahmed, who will oversee the spinners during the Pakistan series, was the last member of the coaching panel to arrive in the city on Friday night.

The preparation will get underway with the fitness test and the players will begin training in Mirpur on Sunday.

Some members of the Test fold, who recently returned home from their Australia tour with the High Performance Unit where they played two four-day matches against Pakistan Shaheens, will not take the fitness test.

Earlier, several members of the Test fold had played two intra-squad practice matches during their camp in Chattogram last month.

Skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto missed the practice matches as he travelled to Thailand for a medical check-up while head coach Hathurusingha and some other members of the coaching staff failed to join the side due to travel issues.

The first Test in Rawalpindi will take place on August 21-25 while Karachi will host the second Test on August 30-September 3. The series will be part of the ICC World Test Championship 2023-25 cycle. The Tigers are expected to fly to Pakistan on August 17.

However, some players like Mushfiqur Rahim and Mominul Haque will travel to Pakistan on August 6 as part of the Bangladesh A team to feature in their opening four-day game against their Pakistani counterparts, scheduled on August 10-13.

‘Statement from DB office was not voluntary’

Say six organisers about the withdrawal of programmes

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The six key organisers of the quota reform movement yesterday said they did not voluntarily issue the statement to withdraw their movement and that it was forcibly filmed during their detention at the Detective Branch (DB) office.

"Since July 19, the coordinators of the anti-discrimination student movement have been missing, arrested, tortured, and harassed to foil the movement. Subsequently, six coordinators were detained in DB custody for seven days in the name of 'security'. Although the home minister and the DB chief talked about security, they kept us in DB custody to isolate us from the movement," the statement said.

The statement was signed by Nahid Islam, Sarjis Alam, Hasnat Abdullah, Asif Mahmud, Nusrat Tabassum, and Abu Baker Majumdar.

Among them, 55 students got bail in Dhaka division, 14 in Chattogram division, six in Khulna division and three in Rangpur division.

Dhaka Metropolitan Police produced those arrested in the capital before the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court yesterday. The court sent most of them to jail and placed some in custody.

At least 11,052 people have been arrested since the drives began on July 18. The arrestees include students, BNP, and Jamaat-Shibir leaders and activists.

Israel's 'end getting closer than ever'

Says Hamas after its leader Haniyeh buried in Qatar

REUTERS, DUBAI

Hamas' top leader Ismail Haniyeh was buried in Qatar yesterday following his assassination in the Iranian capital Tehran as senior officials of Hamas and other mourners said their fight against Israel would intensify.

His death was one in a series of killings of senior Hamas figures as Israel's offensive in Gaza nears its 11th month and concern grows that the conflict is spreading across the Middle East.

Haniyeh was laid to rest in a cemetery in the city of Lusail after a funeral ceremony at the Iman Mohamed Ibn Abd Al-Wahhab Mosque in Qatar's capital Doha.

His coffin, draped in the Palestinian flag, was carried in a procession past hundreds of people along with the casket of his bodyguard, who was killed in the same attack in Tehran on Wednesday.

Mourners at the ceremony included Khaled Meshaal, who is tipped to be the new Hamas leader. Other senior Hamas officials and Qatar's

France's medals strategy paying off

REUTERS, Paris

A French strategy to boost its medal count after years of sporting underachievement has begun to pay dividends at the Paris Olympics as rapturous home crowds propel its athletes up the medals table, although keeping up the pace may prove hard.

One week into the Paris Games, France has won eight golds and 27 medals in total. Since Atlanta in 1996, France has averaged 37 medals per Olympics, a Reuters calculation shows.

France's early improvement is the fruit of a seven-year plan that it hopes will position it as a long-term Olympics heavyweight.

It is based on promoting excellence in sports clubs and federations and zeroing in on medal hopes, as well as bringing families closer to the action, providing more performance support teams and capitalising on home advantage -

Barishal, a serene escape amid nature's bounty

> "Now with Padma Bridge, it has become possible to go on day trips to Barishal. I started at 6:00am and reached Barishal by 10:00am. I booked a room at a local hotel and allowed my driver to rest, while I hired their colourful tempo and went sightseeing."

RAFFAT BINTE RASHID

Surrounded by tall coconut and betel nut trees, picturesque ponds, and lagoons -- the green countryside makes Barishal a great city for local tourism. This mid-southern part of Bangladesh, with an amazing diversity in aqua-nature, is an unpolluted, tidy city that is lush all over.

As soon as you turn left, past the Dhaka-Bhanga Expressway, you fall on the Bhanga-Barishal-Patuakhali highway and you are welcomed by a canopy of old trees lined on both sides of the road leading to the city. Traffic on these roads is not much, so the noise and air pollution in cities like Barishal, and Faridpur are at a minimum level; at least for Dhakaites, that is.

Not only the highway, even roads, lanes, and thoroughfares inside the city are lined with old rain trees or "rendi" as the locals call it. Amazingly, each tree is covered in a lush growth of epiphytic plants like wild ferns, orchids, hoya, and moss, hugging the trunk with their green leaves and flowers cascading and dangling down, co-existing most harmoniously, lending a dreamy feel to the whole ambiance of this laid-back city.

Barishal is truly beautiful.

"Now with Padma Bridge, it has become possible to go on day trips to Barishal. I started at 6:00am and reached Barishal by 10:00am. I booked a room at a local hotel and allowed my driver to rest, while I hired their colourful tempo and went sightseeing," says Rosie Ahmed, who was a resident of the city during her childhood.

"I went looking for my old house, my first school, and the Guthia mosque, an amazing architectural feat surrounded by manicured gardens, guarded by a big flock of swans. The Baitul Aman Jame Masjid Complex commonly known as Guthia Mosque, is inspired by Islamic architecture, the mosque complex stands on 14 acres of land, with 20 domes, and there are three lakes surrounding the mosque in a manner that reflects the whole mosque from different angles.

"Several calligraphies of Ayatul Kursi and Surah Ar-Rahman are inscribed around the mosque walls. It envelopes you in a spiritual calmness, as you sit in the corridors," Ahmed, 76, says.

"We feasted on a lavish lunch of hilsa in mustard paste, and thick lentil curry and headed towards the hilsa 'arodh' [wholesale market]. Our reason for this day trip was to bag the big Padma hilsas. Then, we started our return to Dhaka around 4:00pm and reached the capital by 10:00pm. It was an amazing adventure," Ahmed relays the details of their trip.

If you plan to spend a weekend in Barishal, The Grand Park Hotel ensures a five-star stay with well-designed suites, a lavish breakfast spread, swimming pool with steam and sauna facilities. Their hospitality will want you to go back again.

"The main touristy appeal is the backwaters of Barishal, an incredible labyrinthine system of intersected canals, which makes for an amazing, once-in-a-lifetime experience. You can take a dinghy boat and row your way through narrow canals, which are just wide enough for the boat to maneuver. For the wider canals, you can hire motorised trawlers," says says Zahidul Haque Babul, who has his roots in Barishal but lives in Dhaka for his businesses

"This is a great source of entertainment for the young residents and tourists, they play the latest Bangla and Hindi hits, blasting through the big loudspeakers. They just dive and frolic in the canals to cool off, their happiness is contagious. The main attraction of these rides is the floating guava and lemon market. There is also a boat market," he added.

The moist mud along the canals is perfect for the local variety of guava, hog plum, and lemon. The fruit orchards extend a minimum of two miles around the canal system and the trees almost bend down on the side and you can reach out for the fruits from your boat.

The biodiversity of the backwater of Barishal is an astounding, complex clockwork of nature. A man surrounded by thick green vegetation and an aquatic ecosystem makes for an interdependent living. Each household has basket fishing traps, which are dipped into the river with its open end, when it is lifted, the water drains off and the catches are picked.

This makes for a scrumptious lunch with taro and other greens that grow in abundance on their homestead. The bamboo fences or machas are full of hanging seasonal vegetables like kakrol or teasel gourd and other leafy greens; dead betel nut tree trunks make their shako or makeshift bridge placed across the narrow canals to go from one house to another.

"Living in this remote place is stress-free, locals make do with whatever nature provides. In these rural households, life is as organic as it can be. Moving through the backwaters of Barishal, you surrender to nature, the heavy silence in these deep areas is only interrupted when the boat's oar slowly moves the water or when a bird chirps. The silence is so intense that it gets to you at one point," quips Chompa Hossain, a student who resides on the banks of a canal. She was perched up on a pier, selling green coconuts from her smallholding.

From hand-churned butter to roshgollas, from hilsa wholesale markets to Arabian restaurants like Huma Hum [which means feasting together] serving the best Arabian rice dish called khabsa, a weekend in this city can be joyful.

THE MUCH-FREQUENTED PLACES

Barishal has its healthy share of rich history, being one of the oldest municipalities and river ports of Bengal. It was said that the economy of Bengal was dependent on the economy of Barishal because its fertile land, consisting of silt, was excellent for agriculture and was thus considered the granary of Bengal.

As history and folklore point out, the city, located on the north bank of the Bay of Bengal in southern Bangladesh and surrounded by many rivers, was once called the Venice of the East.

Famous tourist attractions include the Durga Sagar -- a sanctuary for birds, and a haven for fishing -- a vast lake with a total area of about 25 hectares (62 acres).

Bibir Pukur, right in the middle of a busy thoroughfare, is another well-known historical place. The pond is named after Jinath Bibi, who had the pond dug in 1908 to give relief to the locals from the suffering of water shortage.

Zilla school, the vertically huge structure of Barisal Medical College, and the famous Govt Brojomohun College, commonly known as BM College, founded in 1889, is one of the oldest institutions of higher education in Bangladesh. All these places have their foundation grounded in history from the colonial era.

Bell's Park is another example of Barishal's British-Bengal connection. Situated at the heart of Barishal is the Bangabandhu Udyan, popularly known as Bell's Park. This historic urban park adjacent to a riverside road has a playground, a walkway, and a helipad, all encircled by old trees. The park was constructed in 1896 by ND Beatson-Bell to celebrate the visit of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, lieutenant-governor of Bengal.

Another historical place turned into a happening leisure destination is the "Tirish Godown" by the river Kirtankhola. History says there were 30 go-downs to store rice, which were dispatched and distributed from there to other districts. The al-fresco-styled food court and small two-storied hut-like restaurants offer a variety of snacks as diverse as jhalmuri and syrupy waffles to phuchka, chotpoti, and bite-sized Bombay shingaras.

"Craft shops line the river banks along the Bhanga Bazar by Kirtankhola. They also offer rental trawler rides on the Kirtankhola, a river that is 160 kilometres," says Chompa, while talking enthusiastically about why Barishal can be your next tourist destination.

You soak in the serenity of the flowing river view and be mesmerised like Jibanananda Das with beautiful Barishal -- serene with wide roads, glistening ponds at intervals, dotted by tall coconut trees, the big neon sign of "I love Barishal" at the city centre by the Planet Park compliments the cityscape.

Barishal is Bangladesh's third largest financial hub after Dhaka and Chattogram. The south of Bangladesh is lush and unaltered away from the tide of urbanisation. It's the perfect local tourism destination to unwind.

Barishal is truly "God's own country".

Geronimo rushed inside the hole coughing, somehow managing to shut the door behind him. His mother Telapatra grabbed her son, hugging her tight for an instant before smacking him across the back. "How many times did I tell you not to go out at this hour?" cried Telapatra.

"They're spraying insecticides everywhere", coughed Geronimo, "I saw it with my own eyes."

"Those are for the affected ones only", commented an unbothered Mr Telaroach, Geronimo's father.

Telapatra looked at her husband with cold eyes, giving him the signal to shut up for once, which really isn't Mr Telaroach's area of expertise. Geronimo, still in disbelief at his father's lack of empathy, burst into tears, "I was there, Papa! I saw cockroaches my age lose consciousness and drop dead within seconds. "Oh, that little runt", Mr Telaroach sounded annoyed, "They're the ones spreading this disease and forcing the authorities to take such measures. Have you seen his face? He looks like one of those insurgents—his entire family does."

Tears kept rolling down Geronimo's cheeks as he stared at his unbothered father. He choked out a quick burst of laughter out of rage and disbelief before rushing to his room.

The situation in Roachtown worsened after an epidemic of rot disease spread across the town, affecting cockroaches of all ages and causing their skin and wings to rot within a few days. In response, the authority imported vaccines from the faraway lands of Roachland at cheap rates. The motive was mostly to rebuild a friendly relation with the town, which had been otherwise strained for years.] to [The motive was mostly to rebuild a friendly relation, which had otherwise been strained for years, with the town. The friendship between the two towns meant a lot to the authority and they were willing to take any measures to make sure it was strengthened under the current regime.

Although the new vaccine put a halt on the rot, victims mysteriously died of other reasons within weeks. The authority put out a notice suggesting the epidemic had been successfully tackled and the mysterious deaths were completely unrelated to the vaccinations. While the authority-funded celebrations riled up the city and Roachtown declared itself a 'rot-free city', an independent study about the vaccine was leaked by a whistleblower within the Health Ministry. The study showed clear correlations between the vaccine and the mysterious deaths that followed and the authority's efforts to hide it. The whistleblower, Telward Roachden, was found dead in his home the next day.

Following the leak, protests broke out all across Roachtown as crowds numbering up to thousands gathered outside the town centre. It was unlike anything Roachtown authority had ever seen before or expected for that matter. The mayor, Julius Roacher, decided it was time to go hard and nip the protest in its bud before it could turn into a revolution.

Mayor Roacher knew that two measurements were needed before his forces could clean house—cease all modes of communication and control what the public gets to know. For the first measure, all telephone lines were cut across the town and flying was prohibited until further notice. Now that the unregulated flow of information ceased, it was time to control and modify it. The mayor called an urgent meeting with newspaper editors: "The headlines will be sent to you right after midnight", they ordered. "You can work overnight, fill in the gaps and print them by the morning. If you don't want to end up like The Roach Times, I suggest you listen to my suggestions, stop printing misinformation and stop creating panic in times of emergency."

Most roaches knew the mayor's strategies and didn't believe the newspapers anymore. While they were still on the streets putting their lives on the line, some roaches like Mr Telaroach were gullible enough to believe wholeheartedly that everything truly was under control. 'The true cockroaches of Roachtown'—as mayor Roacher had labelled them and congratulated them for keeping their trust in the republic.

To the mayor's displeasure, the situation kept worsening and he had no option but to launch smokes of the same vaccine at the gathered crowd, only multiple doses stronger, intense enough for the rioters to lose consciousness and die in under a minute. To their horror, the casualties reached thousands within a week.

"It says right here—the casualties have been somewhere under a hundred", declared Mr Telaroach, reading The Daily Roach out loud to his revolting son and an unconvinced yet silent wife, "I believe it's even less. The Daily Roach has always been a bit anti-republic."

"Just look out the window, Papa!" howled Geronimo, "They're spraying the pesticide everywhere as we speak. There isn't even a crowd out there. They're just targeting neighbourhoods now."

"It's a vaccine, not pesticide", scolded Mr Telaroach, "And didn't you read the leaflet distributed by the mayor? These vaccines are genetically modified in such a manner that it will only affect the anti-republics. Roaches like us will be safe from its effects even if we accidentally fall in the attack radius."

The silent treatment from his wife and son angered Mr Telaroach even more. "Look, the mayor's even distributing gas masks at a discounted rate! There's no pleasing y'all anymore", he said while putting on the gas mask to show Geronimo.

Suddenly, a shell burst right through the window of the Telaroach household. Before Mr Telaroach could run towards his wife and son, a huge explosion threw him across the drawing room and against the wall.

When he woke up minutes later, Mr Telaroach crawled across piles of rubble and, as the dust finally settled, he could see Geronimo and Telapatra lying on their backs, covered in bricks and rods, presumably dead.

The attacks on Roachtown that night were the final blow on the revolution with casualties crossing 10,000 in a single night. When the bodies were too many for the mayor to hide, he wrote an emergency instruction for the victims' families to be broadcasted via flying roaches all across Roachtown.

Mr Telaroach was holding his wife and son, still in shock, when he heard the declaration in the loudspeaker, "Victims' family members are instructed not to panic. As you know, the vaccines only affect the anti-republics. If you're confident that your loved one is not an anti-republic, you're instructed to dig a hole behind your household and bury them as soon as possible. Not following this procedure will automatically result in labelling the victim as an anti-republic and the household will be issued an anti-republic certificate by our officials."

Mr Telaroach quickly rushed to the shed behind his house and grabbed a shovel. He had a long night ahead of him.

FARAH MASUD

"Attention passengers.
The next train arriving is a B train traveling westbound towards Boston College.
Please stand clear of the closing doors."
Hop on, squeeze between bodies against bodies against face against bags and sweaty hands of children.
Swing back and forth,
catch yourself from falling into someone's lap instead,
knock your head on sticky glass,
tossing and turning on squeaky tracks.
Taste, the tang of rusty metal, sweetness of snacks.
Stop, collect more bodies.
Squeeze, make space.
Breathe, as little as possible.
Tossing and turning on squeaky tracks.
It's 8:30 pm and the sun is just setting.
Back home the sun would've set long before.
Right now the Isha Azaan would be blaring.
But here–
the final screech of wheels on the rails, bodies against bodies against stroller against doors.
Hop off, breathe.
A quiet lull.
Gaze at the dying sun,
cinnamon-lavender sky,
memories of a lullaby.
Bulbul pakhi moyna tiye
Ayna ja na gaan shuniye.
Birds you can no longer find—hear them sing
Songs of distant forests and blue rivers,
Dur dur boner gaan
Nil nil nodir gaan.
Set aside milk, rice, and shondesh
Dudhbhaat debo shondesh makhiye...
Watch them go stale and forgotten–
Cling to the tune of your mother's voice, guiding yours
to a time trapped in a chrysalis.
Your first song on stage
She taught you to sing
All this time you thought it was about birds in the sky,
But was it really about long-winded goodbyes?
Jhilmil jhilmil jhorna jethay

A man walks into a bar

a man walks into a bar but he looks like a little boy except for his eyes that wrinkle around the edges (this is the start of a joke)
a man walks into a bar looking like a little boy but the bartender decides to cut him some slack.
after all, he passed the initial inspection;
and he looks like he could use a drink.
his timid stance, nervous stare and jittery legs make him look out of place that could supposedly come from carrying a fake id or from being in the sight of too many people.
that man of course, is you.
and you are not a little boy.
but it's an easy mistake to make;
the way you always sleep in a foetal position or the way you feel too much but can never put them in words.
a curious case; but not an unsolvable one.
until your eyes speak up and apart from the rest of you they say how you almost obsessively take the longest of walks or the way you are unfazed in thunderstorms and it's the quiet you that makes you flinch.
you are a monolith of contradictions, but you could use a drink.
so you are offered a drink.
which you unceremoniously almost immediately spit out from your mouth. So childish inside your hand there is a punchline inside the other, there is a keepsake dug out from the bottom of a well from what appears to be buttons.
When you are rushed to the hospital
the sound of sirens lull you to sleep.

Valiant voices against brute force
THE FEARLESS UPSTARTS OF BANGLA RAP

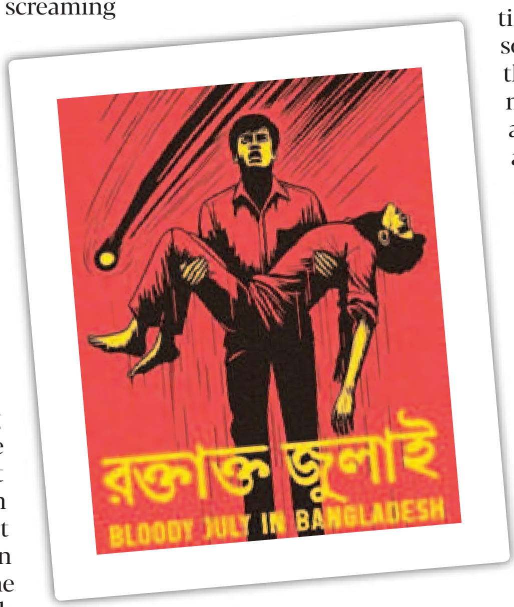
DOWEL BISWAS

If your time to you is worth savin'
And you better start swimmin'
Or you'll sink like a stone
For the times they are a-changin'

As Bob Dylan, often considered as one of the greatest songwriters of history puts it on his revolutionary anthem The Times They Are A-Changin'. Dylan later recalled writing the song as a deliberate attempt to create an anthem of change for the moment, to capture the spirit of social and political upheaval that characterised the 1960s. However, it's weirdly satisfying to find that time echoes its own course, speaking the truth no matter what and where–it does always sing for the oppressed.

The song finds a weird sense of autonomy alongside the protesters on the streets, musicians, singers, rappers, from all walks of life – the voice of youth and the country now, are screaming with an untrumpable tool that no oppressing entity could ever tame–poetry, lyricism and music.

It's incredible how modified slogans, songs, anthems surrounding our Liberation War of 1971 are being uttered on the streets to support the quota reform movement that has been raging in the country for the past month. Bangla has always been a land where political resurgence has been dealt and stood on the stronghold of its cultural heritage. People have raged wars, formed rebellion through the purest form of art, the voice of the revolution always has been laid on this landscape with cultural dignity and opulence, through its songs, poems, graffiti and mass folk songs.



Rapper Hannan Hossain Shimul, who has recently come into the spotlight for his hit rebel rap Awaaz Utha, was arrested on July 25 in Narayanganj's Bhuighor area.

Ironically, he starts his song by incorporating Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's historic 7th March speech, with a chorus that tells us to call out freedom through Awaaz Utha Bangladesh. Hannan's lyrics loosely translate to:

"Bengalis are no fools, we won't fall for every trick they throw,

...Sayeed, I'm taking the bullet, smiling at the barrel's call,

Student voices rise, commands come from the hall."

Hannan's song, which sought freedom of speech, had gathered over 600,000 views on YouTube and was trending on # 5 in music category till August 1. The song emphasised the strength of music in rebellion as it stands, as a cultural movement, mirroring the same values, empowering individuals to express their truths and confront societal challenges. However, his non-political stance couldn't save him from being imprisoned under unknown clauses of the law and jurisdiction.

Dozens of rap songs came to prominence in the span of only a month to stand alongside the thousands of protestors across Bangladesh, voicing their demands and speaking of what the imprisoned, 'beaten up' and 'silenced' could not. Like Pablo Neruda's famous line "You can cut all the flowers but you cannot keep spring from coming," these fiery artistes are a voice that no oppressing entity could ever stop.

Another rapper Shezan, popularly known as Shezan Beatz, released his rap track Kotha Ko on July 16, which had gathered over 1.6 million views, making the YouTube trending list with the following lyrics.

"Where's the difference between 52 and 24? Speak up!

If the country claims freedom, where's the freedom? Speak up!

My siblings die on the streets, are you even trying? Speak up!"

Another rap song, Gold Cube and Scary Crow's Desh Shongskar, also borrows from a historic speech from Bangabandhu. In the song, they demand answers from the ruling party for the mass imprisonment, usage of oppressive methods of handling peaceful students and protestors on the streets urging for a rightful demand, merit-based assessment and opportunities. His lyrics read, "Rebellion every time..not for jobs, stipends, but dignity...in a land ruled by tyrants, where thieves feast, more students die than birds from bullets," the song carries out with this message.

Rap song, Desh Kar? by Lunatix Veer and Rhythmsta, speaks no different than its predecessors, carrying the same spirit of resistance and uprising, which came back to us in every generation, the only difference perhaps is its usage of contemporary Bangla as a language.

Quota na Medha?, dedicated to Abu Sayeed, who died after being shot by rubber bullet while protesting for the quota reform, chants the claim of the protesters, "Quota or Merit?".

"I dream of change,
...As death visits my life.
Chanting slogans, my voice cracks,
Counting bullet scars on my chest."

Most of these songs speak of the same demands, cries, chants we hear through shouts, chants, slogans, in poetry and spirit. They are of the same message with different words put together eloquently, beautifully and blatantly, looking eye to eye with a higher power.

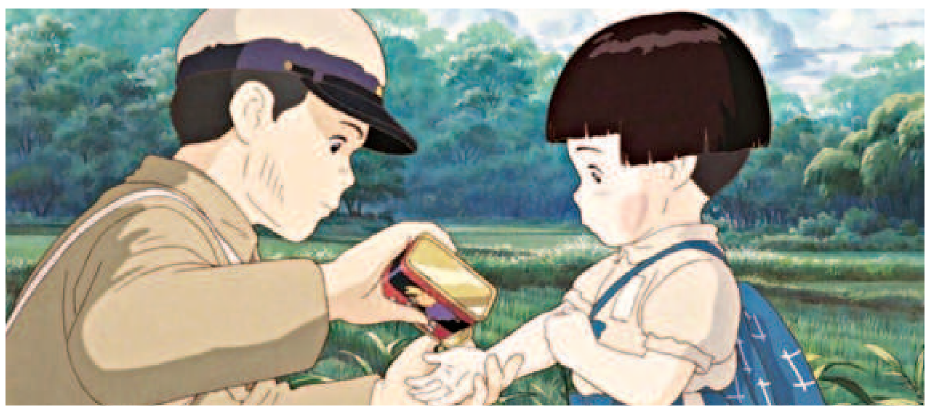
Joining in the rebellious voices are Chobbisher Guerrilla by the rap group by the same name (trending #18 on YouTube for music), Omix's Rokto, Mcc-e Mac and Gk Kibria's Inquilab, Lazy Panda O'seven and Dashu's Freedom ain't free, Crown Engine's Daam De, Flag Bang's Godi Chhar, Chef-IQ's Bangla Ma, Raafky's Odhikaar, Coldcraft and Bihan's Bayanno, Mascot's Freedom?, Wakeup Hadi's Shokuner Chokh, and Rafsan Ahmed Siam's Joy Bangla, while many others have become the voice of the bleeding country whose sons and daughters are on the streets fighting for their cause.

These young upstarts of Bangla rap have achieved a feat that the mainstream music industry in Bangladesh could never achieve in this decade -- point their valiant, unsheathed, and belligerent voice against the guns of the oppressors.

The rap verses have been translated into English for the readers' convenience.

1-MINUTE REVIEW

Silent cries and enduring impact of 'Grave of the Fireflies'



A forlorn, devastating, yet enrapturing Studio Ghibli production that will forever remain as one of the flagbearers of Japanese credo and stand the test of time is Grave of the Fireflies.

Released in 1988, this Isao Takahata-directed anime film tells the story of two military siblings who endure the consequences of surviving the end of a losing war, marred by the death of their mother and the uncertain return of their father, who works in the Japanese Navy.

In March 1945, as the Pacific War neared its end, American Boeing B-29 Superfortress bombers obliterated much of the city of Kobe. Following their mother's death, Seita and Setsuko Yokokawa were forced to leave their abusive aunt's home after staying there too long.

It is Seita's hard-and-fast ideal of never having to settle for abuse or mistreatment, which is often associated with being Japanese, that prevents him from either seeking help or even accepting help from people who willingly lend a hand.

The film derives its meaning from the bond between the brother and her sister. Scarcely finding kindness in a war-ridden and nearly apathetic atmosphere, Seita goes above and beyond to provide his beloved younger sister, Setsuko, with the comforting images of a world that was too harsh and unforgiving.

WHAT'S PLAYING

AWAAZ UTHA

Awaaz Utha by Hannan, produced and mastered by SnareByt, is a powerful rebel rap song that begins with Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's historic 7th March speech.

Released on July 18, the track emphasises the importance of freedom of speech and the courage to resist oppression, aligning with Hip Hop's core values. With 381k views in just 12 days and trending at #9 on YouTube, the song has struck a chord with listeners. Its compelling intro, Raise your voice, Bangladesh, calls for justice and resilience against societal injustices.

The intro of the song loosely translates to: Raise your voice, Bangladesh, raise your voice//So much blood on the streets, raise your voice//Raise your voice, Bangladesh, raise your voice//Who fired the shots on the streets?//Raise your voice, Bangladesh.

JOB-SCARCE ECONOMY

Frustration runs deep among a generation of graduates as too many unemployed young people chase too few jobs

> Except for public service and a few private companies, job security is scarce in Bangladesh. Only a few private companies comply with the labour law.
> Syed Sultan Uddin Ahmmed,
> Former executive director of Bangladesh Institute of Labour Studies

MD ASADUZ ZAMAN

The recent unrest stemming from a student movement seeking reforms to the quota policy for government jobs boiled over into violence after the initially peaceful protest was allegedly attacked by an opposing party.

Then, between July 18 and 25, there was an internet outage and the government imposed a nationwide curfew in a bid to restore order. People were understandably anxious at the time as they were cut off from almost all communication and had no idea what may come next.

And although things have slowly improved since then, seeing the lengths people would go to for a better chance at working in civil services begs the question: what is so appealing about government jobs?

Ahmed Reza (not his real name), a former student of economics at Jahangirnagar University, first appeared at the Bangladesh Civil Service (BCS) examination in 2017.

He has taken the exam five times since, and reached the viva voce twice, but on all occasions he failed to secure a coveted government job.

He was assigned a non-cadre post in the 40th BCS, but didn't join as he had greater aspirations.

Despite the failures, he didn't go for any private sector job either.

Instead, he took a different exam and joined a government office as an 11th-grade official. He was posted in Chapainawabganj, a northwestern district. But he continued to strive in future BCS exams.

"The private sector is full of uncertainties. Layoffs can happen at any time without due reason," Reza explained over the phone.

He also pointed to a lack of benefits like pensions and a lower perceived social status for his disinterest in the private sector.

Thousands of Bangladeshis like Reza graduate from universities every year and many opt to sit for the BCS exams to ensure a decent living.

This is despite the private sector being the engine of the economy, growing by 6 percent on average since 2000.

However, university graduates do not prefer the private sector unless they can find jobs in banks or multinational companies.

Factors like low salaries, a lack of job security, high workloads and a lack of post-retirement benefits are to blame for the indifference, according to an analyst.

Despite this, a large number of educated candidates have no choice but to turn to the private sector. But there are simply not enough jobs, which is reflected in the high unemployment rate among people with tertiary education.

Among graduates, 28 percent were unemployed in 2022, estimated to be around 8 lakh of the total unemployed population, according to the Labour Force Survey 2022 by the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS).

Graduates also remain unemployed for a long time, as nearly 20 percent wait for two years for a job, while 15 percent remain jobless for more than two years, as per the BBS data.

Against this backdrop, university students demanded the government reform the quota system for public sector jobs.

"The high unemployment rate and a dearth of jobs have led to the quota reform movement," opined Syed Sultan Uddin Ahmmed, former executive director of the Bangladesh Institute of Labour Studies.

The quota system reserved 56 percent of total jobs for children and grandchildren of freedom fighters, women, ethnic minorities and persons with disability, specifically for the 9th to 13th grade, as of 2018.

The remaining jobs were filled based on merit.

In the wake of massive student protests in 2018, the government reformed the quota system.

However, following a writ petition, the High Court reversed that decision in June this year.

This led to the reinstatement of the quota system and students once again took to the streets to protest the decision.

Eventually, the peaceful movement turned violent, leading to the death of at least 204 people, many of whom were students.

However, the Supreme Court upheld the order to reform the quota system on July 21, increasing the merit-based recruitment in civil service to 93 percent.

Shortly after, the government issued a circular, saying only 7 percent would secure jobs through various quotas.

"Private jobs paid around three times more than public jobs. But when the government announced a higher pay scale in 2015, it reduced the gap significantly. So public jobs became more popular," said SM Zulfiqar Ali, research director at the Bangladesh Institute of Development Studies (BIDS).

He attributed other factors like pensions, fiscal benefits, and the feeling of power that government jobs provide for their popularity.

As the unemployment rate among graduates has increased over the years, most private companies can get away with offering low pay.

Ali alleged that the high unemployment rate among graduates enables the private sector to exploit them and offer low salaries.

The lack of interest for private sector job among graduates was evident from their participation in the BCS examination as around 4.75 lakh applications were registered for the preliminary examination of the 41st BCS and 4.35 lakh for the 43rd BCS.

However, competition is fierce.

For example, after the 43rd BCS, the Bangladesh Public Service Commission recommended 2,805 candidates for different cadre and non-cadre positions.

"Except for public service and a few private companies, job security is scarce in Bangladesh. Only a few private companies comply with the labour law," Ahmmed added.

He further said the starting salary for most private jobs is Tk 20,000 to Tk 25,000, while their cohorts in government jobs get almost double alongside other benefits.

"There is deep-rooted discrimination in terms of social dignity and job security and that's why the recent protest was not confined to quota reform -- it was also for raising the voice of many unemployed graduates," said Ahmmed.

As per the BBS, the unemployment rate in Bangladesh was 3.5 percent in 2022, which he said was due to a faulty definition.

According to the definition, a person is considered employed if he or she works for even a single hour during the previous week.

Ahmmed and Ali both believed that this definition simply did not work from Bangladesh's perspective.

"If we take into consideration the Bangladesh's perspective, the unemployment rate among graduates as well as the overall jobless rate might be higher," he said.

Employment includes part-time, informal, temporary, seasonal or casual jobs within the national territory or abroad.

At present, the country has nearly 26 lakh unemployed people, with 21.46 lakh or almost 83 percent aged between 15 to 29.

Additionally, around 68 lakh people are underutilised and are suffering from underemployment. Of them, 13.18 lakh are graduates.

Sayema Haque Bidisha, a professor of economics at the University of Dhaka, believes that high unemployment has created frustration and anger among graduates.

"Graduates are more interested in public jobs for job security and social status," she said.

Besides, not all graduates have the necessary skills for private jobs. This skill mismatch leads many to go for government jobs, exposing the lack of upskilling support, she added.

"We need to develop our academic curriculum and provide soft skills to the graduates as per the job sectors' requirements."

Sabuj Sarker, who graduated in mass communication and journalism from Rajshahi University in 2019 and is currently preparing for public jobs, said some private firms offer higher perks and benefits than public jobs, but most of them are Dhaka-based.

Khondaker Golam Moazzem, research director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), said there are 12 lakh government employees in Bangladesh.

He added that the majority of employment is in the private sector. So, jobs for graduates haven't increased alongside demand.

"Our job structure is shaped like the Eiffel Tower. We have available jobs for low-skilled and less educated persons. But we do not have enough managerial or white-collar jobs, which is why many educated young people leave the country," he said.

"In such a situation, frustration grows when a graduate sees that the scope to get a job in the public sector is reduced," Moazzem added.

However, he opined that unemployment among graduates would not be solved by reforming the quota.

"If you want to solve the problem of unemployment, the private sector has to play an important role."

Gono Bhaban doors open to agitating students: PM

BSS, Dhaka

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday called upon the agitating students to sit with her at Gono Bhaban to end violence centring the quota reform protest.

"Doors to the Gono Bhaban are open. I want to sit with the student protesters and listen to them. I want no conflict."

The prime minister made the remarks at a meeting with the central leaders of the Peshajibi Somonnoy Parishad (Professionals' Coordination Council) at the Gono Bhaban in the morning.

She also asked the authorities concerned to release the general students who have been detained over the recent violence.

The PM assured that trials would be held for each person killed during the quota reform protests.

ONE DEMAND NOW

PM, her cabinet colleagues must step down, say protesters from a mammoth rally at Central Shaheed Minar

STAR REPORT

Turning down the prime minister's call for dialogue, the organisers of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement yesterday came up with a one-point demand -- the resignation of Sheikh Hasina and her cabinet members.

They made the announcement at a rally attended by tens of thousands of people at the Central Shaheed Minar around 5:00pm.

People from all walks of life – from teachers to lawyers to rickshaw pullers -- joined the rally that spilled over into surrounding areas.

"We are here with a one-point demand. We seek to ensure people's safety and justice ... ," said Nahid Islam, one of the key organisers.

Referring to the PM's call for dialogue, he said, "We are demanding the resignation of Sheikh Hasina. Her resignation is not enough;she has to be brought to justice for all the killings and abductions. Not only Sheikh Hasina, but also the entire cabinet has to resign."

Nahid said they want to develop a political system where autocracy would never return. He urged the people to join the "student-citizen mass uprising" and organise in every locality.

He said the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement will soon forge an alliance of citizens, student organisations, and all professionals.

"Upon consulting all, we will unveil a future national framework. We are urging people to join the all-out non-cooperation. We will not cooperate with the government in any way," he said.

Earlier in the morning, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina called upon the students to sit with her at the Gono Bhaban.

"The Gono Bhaban's doors are open. I want to sit with the agitating students and listen to them. I don't want any conflict," she said at a meeting with professionals.

Count of a carnage

At least 95pc of the victims were killed by gunshots, including live rounds

STAR REPORT

When Tahir Zaman Priyo, 30, was gunned down around 5:00pm on July 19 just behind Labaid Hospital in Dhaka's Dhanmondi, his friend Faria Ulfath Syed heard just a single gunshot.

Amid raging street protests and almost ceaseless firing of teargas shells and sound grenades, a panicked crowd ran into Central Road. Priyo, a journalist, and his friends, including Faria, followed, with law-enforcers closing in from front and back.

"Suddenly, I heard one single shot. First, I thought it was a sound grenade. I looked back to see Priyo on the ground. The bullet hit the back of his head," said Faria.

There are numerous such cases.

The Daily Star has now analysed injuries of 204 victims of the violent clashes centring the quota movement and found that 195 or 95 percent were killed by bullets, including live rounds, rubber bullets and shotgun pellets. Of them, 113 were shot by live rounds that struck mostly in the head, chest, stomach and abdomen. Even a single gunshot to these vital parts of the body can kill in minutes.

As many as 26 were hit by pellets or rubber bullets. Eight families confirmed their loved ones were shot, but could not specify the bullet types. The Daily Star could not reach out to the remaining 48 families, including those of the 21 unidentified bodies. Hospital, morgue and graveyard sources confirmed that they had gunshot wounds.

At least 43 of the victims were students and 32 were children with one as young as four. Unicef also said 32 children had died in the violence.

Over the last one week, The Daily Star scoured death registers at morgues, major hospitals and graveyards in Dhaka and elsewhere and reached out to different communities, and were able to collect information about 204 victims.

Of them, we collected information from families and close friends of 157 victims across the country and gathered details of the nature and extent of the injuries that killed them. Most of them said their loved ones were hit

A 17-year-old boy, who suffered bullet wounds during the recent violence, died at the Dhaka Medical College Hospital yesterday.

Mohammad Emon was shot during a clash between police and protesters in the capital's Natun Bazar area on July 19, said his sister Tahmina Begum.

No children died in recent violence

Claims home minister; curfew relaxed from 6am to 9pm in 4 districts

Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan last night said one or two teenagers may have died but no children had lost their lives in the violence centring the quota protests.

He was addressing a press briefing at the secretariat.

"You [journalists] may not be interpreting the definition of a child correctly. An 18-year-old is called a teenager, not a child. At 18, I think, he becomes a young man. That person is no longer a teenager," said the minister.

"They [children] were used as shields during this movement. They [teenagers and children] were in the front while miscreants were in the back. They [miscreants] took shelter behind the children."

Replying to a query about a journalist having died in police firing, he said, "No one was killed in police firing during the movement."

At that, another journalist asked, "Honourable minister, you said nobody died from police firing during this movement, then whose firing killed people?"

Besides, the residences of BNP leader Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury and Chattogram city unit BNP convener Ershad Ullah were vandalised last night.

Also, two cars were torched and eight were vandalised at the car park of BNP leader Shahadat Hossain.

However, sources at the houses of Nowfel and Bachchu said the attackers were not students while BNP alleged that the ruling party members attacked their leaders' residences.

Around 6:30pm, a section of people from a protest procession attacked the house of the education minister.

Some furniture and glasses of the windows were vandalised at that time, said witnesses. Two vehicles at the parking space were also vandalised.

Families left clueless as jail authorities bar them from meeting arrested loved ones

RAFIUL ISLAM

Mowsumi Parveen rushed to Bogura jail on July 20 to see her son Shahreear Muztaheed Jim, who had been arrested by police during the quota movement in Sherpur upazila and landed there.

Since then Mowsumi and his husband Tajkirul Islam went to the jail for seven successive days together or by rotation to desperately see their beloved son, but were refused by the jail authorities that has not been allowing any visitors.

Shahreear, a student of Govt Shah Sultan College, was arrested on July 17 as he, along with hundreds of other students, was demonstrating at Dhunat More area, demanding quota reform in government jobs.

"We do not know whether our son is doing well or not. We cannot see him, let alone talk," Tajkirul told The Daily Star yesterday.

"Had we met our son even once; we could console ourselves, and himself too. The jail authorities cannot even say when we will be able to meet him," Tajkirul lamented.

This is not an isolated incident. Thousands of families, whose loved ones are among the over 10,000 individuals recently arrested in connection with the quota protests, are going through immense sufferings as are being denied the chance to see or speak to their relatives in different jails of the country.

Two partners of AL's 14-party alliance urge govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Workers Party of Bangladesh and Bangladesh Tarikat Federation, two partners of the Awami League led-14 party alliance, yesterday urged the government to immediately fulfill the nine-point demand of the protesting students.

In separate meetings, the parties also urged the government to sit with the leadership of the agitating students to resolve the crisis.

"A solution could be reached by ensuring justice to the killing of students during the protests, compensation for the dead and injured, opening of educational institutions and other demands of the students. If the leadership of the student protests agrees, the Workers Party can help start that process," said its president Rashed Khan Menon.

Meanwhile, Tarikat Federation urged the government to take the leading role in resolving the crisis.

Canal land grabbed for kitchen market

Locals allege Patuakhali-2 MP gave the directive

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Around an acre land of Kashipur canal, located between Patuakhali Sadar and Baufal upazilas, is being filled up with sand for setting up a kitchen market with car parking.

The work is being done allegedly upon the directive of ASM Feroz, lawmaker of Patuakhali-2 (Bauphal) constituency, while being supervised by Majnu Howladar, chairman of local Adabaria Union Parishad.

According to locals, Bangladesh Water Development Board constructed a sluice gate and a dyke on the 300-foot wide canal around 1990, before the Local Government Engineering Department constructed the Patuakhali-Baufal road on the dyke to connect Baufal, Galachipa and Dasmina upazilas with Patuakhali district town.

As such, Kashipur became the junction where the three roads to Patuakhali Sadar, Baufal and Galachipa upazilas meet, thereby paving way for hundreds of businesses emerge on the canal's banks, which eventually led to its encroachment.

Some local businessmen at Kashipur market, wishing anonymity, said the local UP chairman plans to expand the market and began filling up sand across one acre of the canal's land as part of it.

Some of the land may also be sold as plots later, they alleged.

"The market lacks adequate space. Often, fish and vegetables have to be kept on the busy road adjacent to the market due to space constraint. To ease the shop-owners at the market, the UP chairman has initiated to expand the market by filling up some portion of the canal," said Mojibur Rahman Howladar, a local UP member.

Contacted, UP chairman Manju Howladar claimed he has only been supervising the market's expansion upon directive of local lawmaker ASM Feroz.

"The road here is very narrow while numerous different vehicles including buses and trucks ply it every day. The kitchen market is largely set up on the road, which makes it difficult for the shop-owners to run their businesses smoothly. So, lawmaker ASM Feroz directed to fill up some portion of the canal to provide space for the market. I am only supervising the work," he said.

ASM Feroz said the initiative has been taken in public interest.

"The canal has already been gradually filled up and largely abandoned, and hardly comes to any use," he added.

Contacted, Patuakhali Deputy Commissioner Noor Qutubul Alam said he was unaware about the canal filling.

"It is illegal to fill up or encroach on canals. Necessary legal actions will be taken in this regard after inquiry," he added.

74 villages submerged, thousands affected

15 points in flood control dams breached in Feni

UNB, Feni

Floodwaters have breached 15 points in the flood control embankments of the Muhuri, Kahua, and Shilonia rivers in Feni's Fulgazi and Parshuram upazilas, inundating 74 villages.

As a result, 28,000 families are stranded, with 64 families relocated to safer areas. By Saturday afternoon, river water levels had risen 220 centimetres above the danger mark.

Fulgazi Upazila Nirbahi Officer Tania Bhuiya reported that the area was first hit by floods on July 1. On August 2, the embankments of the Muhuri, Kahua, and Shilonia rivers broke once more, worsening the situation for residents. Continuous rainfall and upstream runoff have caused a significant rise in river water levels.

The rising waters of the Muhuri, Shilonia, and Kahua rivers have submerged six unions in Fulgazi upazila, affecting 43 villages and isolating 8,000 families.

According to the Water Development Board, water levels are currently 10 centimetres above the danger mark. The Feni-Bilonia regional highway is also submerged in Fulgazi and Parshuram, severing road communication with the district. New areas continue to be inundated.

28,000 families are stranded, with 64 families relocated to safer areas. By Saturday afternoon, river water levels had risen 220 centimetres above the danger mark.

Parshuram Upazila Nirbahi Officer Afroja Habib Shapla stated that approximately 20,000 people are stranded due to the floods caused by excessive rainfall and upstream runoff. The WDB reports that the Muhuri River is flowing 150 centimetres above the danger level, with the number of stranded families increasing daily.

In response to the crisis, the Fulgazi Upazila administration has distributed dry food to 300 families and prepared an additional 250 food packages. They have distributed 13 tonnes of rice and stockpiled 5 tonnes. The Parshuram Upazila administration has distributed 550 packages of dry food.

Abu Abdullah from Mirzanganj area reported that he has never seen water enter homes with such force. "We are struggling through the night," he said.

Mohammed Khalil Ullah added, "Normally, this high ground does not flood, but the heavy rainfall has submerged roads, homes, crops, and fish ponds. If the water level rises further, the situation will become dire."

Jasim Uddin, chairman of Chitholia Union Parishad, criticised the Water Development Board (WDB) for negligence, which has led to repeated breaches in the flood control embankments.

Solidarity amid strife

They called for lifting the curfew, reopening of educational institutions, stopping the harassment of students and the public, providing compensation to the families of those killed, treatment for injured protesters, and addressing the protesters' demands promptly.

They also urged a national dialogue to resolve the crisis.

The Bangladesh Krishak Sangram Samiti expressed solidarity with the students' demands, emphasising the difficulties in receiving education and unemployment after graduation.

They condemned the government's authoritarian response and urged the eradication of the entire authoritarian system to advance the movement for public liberation.

Under the banner of "Development Professionals' Alliance for Freedom and Justice", around a thousand development professionals from different organisations yesterday joined a rally at Justice Shahabuddin Park in Gulshan.

Rubaiyath Sarwar, a development professional and researcher, read the official statement, strongly asserting that injustice and state-led brutality must end, and that the people's right to speak and write must prevail.

"Bangladesh cannot afford to lose any more of its people in the fight for democracy," he added.

Various bands, solo musicians, lyricists, and composers organised the "Get Up Stand Up" event at Dhanmondi's Rabindra Sarobar to show solidarity with the student movement. Over 5,000 people attended the event, later marching to the Central Shaheed Minar.

Musicians outside Dhaka also expressed solidarity by organising similar events in their respective districts. Artists created banners and festoons with lines from Bangla songs that have historically inspired movements and protests.

Hamin Ahmed, the current president of Bamba and a member of Miles, said, "We want no more shootings, no arrests, and a proper investigation into those who have lost their lives."

"He was not involved with any political parties as he had no interest in politics. My son hoped to get a job after finishing his internship, with which he would support our family."

Farida has been inconsolable since Hasan's death. She keeps fainting over and over again, and has stopped eating properly while grieving for her son, according to family members.

Hasan's father, Jamal Uddin, who is an NGO worker, said he last spoke to his son on the afternoon of July 18. Hasan planned to return to Noakhali by a bus once the situation improved.

However, Hasan did not return. He was the oldest out of three brothers and sisters. His younger brother is a ninth-grade student in a high school in the district town, while their youngest sister is a fourth-grade student.

Brahmaputra river has become blocked over the years and is therefore unable to serve its purpose anymore, further worsening waterlogging, they also said.

Moreover, as there is no dustbin in the area, people are compelled to leave their garbage in the open, thereby posing risk of environmental and health hazards, the locals added.

"Even though the Mymensingh City Corporation authority has been repeatedly claiming to be working on solving waterlogging menace by construction of new drains and repair of old ones across city areas, there is no visible development in the city's drainage system," alleged Nazrul Islam Chunnu, convener of a citizens' forum.

Md Rafiqul Islam Miah, chief engineer of MCC, said, "A Tk 10 crore project to construct a culvert has been taken for Balashpur Madhyapara area to drain away rainwater."

"The work would be completed by October. We are also working to unblock the drains in the area," he added.

Fakhrul alleged that the government is pushing the country towards an extreme conflict by providing the ruling party cadres with the arms, to suppress the movement by killing and torturing the students and people.

"The Awami League government is solely responsible for all the killings, destruction, anarchy and crisis as it tried to brutally suppress the student-led mass movement," he said.

Abdul Gani Mridha, elder brother of Jahangir, said Jahangir lived in a rented house with his wife and two children in the Rayerbagh bus stand area. Due to poverty, Jahangir was not able to provide Sujan with an education.

He demanded that the government take responsibility for his late brother's wife and children.

Laiju Begum said as they had no food left in the house, Jahangir had ventured out of their home on the morning of July 19.

"Who will take responsibility for the death of my innocent husband? Who will judge his killers? How will I survive now with my two sons?" she asked.

Sujan said, "My father did not participate in the movement. He does not support any political party. So why was my father shot? I want his death to be investigated."

curfew is going on and in light of recent attacks on Narsingdi District Jail.

Shamsuzzaman Ome, a seventh semester student of Dhaka University's Institute of Education and Research, was arrested from Uttara area on July 18. He was in Dhaka Central Jail in Keraniganj after a Dhaka court ordered to send him to jail.

Like Shahreear's family, his near ones could not meet him or talk in over two weeks.

"He was never arrested before. Police arrested him this time as he went to a logical movement. We do not know yet how he was in the police custody and in jail now," a relative of Ome told The Daily Star, preferring anonymity.

Suvash Kumar Ghose, senior jail super of Dhaka Central Jail, said they suspended meeting with inmates for security reasons amid the ongoing events.

He said there are 9,921 inmates in the jail now against the capacity of 4,590, which is almost a regular scenario.

"We often transfer inmates to four jails in Gazipur when it is overcrowded. The transfer was also suspended for some days due to road conditions," he added.

Contacted, Mashiur Rahman, senior secretary to the security services division of Home Ministry, said "As unrest is going on in the country, we have stopped phone call and meeting with inmates at all of the country's jails."

"We will restore this service once the situation becomes normal," he added.

A son taken too soon

Freedom fighter mourns loss of slain constable Suman Gharami

PARTHA CHAKRABORTTY, Bagerhat

"I fought for this country. I sacrificed my youth for the freedom of this land. How do I go on now that my son is no more?" asked 80-year-old freedom fighter Sushil Gharami.

His son, Suman Gharami, 35, a police constable posted at Khulna Police Lines, was beaten to death during a clash between agitators and the law enforcers in the city's Gollamari intersection during a protest on Friday.

Shushil's once strong, weathered face now shows the deep sorrow and helplessness that haunt him.

His home, "Bir Nibash", which was built by the state to honour those who fought in the Liberation War, now appears unbearably hollow, filled with overwhelming grief and despair that have consumed the family.

Gita Rani Gharami, 60-year-old mother of the slain policeman, was seen by the shallow grave that was dug for her son. Her eyes, red from crying, stared blankly at the mound of earth that will soon cover Suman's body.

"Can you bring my son back?" she asks, her voice breaking up with every word. "Can anyone return my Suman to me?"

The loss of a child is a parent's worst nightmare, and for Gita Rani, that nightmare has become a harrowing reality.

Suman's younger sister, Sumona Gharami, recalls the devastating moment when she learned of her brother's death.

"It was around 7:15pm when my sister-in-law called me," Sumona said, her voice trembling. "She said, 'Your brother is no more. He is in the hospital.'"

The shock, disbelief, and sorrow that followed left her numb.

She said Suman was not only a dedicated police officer but also a beloved son and brother. The brutal nature of his killing has left his family demanding justice.

"I want justice," said Sushil Gharami, his voice carrying the unbearable pain of losing a son.

Parents of Suman Gharami, 35, a police constable, still cannot come to grasp the passing of their son.

1,200 sued over killing of constable Sumon

BSS, Khulna

Police filed a case on Friday night with Labanchara Police Station against 1,200 people on the charge of killing constable Sumon Gharami.

Mostafa Saklain, sub-inspector of the police station, filed the case. No one was arrested yet to this end, said Momtazul Haque, officer-in-charge of Labanchara Police Station, yesterday.

On Friday, a large number of people under the banner of "Anti-Discrimination Student Movement" involved in a fierce clash with police in different areas of the city.

Metropolitan Police Commissioner Mozammel Haque said constable Suman Gharami died after agitators beat him up. Police members found him with a serious head injury in Gallamari in the evening.

They rushed him to the nearby Khulna City Medical College Hospital, police said.

The hospital authorities said Suman was pronounced dead after he was brought there.

His body was handed over to his family members yesterday after an autopsy, said police.

2,000 families living amid waterlogging

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Around 2,000 families in the low-lying Balashpur Madhyapara area of Mymensingh city have been living amid seasonal waterlogging for the past several months.

Shafiul Alam, a resident, said the menace has been a recurring one for the past one decade between the months of May and September.

"Earlier, waterlogging would ensue after rainfall and remain for a few days. Over the past 10 years or so, it has become unbearable. Every year, when rainfall begins, the area becomes waterlogged and will remain so for months until dry season comes," said Farhad Riad, an undergraduate student and resident of the area.

"We have been suffering immensely due to waterlogging since last month as rainwater cannot drain away completely even after a moderate downpour," he added.

Hasna Hena, a housewife living in the area, said, "Often the area becomes submerged under knee-deep water. We have to remain alert to make sure small children stay indoors to prevent them from drowning in water."

"School and college-goers often have to skip their classes, while office-goers and other residents have to use rafts to reach the main road from the area," said Nurul Kabir, another resident.

Locals also alleged that the water often enters homes and inundates the kitchens and toilets, leading to untold sufferings to the residents.

Despite repeated pledges offered by the authorities concerned, no step has yet been made to resolve the issue, they alleged.

The situation turned worse since 2013 after the construction of the Balashpur Madhyapara Road, which they alleged was done in an unplanned way.

Also, a drain through the area used to remove the water to let it flow into the

More than just NUMBERS

A 20-year-old shot dead in Uttara. A mason died of bullet wounds in Badda. A van puller shot dead in Jatrabari. At least 204 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are sons, husbands, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

Says father of Hasan, 20, who was shot dead on July 18

ANWARUL HAIDER, Noakhali

Mahmudul Hasan, 20, was shot in the head on the evening of July 18 in Uttara, Dhaka during the unrest centring the quota reform protests.

He just got his diploma in electronics.

Hasan was from the village of Charkailash Mahalla of Hatia.

On the day, when Hasan along with three friends were returning to their mess in Uttara's Rajalakshmi area, the firing suddenly started.

While fleeing the location, Hasan got shot in the head. His friends took him to a private hospital where the doctors declared him dead around 7:00pm.

His classmate Saurabh Hasan, who was there at the hospital with Hasan, shared this information with journalists.

Hasan's mother, Farida Yasmin, spoke to The Daily Star on Friday evening.

"My son Mahmudul Hasan passed the Diploma Engineering in Electronics from Lakshmipur Polytechnic Institute. He began his internship in an institution in Dhaka at the beginning of July. We were

Death of Liton, 30, leaves family devastated

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Despite being the youngest son of the family, Liton Matubbar, 30, had to support and look after his elderly parents.

Liton, born into a poor family in Barguna's Sonar Bangla village, had to take the matter upon himself to ensure proper treatment for his parents. So, he came to Dhaka to work as a tile mason.

He was looking forward to making things better for his family; instead, his lifeless body returned to them, shattering their hopes and dreams.

Liton was shot during the violence centring the quota protests in the capital's Badda area on July 18, when he was returning from work.

He was rushed to Kurmitola General Hospital, where he died that night.

His body was brought back home the next day, and he was buried in his family graveyard.

"Although I have three other sons, Liton was the one who took care of us. Now who will look after us? Who will call me Abba? Who will tell me, 'Abba (father), don't worry, I will take care of everything'? I don't know what will happen to us now," said Liton's father Taiyab Ali Matubbar, 65.

Asks son of van puller Jahangir

SOHRAB HOSSAIN, Patuakhali

Jahangir Hossain Mridha, 51, was the sole earning member of his four-member family. He made his living delivering goods to shops in a van.

During the recent unrest, Jahangir was not able to drive his van for four days. As a result, there was no food in their house.

Therefore, Jahangir stepped out of his home on the morning of July 19, hoping to buy vegetables that he would sell on his van. The plan was to return home that night with some rice and pulses after selling the vegetables.

While moving through the capital's Jatrabari area around 10:00am, a bullet hit Jahangir. He died on the spot.

Hailing from the Dwipasha village of Madanpura union in Patuakhali's Baufal upazila, Jahangir was the youngest of four brothers and two sisters. Jahangir once held just 1.5 decimals of land to his name, but eventually had to sell that due to poverty.

Jahangir was buried in his village near a pond beside his once paternal home on the night of July 19. Two days after his burial, his wife Laiju Begum, 18-year-old son Sujan and three-year-old son Shanto returned to Dhaka, where they currently reside.

RAIN, FLASH FLOOD

Over 300 tourists stranded in Sajek

UNB, Dhaka

At least 300 tourists have been stranded in Sajek due to the suspension of road communication caused by flash floods and torrential rains for the last several days.

The Dighinala-Bakakhali road of Khagrachhari and Baghaihat Bazar in Baghaichhari upazila of Rangamati district have been inundated.

The low-lying areas and houses were already submerged, which caused immense sufferings to residents. A portion of the Khagrachhari-Dighinala road was also inundated, suspending vehicular movement.

Baghaichhari Upazila Nirbahi Officer Shirin Akter said the tourists were stranded at Sajek and failed to return home due to road communication suspension. Measures have been taken by the local administration, she said.

Besides, the Kachalong river was flowing above its danger level due to rain and onrush of water from upstream.

When musicians play the tune of defiance

MAISHA TASNIM SRESHTHA

In an inspiring display of unity and support, musicians from across the nation converged for the Get Up Stand Up movement. On Saturday (August 3) this rally brought together individuals from all walks of life at the capital's Rabindra Sarobar (Dhanmondi 8/A) in a show of solidarity with students advocating for justice and reform. Artistes expressed their support for the students, while those outside Dhaka stood at designated locations within their respective districts. The movement also saw journalists and cameramen from various media outlets—TV channels, online platforms, and newspapers—covering this significant demonstration of unity and support.

The rally began at Rabindra Sarobar, where artistes gathered and invited everyone to march towards the Shaheed Minar. This site holds deep significance for Bengalis, as it commemorates the martyrs of 1952, who sacrificed their lives for their freedom to speak their language. In 2024, it will stand as a symbol for those who did the same, but in a different context.

During the proceedings, legendary lyricist-composer Prince Mahmud stated, "We call for the immediate release of rapper Hannan. It's imperative that he is freed as soon as possible. Many are wondering why we have only come forward now. The fact is, we have supported the students' demands from the outset. We are losing sleep over this. We demand justice."

Miles frontman Hamin Ahmed, who recently lost his brother, Shafin Ahmed, was also present during the event. He said, "Do not fire a single bullet more. We want the government to listen to the demands of the students."

Veteran singer Maqsoodul Haque stated, "I am seeking justice for the students who have shed so much blood. Why has there been so much bloodshed? Many lives have been lost due to the violence stemming from this movement. I expect accountability and a fair trial for those responsible."

The event saw the presence of numerous artists and bands, including Partha Barua, Sheikh Monirul Haque Tipu, Asif Akbar, Raef Al Hasan Rafa, Pantha Kanai, Miles, Souls, Shironamhin, Artcell, Nemesis, Chirkutt, Ashes, Sujit Mustafa, Elita Karim, Shaukat Ali Emon, Sandhi, Ritu Raj, Joy Shahriar, Sujan Arif, Muhin, Earnnick, Rafat, Dola, Latiful Islam Shibli, and Someshwar Oli, among others.

Throughout history, there have been numerous instances where tyrants were ultimately brought down by the very people they once ruled with an iron fist. Today, following that, inspired by Bob Marley's song titled "Get Up Stand Up", musicians and artistes have adopted a similar approach in their efforts to challenge the government of Sheikh Hasina.

Student protests in Bangladesh against the government have escalated into a pro-democracy movement, marked by police brutality and mass arrests. Despite the government's violent crackdown, students remain determined to continue their demands for accountability and reform. The situation reflects broader issues of governance, economic instability, and the struggle for democratic rights in the country.

Further action will be taken after receiving the full report of the investigation team, he said.

Video footage showed police shooting at Abu Sayed, who posed no physical threat to the law enforcers, during the quota reform protest near the campus on July 16. He died soon afterwards.

Just a day before his death, Sayed shared on Facebook how he was ready to sacrifice his life for the cause if needed.

At 12:37pm on July 15, he shared a photo card of Rajshahi University teacher and martyr Prof Dr Shamsuzzoha, who was killed in police firing in 1969 during a student protest.

The accompanying caption read: "Sir! We desperately need you right now, sir! Everyone of your generation has passed away, but you live on even after death. Your legacy is our inspiration. We are enlightened by your ideals.

"And to those of our generation, you too will die one day as per the laws of nature. But as long as you live, live with integrity. Support the just cause, take to the streets, stand as a shield for the students. You will receive genuine respect and honour. You won't be lost in the sands of time after your death. You will live forever like Shamsuzzoha."

people, including a police constable, were killed in violence in Habiganj and Khulna on Friday.

The government imposed a curfew across the country for an indefinite period past midnight on July 19 and deployed the army to tackle the situation.

The National Committee on Security Affairs was formed in March 2019 after the approval of the National Defence Policy 2018. The committee is responsible for reviewing the problems related to national security.

The November 15, 2023, meeting discussed preventing the spread of disinformation on social media, strategies for maintaining law and order, and prices of essentials, among other issues.

Senators Edward J Markey, Chris Van Hollen, Richard J Durbin, Tim Kaine, Tammy Baldwin, Jeffrey A Merkley, and Christopher S Murphy co-signed the letter in the Senate, and Representatives William R Keating, James P McGovern, Seth Moulton, Lori Trahan, Joe Wilson, Dina Titus, Grace Meng, Gerald E Connolly, Gabe Amo, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, Ilhan Omar, Nydia M Velázquez, Daniel T Kildee, Barbara Lee, and James C Moylan co-signed the letter in the House of Representatives.

They said in responding to the student demonstrations, the Bangladeshi authorities deployed Rapid Action Battalion; condoned the use of teargas, rubber bullets, and sound grenades by riot police against protesters; imposed curfew and "shoot-on-sight" orders; and shut down the Internet.

"Given these alarming and continuing trends, we hope that you will lead the US Department of State in upholding the shared democratic principles that have long underpinned the US-Bangladeshi relationship," they wrote to Blinken.

They said their concerns have only become more acute following recent deadly clashes between student protesters and security forces and Bangladesh's national elections on January 7, 2024, which the US, UN and other observers have rightly criticised as being neither free nor fair.

The letter said since their inception, US-Bangladeshi relations have been predicated on mutual respect for the rule of law, the promotion of democracy, and the protection of human rights, as well as enhancing regional security, and bolstering inclusive economic growth. With the support of the US and other international community, Bangladesh has made great strides in improving the lives of its citizens.

However, they said the shared principles have come under threat in Bangladesh as the ruling Awami League and Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina have acted in an increasingly authoritarian manner since returning to power in 2009.

They noted the US sanctions on Rab in 2021, visa policy in May last year and the consistent messages conveyed to Bangladeshi officials for free and fair elections and improving human rights and labour rights.

Sadly, the Bangladeshi government has continued to take actions that undermine democratic processes, including by holding deeply flawed elections in January, failing to improve labour regulations, and, most recently, violently cracking down on demonstrations using guns, teargas, and imposing a near-total shutdown of Internet services, they said.

The January 7 election was largely boycotted by Bangladesh's political opposition, which itself was hamstrung by a wave of arrests following demonstrations on October 28, 2023.

Most importantly, the election was marred by violence and not supported by a large swath of the Bangladeshi electorate, they said.

Beyond members of the political opposition, workers and trade unionists have long faced violence, repression, and labor rights violations.

The Bangladesh government has yet to amend its labour laws to protect workers' freedom of association in line with the ILO standards, the letter said.

They urged the US Department of State to redouble its efforts to support the democratic aspirations of the Bangladeshi people.

Meanwhile, UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Volker Turk has urged for immediate steps by the Bangladesh government to prevent further violence and ensure accountability.

In a post on X, formerly Tweeter, he yesterday said as rallies and internet restrictions continue, along with appalling new reports of violence by security forces and groups affiliated with the government, the government needs to take immediate steps to ensure right to peaceful assembly and right to information.

Earlier on July 23, Turk wrote to Hasina, offering to deploy an independent fact-finding team to assist the Bangladesh government in building trust among all stakeholders and to help de-escalate tensions.

"In these challenging times, my office is ready to support your efforts in resolving the current crisis," he said in the letter.

and is expected to aid the sprinters more than the previously-used brick-red track -- finished 18 seconds faster than Kenenisa Bekele's 2008 Olympics run.

"Barely 16 years ago when I was watching the great Kenenisa Bekele win in Beijing, it was something that grew in my heart.

"My collection for this run is really complete. I'm so excited," he told reporters.

Berihu Aregawi, part of a three-pronged Ethiopian front-running group almost from the start, finished strongly for silver in 26:43.44 and Grant Fisher took a superb bronze in 26:43.46 - only the United States' fourth medal over the distance since the event was added to the Games in 1912.

A pack of 13 athletes ran the last two thirds of the race together and, remarkably, all of them finished in under 27 minutes as recent advances in shoe and track technology continue to redraw traditional race times.

Cheptegei, world champion in 2019, 2022 and 2023, was surprisingly beaten to gold by Ethiopian Selemon Barega in Tokyo and was desperate for revenge.

Barega, Aregawi and fellow Ethiopian Yomif Kejelcha started to stretch the race out after the first few laps and kept up sub-27 minute pace relentlessly to hit halfway in 13.23 minutes.

Frenchman Jimmy Gressier was hanging on to the lead pack of 13, drawing huge noise from the Stade de France crowd and he eventually finished 13th in a huge personal best time and a national record 26:58.67.

Unusually, that pack remained solid for the next half-dozen laps. Cheptegei had stayed tucked behind the leaders as they chopped and changed, but he put the hammer down coming around the final bend on the penultimate lap and did not let up.

Asaduzzaman said, "Many of the bullets [shells] we have retrieved were not fired from police rifles. The police do not use those [bullets]."

Regarding the student's demand for his and some other ministers' resignation, he said, "If the prime minister thinks ... We always work for the country; we will do it [resign]."

The movement has now been taken over by political parties, who were always involved in anti-state activities -- the Jamaat-e Islami and the BNP, he added.

"We have accepted all the demands of the quota protesters, including bringing the police officials under trial," said the home boss, adding that the government has already taken steps to release the arrested students, who do not have any specific complaints against them.

Regarding the noncooperation movement, the minister said, "As all of their demands have been met, we think they should withdraw their movement."

He said the ongoing curfew will remain in force from 9:00pm to 6:00am. The decision will be effective for four districts -- Dhaka, Narayanganj, Gazipur, and Narsingdi. In other districts, the local administration will take the decision on the timing of the curfew as necessary.

in the head, chest and abdomen with bullets, not pellets.

The Daily Star shared the descriptions of the nature of the injuries with firearm experts and former army officials, who said shootings targeted at these vital areas are meant to kill, and not to disperse.

Such shootings with lethal weapons are a violation of the rules of engagements during civilian protests, they said.

The UN, Amnesty International and Human Rights Watch also called out the excesses by law enforcers that led to the killings of so many people, who were mostly unarmed.

One of the first victims of a targeted shooting was Abu Sayed, 23, a student of Begum Rokeya University in Rangpur. He was standing with his arms stretched out in defiant protest in front of the university, with just a stick in his right hand. Police were clearly seen shooting him multiple times in the chest, wounding him fatally.

"We used whatever little we earned to support his education, hoping that one day he would be successful and better days would come. But bullets ended all that," his brother Ramjan told The Daily Star after his death.

SHOTS THAT KILLED

Of those fatally hit in the upper parts of the body, 39 were shot in the head, 35 in the chest, 11 in the stomach, eight in the abdomen, eight in the back and two in the neck. The rest 10 of the 113 victims who were killed by live rounds were shot in the leg, arms and other parts of the body.

Four of the victims who were hit in the head were inside their homes and were likely struck by stray bullets. The 35 others were shot while on the streets, according to family members.

Our analysis of the date-wise casualties shows that deaths from gunshots spiked after the Border Guard Bangladesh was called in alongside an overwhelming number of police, Rab, Ansar, riot police, Armed Police Battalion and SWAT (Special Weapons and Tactics) members.

BGB was first deployed on July 17 in six districts on a small scale, but at least 229 platoons of the border guard force were dispatched across the country the next day.

The killings by gunfire continued even after armed forces were called in to contain violence on July 19 – by this time the quota protests boiled over into a larger movement joined by thousands of members of the public.

"Under the law, a written government order [gazette] must be sent to the forces to empower them to shoot at sight. The government order clearly outlines the circumstances under which the forces are allowed to shoot at sight, for example for breaking the curfew. I have not heard of any such written order being published," Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hossain told The Daily Star.

On August 1, this newspaper visited the Bangladesh Government Press's online archive and the home ministry's online bulletin board, but did not find any such written order. The gazette of the nationwide curfew, imposed at midnight on July 19, did not mention any shoot-at-sight order, although Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader told reporters that evening that it was a "shoot-at-sight" order.

Chiefs of police and BGB did not respond to our calls and text messages seeking their comments if there was indeed an explicit order to shoot at protesters, and if not, why law enforcers shot so many people indiscriminately.

In a written statement to The Daily Star on August 1, Rab said, "During the recent quota protest, no directive was given to open fire."

Under the rules of engagement, forces are supposed to crouch in a lying position in situations like this, Sakhawat said.

"This way, they are certain to shoot below the hip to incapacitate the opponent. If they are standing or aiming upwards, then they will hit the fatal parts of the human body. We have seen people dying because of gunshots to the head and chest," he said.

In many cases, fatal shots were also fired from close range. For example, more than two dozen people died from rubber bullets. This means they were likely shot at point-blank range, Sakhawat said.

At least six victims sustained perforating bullet wounds where the bullet entered and exited the body. A ballistics expert, speaking to this newspaper in the background, said it is possible that they too were shot from close range.

One video of a close-range execution was captured in Rampura on July 19. It shows a man hiding by hanging from the cornice of an under-construction building and two law enforcers shot him point-blank, one after another within seconds.

The video was verified by Qadaruddin Shishir, the fact-checking editor at AFP news agency.

"There are international guidelines on proportionate use of force for law enforcement. Bangladesh security forces violate those standards if they shoot at unarmed protesters, or fire indiscriminately," Meenakshi Ganguly, deputy director of Human Rights Watch's Asia Division, told this newspaper on Thursday.

WHAT GUNS WERE USED?

Naima Sultana, 15, a student of Milestone School from Uttara, had gone to the balcony to fetch the clothes hung out to dry when she was hit by a bullet on July 19.

"When the bullet hit her head, she fell to the floor and her brains spilled out. We took her to the hospital immediately but the doctors declared her dead," said her father Golam Mostofa.

From the photos and videos captured by this newspaper's reporters and photographers, we have been able to identify some of the lethal weapons used by law enforcement and security forces during the protests.

They include automatic and semi-automatic rifles, light machine guns, machine guns, Chinese AK47, Bangladesh-made BD-08 Type 81 assault rifles and semi-automatic 7.62mm Type 56 assault rifles. Handguns were also used. (Firearms were used against the protesters also by alleged ruling party activists in Dhaka and elsewhere.)

Two gun-experts who have seen the photos and the videos taken by our team helped us identify these weapons used by law enforcers and security forces.

In front of the Jatiya Press Club on July 19, Ansar members were found wielding AK47 guns, as well as the semi-automatic 7.62mm Type 56 assault rifle.

"Chinese" AK47 assault rifles were spotted in the hands of BGB members also in front of Jatiya Press Club. In Rampura, a BGB man armed with the same AK47 version was photographed firing at protesters on July 19.

In the capital's Khamarbari on July 20, Bangladesh infantry were seen carrying light machine guns. The Gazipur-made BD-08 Type 81 assault rifle was spotted in Bijoy Sarani the same day.

"The 7.62mm rifles used by police have two modes -- single firing and rapid firing. In the videos we have seen, they have mostly used the rapid-fire mode or automatic mode which are mostly used in wars," said Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat.

"The 7.62mm rifles are one of the best Chinese killing machines, which were earlier used by the Bangladesh Army and are now available to the BGB and police," he added.

The spotting of such lethal weapons on key dates corresponds with the death toll on those days. According to The Daily Star's latest tally, July 19 was the deadliest day, with 62 people dying only in fatal shots across the country.

A vast majority of them succumbed to their injuries that very day, while a handful hung on to life for the next two or three days.

The second deadliest day was July 20, with 30 people suffering fatal shots. The rest of the people were shot between July 16 and July 24.

On the dates, including July 19 and 20, that saw some of the highest casualties in areas such as Jatrabari, Rampura, Badda, Mohammadpur and Mirpur in Dhaka, The Daily Star reporters and photographers witnessed and documented heavy firing by police, Rab, BGB members and Armed Police Battalion on the ground, as air support was also called in.

"These forces [army and BGB] were deployed to aid the police, and are armed with lethal weapons. They will not be coming to the ground with sticks and rods. The question is whether they should have been called in to tackle unarmed protesters in the first place," said Sakhawat.

KILLING HOTSPOTS

As violence spread across Dhaka and elsewhere, Jatrabari and its adjacent areas, including Kadamtali, Matuail and the Chittagong Road leading into Narayanganj's Siddhirganj, saw some of the fiercest clashes between heavily armed law enforcers and protesters, both students and non-students.

For over a week, demonstrators blocked the commercially important Chittagong Road despite the heavy firing of live bullets, sound grenades, and teargas shells from the ground as well as from the air, as Rab and BGB helicopters were called in for the first time in independent Bangladesh to tackle a civilian movement.

At least 44 people were killed in these areas, mostly in shootings. Of them, at least 30 died in Jatrabari alone -- six on July 18, 12 on July 19, seven on July 20, three on July 21.

One of the July 19 victims is a policeman, who was hacked to death.

Other hotspots in Dhaka include Rampura, Badda, Dhanmondi, Mohammadpur, Uttara and Savar.

Outside Dhaka, there were reports of protests and violence in over 20 districts, including Rangpur, Rajshahi, Bogura, Chattogram, Khulna and Narsingdi.

At least 52 people were killed outside Dhaka.

DISREGARD FOR LIFE

Although many died in direct clashes, attacks and counter-attacks, many also had nothing to do with the protest but got killed anyway.

Abdul Ahad, 4, is one of them. The boy from Jatrabari was watching the protests from his balcony, when a bullet struck his head. He died at Dhaka Medical College Hospital.

In Mohakhali, Goni Mia was going home, parking his rickshaw in a garage. He was hit by a bullet in the chest, and he died at DMCH a few hours later, his brother Hafiz Uddin told The Daily Star.

Although most people were killed in shootings, several died of beating and at least one was hacked.

Overall, the victims, aged between four and sixty years, come from various professions and backgrounds. As many as 50 were low-income people, 26 private jobholders and 21 were traders or businesspeople.

"The high death toll is a shocking indictment of the absolute intolerance shown by the Bangladeshi authorities to protest and dissent. The unlawful force used against protesters, including lethal force as verified by Amnesty International, shows a callous disregard for the right to life and an abject failure by law enforcement officials to uphold their obligations under domestic and international human rights law," said a spokesperson of Amnesty International, speaking to this newspaper.

Note: This newspaper's list of victims is as of August 1, and is not comprehensive because not all the dead bodies ended up in the major hospitals or graveyards tracked by The Daily Star. For example, this newspaper has a photo of a dead bearded man wearing a lungi with a gunshot wound to the head lying on the steps of a clinic in Rampura, but failed to get any records of a man matching that description from the corresponding morgues on that day. As a result, that man has not been counted in our tally. Many hospitals did not keep any records of the dead, while many families collected the bodies of their loved ones from the scene and The Daily Star could not contact them.

CASE 4
On the same day, around 3:30 pm in Rampura, a student named Samudra from Rajdhani Ideal College was killed when BGB shot at demonstrators near the BTV area. A bullet hit his arms and pierced through his chest, as seen by this newspaper and later confirmed by family members and doctors.

CASE 5
In Savar, a severely injured protester was seen atop an Armed Police Carrier in a BBC verified footage. One of the officers on the vehicle was heard saying, "Felai den, Felai den" (Put him down, put him down).The officers then threw the injured youth from the top of the vehicle onto the ground. This newspaper later identified the youth as Shaikh Ashabul Yamin, a student of MIST. He was brought dead to a hospital, his body bearing bullet wounds.

Israeli strike kills 10 at Gaza school

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Gaza's civil defence agency said an Israeli strike struck a school compound in Gaza City yesterday, killing at least 10 people.

"There are 10 martyrs and several wounded due to Israeli bombardment on Hamama school," agency spokesman Mahmud Bassal told AFP. The Israeli military confirmed the strike, saying it had hit a Hamas command and control centre located inside the compound.

Bassal said the compound was housing Palestinians displaced from their homes in the ongoing war between Israel and Hamas militants.

The military said the compound was being used by Hamas militants to manufacture weapons, adding it was a "hiding place for Hamas terrorists".

The Israeli military has repeatedly accused Hamas of using civilian facilities as command and control centres or to hide their commanders and militants. The Palestinian group denies the accusation.

The war in Gaza erupted after Hamas militants attacked Israel on October 7, which resulted in the death of 1,197 people, mostly civilians, according to an AFP tally based on official Israeli figures.

Militants also seized 251 people, 111 of whom are still held hostage in Gaza, including 39 the military says are dead.

Israel's withering military campaign has killed at least 39,550 people, according to the Hamas-run territory's health ministry.

Drones hit Russian airfield, oil depot: Kyiv

AFP, Kyiv

Ukrainian drones targeted a military airfield and an oil depot in Russia, a defence source in Kyiv said on Saturday, after Moscow reported repelling the latest aerial barrage.

Kyiv has stepped up aerial attacks on Russian territory, saying it carries out the strikes in retaliation for the bombardments Ukraine has faced since Russia invaded more than two years ago.

"Last night, drones from Ukraine's Security Service visited the Morozovsk airfield in the Rostov region" that stored aircraft and guided aerial bombs, the source said.

"Ukrainian drones did a great job, hitting the aviation ammunition depot," the source added.

Russia has launched more than 600 guided air bombs on Ukraine in one week alone, Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said.

"Russian combat aircraft must be destroyed where they are, by all means that are effective. Striking at Russian airfields is also quite fair," he said on social media.

Russian officials did not address claims regarding the destroyed airfield, but local governor Vasily Golubev said on Telegram that authorities introduced a state of emergency in the district of Morozovsk.

9 killed in 2 Israeli air strikes in West Bank

AFP, Tulkarem

Israeli forces killed nine Palestinians in separate air strikes in the occupied West Bank yesterday, the Palestinian press agency Wafa reported, while the Israeli military said it had "eliminated terrorist cells".

Five people were killed in an Israeli drone strike in the Tulkarem area, Wafa reported, while the Israeli military said it struck "five terrorists" on their way to carry out an attack.

According to Wafa, the drone fired two missiles at a vehicle which caught fire, killing five men.

The director of the Thabet Thabet Hospital in Tulkarem said in a statement that "five martyrs" had arrived at the facility after "an Israeli drone strike on a Palestinian vehicle close to the village of Zeita".

"The Israeli police are currently conducting a counterterrorism activity in the area of Tulkarem," the military said in a statement.

A witness at the scene of the strike told AFP: "I live less than 50 metres (yards) from here. We came (after) the sound of an explosion and saw a vehicle on fire" on the road towards Zeita, to the north of Tulkarem.

"Next to it, we saw a body lying on the road. Inside the vehicle, there were three charred bodies, from what we were able to see, completely burnt," said the witness named Nasser, who declined to have his last name published.

The Israeli military quickly sealed off the area, Wafa reported.

In a second air strike, hours later in the Tulkarem area, Wafa reported that four Palestinians were killed.

The military confirmed the aerial strike, saying "an additional terrorist cell was eliminated" as part of the ongoing counterterrorism activity there.

During the operation there was an encounter between troops and militants, after which Israeli soldiers called in an air strike, killing the four, the military said.

Alongside the Israel-Hamas war that began last October in the Gaza Strip, violence has intensified in the West Bank, occupied by Israel since 1967.

At least 603 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli troops and settlers in the West Bank since October 7, according to an AFP tally based on Palestinian health ministry figures.

At least 17 Israelis, including soldiers, have been killed by Palestinian attacks in the West Bank over the same period, according to official Israeli figures.

Excluding east Jerusalem, some 490,000 Israeli settlers now live in the West Bank alongside some three million Palestinians.

Meanwhile, hundreds of Palestinians marched to protest the treatment of prisoners held in Israeli jails on Saturday, following reports of abuse and even torture.

Relatives held up pictures of prisoners and waved Palestinian flags during separate demonstrations in Ramallah and Nablus in the occupied West Bank.

"Even if the whole world submits, we will not recognise Israel," chanted the protesters in Ramallah.

Thousands of Palestinians have been detained in Gaza, the West Bank and Israel since the start of the Israel-Hamas war in October, the United Nations human rights office said this week.

Surging Harris, Trump spar over debate dates

AFP, Washington

Kamala Harris's campaign branded Donald Trump "scared" Saturday after he proposed to change the presidential debate schedule ahead of a rally in Georgia where he will try to halt the vice president's surging momentum in her bid to become America's first woman president.

In an overnight post on his Truth Social app, Trump said he was willing to debate Harris on the conservative Fox News network on September 4, while declining to participate in a previously scheduled debate on ABC.

Trump pitched the idea before going to a rally in Atlanta, where he will gather supporters in the same arena where Harris addressed an excited crowd of some 10,000 just this Tuesday.

Trump said he had "agreed" to the debate plan with Fox. And he said it would take place in Pennsylvania -- a crucial swing state in the US presidential electoral system -- in front of a live audience.

The Harris campaign dismissed this as "games."

"Donald Trump is running scared and trying to back out of the debate he already agreed to and running straight to Fox News to bail him out," Harris's campaign communications director Michael Tyler said in a statement. "He needs to... show up to the debate he already committed to on Sept 10."

The proposal to confront Harris on a network that has long supported him was the latest Trump effort to recapture the initiative in a campaign that had been entirely focused on a rematch against 81-year-old Joe Biden, until he dramatically dropped his reelection bid on July 21.

Since then, Harris, 59, has reenergized the Democratic base almost overnight.

She has raked in donations, reassembled the team behind Barack Obama's two historic election victories, and neutralized the solid lead that 78-year-old Trump had built against Biden in opinion polls.

On Friday, she secured the official Democratic nomination, backed by near unanimous party support.

Harris is due imminently to announce her vice presidential pick, with the popular governor of key state Pennsylvania, Josh Shapiro, a frontrunner. On Tuesday, she is set to launch a countrywide tour with her yet-to-be-named running mate.

- Rally in battleground state -

Late Saturday, Trump will be joined by his own vice presidential pick, Senator J.D. Vance, at the rally in Georgia -- another battleground state that will help decide who wins the Electoral College majority on November 5.

Trump lost narrowly to Biden there in 2020 and the state was at the center of his unprecedented attempts to overturn the results of the election and refusal to accept defeat.

The size of Harris's rally on Tuesday was a warning sign to the Trump campaign, which has long touted its ability to draw thousands of passionate supporters, in contrast to Biden's usually meager crowds.

The situation is a remarkable turnaround in a campaign where Trump had been appearing to gather force while Biden -- hurt by a disastrous debate performance in June and mounting voter concerns over his mental acuity -- was steadily slipping.

Harris's rapid entry has left the Trump campaign scrambling -- and Trump now the oldest presidential nominee in US history.

UK braces for far-right protests after riots

AFP, London

UK police yesterday readied for more far-right protests across England after a third night of rioting linked to misinformation about a mass stabbing that killed three young girls.

The violence, which has seen scores of arrests and put Britain's Muslim community on edge, presents the biggest challenge yet of Labour Prime Minister Keir Starmer's month-old premiership.

It has also put hard-right agitators linked to football hooliganism in the spotlight at a time when anti-immigration elements are enjoying some electoral success in British politics.

Police were gearing up for dozens of demonstrations after officers faced "serious and sustained levels of violence" during rioting in Sunderland, northeast England, on Friday night.

Eight people were arrested and three officers required hospital treatment following hours of "utterly deplorable" disturbances, Northumbria Police Chief Superintendent Helena Barron said.

Two officers remained in hospital early Saturday, she added.

Footage broadcast by the BBC showed a mob of several hundred rampaging in Sunderland's city centre, attacking police and setting fire to at least one car and a building next to a police office.

Other images shared on social media showed balaclava-clad youths throwing bricks and other missiles as fireworks and flares were let off.

The unrest followed two nights of disturbances in several English towns and cities in the wake of Monday's frenzied knife attack in Southport, near Liverpool on England's northwest coast.

They were fuelled by false rumours on social media about the background of British-born 17-year-old suspect Axel Rudakubana, charged with several counts of murder and attempted murder over the attack at a Taylor Swift dance party.

After violence in Southport late Tuesday, unrest rocked the northern cities of Hartlepool and Manchester as well as London 24 hours later, where 111 people were arrested outside Starmer's Downing Street residence.

In Southport, the mob threw bricks at a mosque, prompting hundreds of Muslim places of worship across the country to step up security.

Police blamed supporters of the disbanded English Defence League, an anti-Islam organisation founded 15 years ago whose supporters have been linked to football hooliganism.

In Sunderland on Friday, rioters attacked police officers, set a police station and two cars on fire, and again targeted a mosque.

Police officers face protesters outside the Liver Building in Liverpool yesterday during the 'Enough is Enough' demonstration held in reaction to the fatal stabbings in Southport on July 29.

US scraps plea deal with 9/11 mastermind

AFP, Washington

US Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin on Friday scrapped a plea agreement with 9/11 mastermind Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, just two days after the announcement of a deal that reportedly would have taken the death penalty off the table.

Deals with Mohammed and two alleged accomplices announced Wednesday had appeared to have moved their long-running cases toward resolution -- but sparked anger among some relatives of those killed on September 11, 2001, as well as criticism from leading Republican politicians.

"I have determined that, in light of the significance of the decision to enter into pre-trial agreements with the accused... responsibility for such a decision should rest with me," Austin said in a memorandum addressed to Susan Escallier, who oversaw the case.

"I hereby withdraw from the three pre-trial agreements that you signed on July 31, 2024 in the above-referenced case," the memo said.

The cases against the 9/11 defendants have been bogged down in pre-trial maneuverings for years, while the accused remained held at the Guantanamo Bay military base in Cuba.

The New York Times reported this week that Mohammed, Walid bin Attash and Mustafa al-Hawsawi had agreed to plead guilty to conspiracy in exchange for a life sentence, instead of facing a trial that could lead to their executions.

Much of the legal jousting surrounding the men's cases has focused on whether they could be tried fairly after having undergone methodical torture at the hands of the CIA in the years after 9/11.

The plea agreements would have avoided that thorny issue, but they also sparked sharp criticism from political opponents of President Joe Biden's administration.

Republican lawmaker Mike Rogers, the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, sent a letter to Austin that said the deals were "unconscionable," while House Speaker Mike Johnson said they were a "slap in the face" to the families of the nearly 3,000 people killed in the September 11 attacks.

And Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump's running mate, JD Vance, described the agreements as a "sweetheart deal with 9/11 terrorists," saying during a campaign rally: "We need a president who kills terrorists, not negotiates with them."

Mohammed was regarded as one of Al-Qaeda chief Osama bin Laden's most trusted and intelligent lieutenants before his March 2003 capture in Pakistan. He then spent three years in secret CIA prisons before arriving at Guantanamo in 2006.

The trained engineer -- who has said he masterminded the 9/11 attacks "from A to Z" -- was involved in a string of major plots against the United States, where he had attended university.

Bin Attash, a Saudi of Yemeni origin, allegedly trained two of the hijackers who carried out the September 11 attacks, and his US interrogators also said he confessed to buying the explosives and recruiting members of the team that killed 17 sailors in an attack on the USS Cole.

Extreme heat breaks records in east China

AFP, Beijing

Swathes of eastern China baked under a scorching heat wave yesterday, with temperatures in some areas reaching record highs, weather authorities said.

China is enduring a summer of extreme weather, with unseasonable heat searing parts of the north and east while torrential rains have triggered floods and landslides in central and southern regions.

The country is the world's largest emitter of the greenhouse gases that scientists say drive global warming and make extreme weather more frequent and intense.

All of the 10 hottest cities in China early Saturday afternoon were located in Zhejiang, with the city of Zhuji logging a daily high of 42.3C, the weather service said.

MOGADISHU BEACH ATTACK

Al-Shabaab kills 32, scores wounded

AFP, Mogadishu

An Al-Shabaab suicide bomber and gunmen attacked a busy beach in the Somali capital Mogadishu killing at least 32 people and wounding scores more, police said yesterday, in one of the deadliest strikes in the East African country in months.

The al-Qaeda-linked jihadists have been waging an insurgency against the internationally backed federal government for more than 17 years and have previously targeted the Lido beach area, popular with business people and officials.

Unverified videos shared online in the immediate aftermath of the attack late Friday showed people scattering along a street, with a number of clips purporting showing bloodied bodies lying on the beachfront.

"More than 32 civilians died in this attack and about 63 others were wounded, some of them critically," police spokesman Abdifatah Adan Hassan told reporters during a press conference.

"Targeting and blasting to kill 32 members from the civilian population means these Kharijites are not going to target only government centres, soldiers and officials," he said, using the term Somali officials adopt to describe Al-Shabaab.

The assault, for which Al-Shabaab claimed responsibility in a post on a pro-Shabaab website, began when a suicide bomber detonated a device and gunmen stormed the area.

Officer Mohamed Omar told AFP members of the group had "shot civilians randomly".

He said security forces had ended the attack and killed five gunmen, while a sixth member of the group "blew himself (up) at the beach".

Witnesses said there were many people at the popular location when the explosion occurred, describing how gunmen then stormed the area.

Hawo Mohamed, who lives near the scene, said at least seven people he knew had died in the attack.

"The devastation is immense and there is blood, and severed pieces of human flesh strewn in the scene," he told AFP.

Witness Abdilatif Ali was at the beach when the attackers struck and described the chaos and fear that unfolded late at night.

"Everybody was panicked and it was hard to know what was happening because shooting started soon after the blast," he told AFP.

"I saw many people strewn (on the ground) and some of them were dead and others wounded," he said.

Hospitals appealed for blood donations following the influx of wounded, local media reported.

Venezuela set for new protests after Maduro win ratified

AFP, CARACAS

Venezuela braced for fresh protests Saturday, after President Nicolas Maduro's disputed election victory was ratified -- and a growing number of nations recognized his opposition rival as the true winner.

Both Maduro and the opposition, led by Maria Corina Machado and her presidential candidate Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia, have called on their supporters to demonstrate this weekend, in the wake of Sunday's controversial vote.

The South American country's CNE election authority, which is loyal to Maduro, on Friday proclaimed him the winner with 52 percent of the vote and said Gonzalez Urrutia had garnered 43 percent of ballots.

But Argentina, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Panama and Uruguay recognized opposition Gonzalez Urrutia as the true president-elect, joining the United States and Peru in rejecting the official results.

For his part, the 61-year-old Maduro -- who has reacted fiercely to criticism of his victory -- described allegations of vote fraud as a "trap" orchestrated by Washington to justify "a coup."

He also has threatened Machado and Gonzalez Urrutia, saying they "should be behind bars."

Maduro has led the oil-rich, cash-poor country since 2013, presiding over a GDP drop of 80 percent that pushed more than seven million of once-wealthy Venezuela's 30 million citizens to emigrate.

Experts blame economic mismanagement and US sanctions for the collapse.

Gonzalez Urrutia did not show up to a hearing at the Supreme Court after Maduro requested the tribunal investigate and certify the election result.

Gaza burns cases surge as medical supplies dwindle

AFP, Jerusalem

In Gaza City's Al-Ahli Hospital, five-year-old Amir Habib al-Habeel screams out in pain from the burns he suffered from an Israeli air strike on his home in Shujaiya a fortnight earlier.

He occupies a bed far from his mother, who also suffered burns, and who cannot move to be by her son's side.

Instead, her brother cares for him, the only available guardian after his "father was martyred", as the tearful child says, struggling to remove one of many IV tubes.

"We receive daily cases of second- and third-degree burns as a result of rocket attacks and the use of internationally banned weapons by the Israeli army," Amjad Eleiwa, an emergency doctor at the hospital, told AFP.

"Most of the cases that come to us are children and women. We don't have any capacity to deal with these burns," he said, explaining that they could not access any of the medical supplies needed to treat burns and had to resort instead to whatever was available in private warehouses and pharmacies.

"We are in dire need of medical and logistical support and medicine to deal with these cases and save them."

Medical facilities have in the past weeks reported increasing numbers of burn victims.

Julie Faucon, a medical coordinator at Doctors Without Borders (MSF), told AFP some of the charity's specialists have been working for two months in Nasser Hospital in the southern city of Khan Yunis, "supporting what we call the trauma auto burn unit".

In that time, they have received "more than 69 cases with burns. One case out of five is related to explosions", the burns specialist said.

"Three out of four" of the patients they have received are children, she said, adding that 10 of the patients have had burns on more than 20 percent of their bodies.

According to Muhammad al-Mughayyir, of Gaza's civil defence agency, Israeli forces have been using "new weapons that cause increased ignition and burning".

Contacted by AFP, the Israeli military did reply to a request for comment.

Mughayyir said the weapons reach extremely high temperatures and are "capable of melting bodies".

They often target "tent areas made up of nylon containing primitive materials such as wood and plastic, all of which directly affects the speed and rate of ignition", he added.

"These burns have a direct impact on people's lives and appearances. They affect skin layers and burn nerves, and there are people who become disabled as a result of that."

The World Health Organization has said that out of 36 hospitals in the territory, only 15 are partially functional, adding that medical facilities have been targeted more than 1,000 times since war broke out on October 7.

Mohammed Zaqout, the head of hospitals in the Gaza Strip, said "there is only Nasser Hospital in the southern areas, with 12 operating rooms, all of which are overcrowded".

"There are 16 beds in the intensive care units, all of which are occupied, and we have added a capacity of 24 beds but they are now full," he said.

"We try to distribute these cases to field hospitals, but the occupation's massacres against unarmed civilians occur on a daily and hourly basis, and no one in the world intervenes."

Access to treatment abroad has been blocked as most Palestinians cannot leave the besieged territory, as has the entry of most medical supplies, particularly since Israeli forces seized the Palestinian side of the Rafah border crossing with Egypt since early May.

Faucon similarly highlighted the urgent need for medical supplies, pointing to surging demand among extremely meagre stocks.

Take concrete steps to address public anger

Call for discussion must be preceded by definitive action

We condemn the fresh set of violence that occurred in different parts of the country on August 2, leaving at least two people dead and almost 150 injured. The clashes reportedly took place in the capital's Uttara area, Sylhet, Khulna, Narsingdi, Chattogram and Noakhali during processions of the student movement against discrimination. Law enforcers and members of ruling party affiliated student wings allegedly tried to foil the processions at different locations, which led to the violence. On August 2, thousands of people from different walks of life joined the students in their march for justice. And they again came out in huge numbers alongside thousands of students yesterday, demanding investigations into the killings that took place in July following a government crackdown on students using state and non-state actors.

As we have repeatedly said in this column, the use of force to attempt to quell the student movement, from the outset, was a terrible mistake. Such attempts were totally undemocratic, and have now transformed the movement to a point where it is no longer restricted to the students only. People from all walks of life have extended their support to the nine demands of the students. And we hope the government understands the gravity of the situation, and the necessity to show restraint and create the groundwork for open and prompt negotiations.

In that regard, we see wisdom in the prime minister's willingness to sit with the protesting students and listen to them. The students, however, have so far refused to sit for dialogue with the government. The government's previous actions, which ran contrary to its own statements, as well as the expectations and hopes of the students, have created this situation where the students no longer seem to trust the government. The government's decision to arrest huge numbers of people—including students and ordinary citizens—while dithering about in regards to investigating law enforcers responsible for shooting at unarmed students and citizens, as well as various other questionable decisions, has naturally created immense misgivings about the government among students in particular.

As of now, while calling for dialogue, the government has not taken any concrete steps to address the grievances of the students or the public in general. Therefore, the government should immediately launch credible investigations into the firings. Those responsible for such atrocities and the killing and injuring of students must be brought to book. Additionally, it is high time to hold those who pushed for the student protests to be quelled using violence to account also. In their nine demands, the students have identified certain ministers for their role in the events that unfolded. These ministers should be held responsible for their actions.

These and other concrete steps are the only way forward for the government. The public anger that has taken hold should be understood, rather than undermined, so that the country can find a peaceful resolution to the ongoing unrest. And that is essential to prevent any further damage to our economy and society, and most importantly, to prevent any further violence and loss of lives.

Israel's actions a recipe for regional disaster

Global forces must urge for peace deal

When the world is pushing for peace in the form of a ceasefire in Gaza, the assassination of Hamas' top leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran, Iran has derailed that hope. Analysts fear this event could have far-reaching consequences in the whole Middle East, leading to a full-on regional conflict. And such fears cannot be dismissed completely at this point, given the tensions that have built up in the region.

Senior officials of Hamas have said the death of Haniyeh, who had been a top negotiator in the ceasefire talks, means their fight against Israel would intensify. While Israel has not publicly acknowledged its role in the killing, The New York Times reports that several US officials assess that the country was indeed responsible. Meanwhile, US President Joe Biden said the killing "doesn't help" efforts to secure a ceasefire. In almost 11 months, amid widespread destruction in Gaza, Israel has repeatedly thwarted talks of truce, clearly indicating that it has no intention of stopping the atrocities. If the reports are accurate, this is just the newest manufactured obstacle.

Israel is already facing global condemnation for its genocide, which has claimed the lives of over 39,000 people in Gaza. Besides such heinousness, it is also attacking people in foreign lands, beyond its jurisdiction, which is absolutely unacceptable and is a recipe for greater turmoil. A recent instance of this is Israel's airstrikes and artillery fire on Lebanon, leading to multiple deaths. Unsurprisingly, this has forced Hezbollah to resume rocket and artillery attacks on Israel. The group's chief Hassan Nasrallah has said that Israel "crossed red lines" after killing its top military commander earlier in Beirut. It's quite obvious: attacks lead to retaliation, and the cycle of violence continues. But this simple reality is being constantly ignored.

After Haniyeh's killing, US, Egyptian and Qatari mediators are desperately trying to salvage ceasefire talks, but for them to be successful, both parties have to be on the same page. They are, however, dealing with a country that does not want peace, for why else would it strike a school sheltering displaced Palestinians, killing 15, on Friday. Nevertheless, global actors must stand against this genocide, and continue to condemn and pressurise Israel, if they want to ensure peace for the Middle East. Given that the violence has kept expanding, it is high time for it to end before the entire region becomes engulfed in further turmoil.

The student-led non-political quota reform movement—calling for fair treatment towards all job seekers on the basis of merit—ended up being such a huge tragedy because of a total lack of sensitivity and understanding of reality on the part of the government and the ruling political party. The ongoing student movement, which began on July 1, 2024, is the manifestation of bigger problems that policymakers have overlooked for decades. The problems are economic, social and political in nature. Behind the quota movement is the suppressed anger and deprivation in various forms that have existed for a long time.

Despite economic progress during the last one and a half decades, for which the current government takes credit, there are not enough jobs for the young population in the country. With stagnant private investment which was 23.5 percent of the gross domestic product (GDP) in fiscal year (FY) 2024, the private sector cannot create that many jobs. Meanwhile, with the increases in salaries, perks, job security and power, government jobs have become the most coveted form of employment in the market.

Though the official unemployment rate is only 3.53 percent according to the Labour Force Survey (LFS) 2022, youth unemployment stands at eight percent, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS). The percentage of youth aged 15- 24 years who are not in employment, education, and training (NEET) is 40.67 percent. In a skewed labour market, the opportunity for decent employment is limited, due to which 84.9 percent jobs are in the informal sector where income and job security are low.

Cleary, the economic growth in Bangladesh could not create enough jobs. This is also reflected in a downward trend in the employment elasticity of GDP. Employment elasticity is a measure of how employment changes due to changes in economic growth. The quarterly GDP estimates and LFS data indicate that in FY2022, employment elasticity was 0.38 percent, which has come down to 0.13 percent in the first quarter of FY2024.

The lack of employment opportunities, rampant corruption, cronyism, huge bank loan defaults, and lack of good governance have resulted in unequal distribution of economic opportunities and wealth across all strata of society. The top five percent of the population possessed 30.04 percent of the national income in 2022, which was 27.82 percent in 2016. On the other hand, the bottom five percent owned only 0.37 percent of the national income in 2022, which increased slightly from 0.23 percent in 2016. On the other hand, the average inflation rate in Bangladesh was 9.72 percent in June 2024. The failure of the government to contain high inflationary pressure during the last two years has squeezed the purchasing power of low and middle-income families.

The so-called "political stability," which has turned into a one-party system through multiple questionable national elections, has resulted in a lack of accountability in every sphere of public services. Hence, reducing inequality and empowering the people—particularly the young and the poor—through ensuring productive employment with a decent salary remained outside the development realm of the government, except for some lip service in national strategies such as the five-year plans. Bangladesh has not yet ratified the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) of the International Labour Organisation (ILO) on pursuing "full, productive and freely chosen employment." Among South Asian countries, India ratified the convention in 1998, and Sri Lanka did too in 2016.

An important change in governance during the past one and a half decades is evident through over-bureaucratisation and over-regulation of the economy. This has failed to provide skills and jobs to the people, leading to unabated corruption and huge resource misuse which has favoured the rich and privileged, and throttled the opportunities of the common people and the youth.

Though some government interventions helped achieve growth and improve average social indicators such as health and education, the quality and distributional issues of such advancements are questionable. Access to public facilities is unequal. Moreover, the allocation of public resources to the social sectors is very low and stagnant although both the size of the economy and the national budget have expanded over the years. Allocation for the health sector is at 0.74 percent of GDP, and only 1.67 percent of GDP is for education. Actual public expenditure for social safety net programme (SSNP) is very low at 1.32 percent of GDP in FY 2025, even though the government has inflated SSNP allocation figures by adding pensions for government employees, interests for savings certificate, and agricultural subsidy to the calculation.

On a broader perspective, Bangladesh's persistent growth model, which disregarded the rule of law on several occasions, has resulted in the establishment of entrenched rent-seeking. The culture of the distribution of public contracts, licenses, and benefits by government ministries has been practised for several years now. The distortion of economic policymaking with the objective of favouring certain groups is a clear reflection of obvious patronage and clientelism. The banking sector, the power sector, and the readymade garments sector are only a few examples where many policies and rules have been formulated to exclusively support these vested interests at the cost of national interest. For instance, policies in the banking sector are dictated by powerful people who also incidentally receive licenses because of their political connections. Due to poor governance, the sector is overburdened with wilfully defaulted bank loans, which rose consistently from Tk 22,480 crore in 2009 to Tk 156,039 crore in the fourth quarter of FY2023. Fraud and irregularities are also on the rise. An assessment of only 24 significant published irregularities that occurred between 2008 and 2023 revealed that a total of Tk 92,261 crore was taken out of the banking system, which is equivalent to 2 percent of the GDP of FY2023 and 12 percent of the national budget for FY2024.

For the less privileged, access to public services often depends on bribes to officials and connections with the ruling party's local cadres. For example, the government's beneficiary list of the SSNPs often ends up excluding the genuinely poor people and including non-needy people, as the party men control such programmes for the poor.

The cracks in the development pattern of the current government have been clearly visible for some time now. This condition has arisen due to insufficient and misguided policies, together with ineffective execution, a deficiency in governance, and a lack of reform measures. Macroeconomic stability is broken as all key indicators have been deteriorating during the last two years. Shrinking fiscal space due to low tax-GDP ratio, increased debt servicing liability, dwindling foreign exchange reserves due to low export and remittances, a fragile financial sector, low investment, and high prices of fuel and essential commodities have subdued economic growth. Institutions have been systematically weakened, while policymakers have shown less enthusiasm for improving governance, which is a prerequisite for achieving inclusive and sustained economic growth. Over the years, institutions have become extractive in nature, where the nexus among political elites, bureaucrats, and a small but privileged group exploit the rest of the population. Such a predatory state has ignored the participation and voice of the larger section of the people in economic policymaking, including empowering the youth through quality education, skills and employment.

Therefore, students have now termed their protest a movement for justice. Students' demands have touched millions across the country. The government's brutality was manifested in the heavy-handed manner in which it tackled the movement for a just cause. Display of more importance to the destruction of physical infrastructure over human lives is a cruel insensitivity to the students and common people who were killed and injured.

Alas, Bangladesh's growth story does not have a human face!

That is why the student movement has now transformed into a mass movement from where the call for political change is sought. Indeed, without a participatory political system and the establishment of people's voting rights, economic growth can neither sustain nor be just and humane.

An urgent plea for democracy

The ongoing protest by students and mass people demanding justice has surfaced in a profound democratic void in Bangladesh. The government's heavy-handed response to peaceful demonstrations reflects a deep-seated intolerance for dissent. Rather than engaging with the students' legitimate concerns, the administration chose to suppress their voices, further exacerbating the democratic deficit.

Over the past 15 years, the ruling party has systematically eroded the democratic fabric of the nation, leading to widespread discontent and disillusionment among the populace. For the past decade and a half, Bangladesh has witnessed a systematic de-democratisation process orchestrated by the ruling party. This process has involved manipulating democratic institutions, undermining free and fair elections, and consolidating power through various means. The ruling party has effectively used blame games and the rhetoric of development to mask its authoritarian tendencies, creating an illusion of progress while stifling democratic freedoms.

The last three elections have been marred by allegations of irregularities and manipulation, distancing the ruling party from the electorate. These questionable elections have not only undermined the democratic process but also alienated the party's leaders from the people. The gap between the government and the governed has widened, resulting in a significant disengagement that has eroded public trust in the political system. The creation of a parliament with a one-sided election that does not heed the demands of the society, but benefits a select group has further entrenched this de-democratisation. The systematic interference in the legal system has undermined the rule of law, eroding the foundational principles of democracy and justice.

Surprisingly, the identity of a portion of civil society has become blurred as they aligned themselves with the ruling party and adopted behaviours and rhetoric that echo the government's stance. This co-optation of civil society further stifles independent voices and critical discourse, contributing to the democratic erosion. The parties not in power have also drastically failed the nation by ignoring the real challenges faced by the masses. Their focus has been primarily on regaining power rather than addressing the pressing issues that affect the everyday lives of the people. This neglect has further contributed to the democratic void and the growing disillusionment among citizens.

To address this democratic crisis, it is imperative for the ruling party to cultivate a culture of democracy within its ranks. This includes encouraging and allowing opposing voices, ensuring freedom of speech, and using administrative apparatus for the benefit of citizens rather than for maintaining power. Free and independent media is vital for a functioning democracy, and steps must be taken to ensure that media outlets can operate without fear of repression or censorship. Listening to opposing voices with good intentions and understanding that protesters are citizens of Bangladesh, not merely supporters of opposition parties, are crucial. Representatives of the government should communicate through the media with the humility of public servants, not the arrogance of rulers. Sensible and respectful discourse is necessary to rebuild trust and confidence among the people.

The path to restoring democracy in Bangladesh requires a commitment to these principles. The ruling party must take concrete steps to re-engage with the people, uphold democratic values, and ensure that the governance of Bangladesh is truly for the benefit of its citizens. Only by embracing these changes can Bangladesh move away from autocracy and towards a future where democracy thrives. It is time to stop the authoritarian practices and begin showing respect to the people of Bangladesh, championing democracy in both word and deed.

Holding to account the perpetrators of crimes against protesters

ON THE SHORES OF (IN)JUSTICE

Dr CR Abrar
is an academic with an interest in human rights issues.

C R ABRAR

"It was the henchmen of the ruling party and the law enforcement who committed the crimes, but we (the students) are the ones who are being picked up." — Tasneem Tanha, a protester.

The above statement succinctly captures the feeling of student protestors about the role of law enforcement agencies in committing the infamous July massacre, and what was then done in its aftermath. While electronic media lost no time in repeating the government's carefully crafted narrative to divert people's attention from mindless killings to the damaging of state properties and the much-coveted symbols of development of the ruling regime, leading dailies were able to deliver updates and analysis on grievous state crimes unleashed on them.

It was only after the withdrawal of restrictions on internet services that the extent and magnitude of such wrongdoings began to unravel. Graphic video footage of wanton violence committed by the law enforcers on unarmed young protestors triggered outrage. The display of the government's might through use of armoured personnel carriers and helicopters, new kits in the arsenal of "law enforcement," further added to the trauma of the people. For the citizenry, by now habituated with social media offering them real time information and alternative perspectives, the internet blockade was stifling.

The number of those killed, injured or abducted by law enforcement grew with each passing day. The number of dead and maimed patients in the medical facilities began to swell. Some facilities (including renowned ones) refused to admit patients with gunshot wounds for fear of reprisal from the authorities. There are also allegations that law enforcers seized death registers from public hospitals. The families' inability to track their lost members further contributed to the tense situation. Reports of police engaging in extortion from families of those detained caused further fury.

The move to diffuse the quota movement through the Appellate Division verdict failed to assuage the agitating students. By then, the situation deteriorated sharply as incidents of killing, involuntary disappearance, and incarceration of protestors became rampant. The abuse of those while under arrest and in detention, particularly the female students, further incensed the people. All these prompted the protestors to make additional demands including that of accountability.

The curfew and the imposition of restrictions on assembly had very little impact on the students. The unprecedented participation of private university students, otherwise perceived as privileged, provided it a fresh stimulus. The agitating students were able to garner the support of not only their peers, parents, and loved ones, but also that of ordinary working people who were appalled by the brutality unleashed on the protesters. The reckless statements of the senior-most functionaries of the government and the intellectuals who support their narrative—who have continued to blame the nebulous "third party" for "the violence"—have hardly resonated with ordinary citizens.

Figures from Prothom Alo inform that until August 1, at least 212 persons were killed in the July mayhem. An analysis of 175 cases reveals that more than 91 percent of the fatalities were caused by firearms (78 percent killed by lethal weapons and 13 percent by shotguns. The other nine percent succumbed to beating, arson or drowned). It also establishes that around 71 percent of the 175 killed were under the age of 29, 17 percent were between 30 and 39 and the rest were above 40.

So far, through their collective leadership and creative and methodical planning, the Students' Movement against Discrimination has been able to maintain the momentum. Even in the absence of the top leadership who remained wrongfully detained for about a week in the Detective Branch office in Dhaka, events such as "march for justice" and "rally of defiance," initiated by a different group of coordinators, became hugely popular. Despite on-the-spot rounding up of protesters and attempts of disruption by the baton wielding police force, university teachers, lawyers, cultural activists, and people of all strata, including the garments workers, have joined the students and extended their support for the demand of accountability and justice.

As this movement scales new heights with each passing day amid spontaneous support of the people, the government's ploy to hide behind the "third party" theory has failed to harvest any takers. The huge success of the red e-poster movement expressing solidarity with the protestors on social media on the very day that the government declared as a day of mourning is a testimony of the volume of support that the protestors enjoy over the beleaguered regime.

The July massacre has brought the credibility of this regime into question. While there is overpowering evidence, corroborated by Amnesty International, that Abu Sayeed of Begum Rokeya University was sprayed with pellets fired by the police, the police in the first information report (FIR) claimed that he died of bullets fired and brickbats flung by the protesters, and a 16-year-old had been blamed for the act. Completely denying the responsibility for shooting unarmed protesters, the government now maintains that the law enforcement agencies did not resort to firearms as they were not granted the permission to do so. This is an egregious distortion of facts.

The curfew and the imposition of restrictions on assembly had very little impact on the students. The unprecedented participation of private university students, otherwise perceived as privileged, provided it a fresh stimulus. The agitating students were able to garner the support of not only their peers, parents, and loved ones, but also that of ordinary working people who were appalled by the brutality unleashed on the protesters.

On July 20, the general secretary of the Awami League, also a minister, while announcing the decision to impose nationwide curfew and deploy armed forces after a meeting with 14-party alliance members, categorically stated that "shoot-on-sight" order has been issued. The state minister in charge of information is on record boasting that the government had five-year supplies of bullets to quell the protest.

Such blatant misrepresentation of facts by the government makes it imperative that a thorough, credible and transparent investigation into the crimes committed by government forces, including killings, injuries, torture and abductions, and denial of the rights to express, assemble and pursue artistic freedom by the citizens, be conducted by an independent body. The youth of Bangladesh—along with ordinary masses—strive, aspire, and have remained on the streets to hold the rulers to account. Surely history will not disappoint them.

VIOLENCE AGAINST STUDENTS

A tribute to our little John Hampdens

Dr Md Mahmudul Hasan
PhD, is professor in the Department of English Language and Literature, International Islamic University Malaysia. He can be reached at mmhasan@iium.edu.my

MD MAHMUDUL HASAN

On July 23, 2024, a police officer kicked a teenager named Muhammad Fahir and mistreated an adult at UK's Manchester airport. The incident caused shock and horror in British society and around the world and provoked protests in Greater Manchester. The police officer involved has been suspended and is under investigation.

Remarkably, around the same time, law enforcers—who are paid by our money—killed in broad daylight hundreds of unarmed protesters, mostly students, in the streets of our beloved Bangladesh. According to a July 26, 2024 report in the Prothom Alo, at least 204 people were killed during this spate of violence alone. Since there is an alleged attempt to suppress the records of the carnage, we may not know the true number of casualties. Perhaps, such massive shootings and killings in the streets of Bangladesh are unprecedented.

While many protesting students are succumbing to injuries, hundreds of them are lying in excruciating pain in hospitals with various degrees of bullet wounds. Fearing arrest by the police, many more chose not to receive treatment in hospitals and are suffering in silence. Many are staying under self-imposed house arrest to avoid police harassment in the streets. As Bangladesh is a country of roughly 170 million people, here we are talking about the ordeals of millions of students.

Is there no responsibility for all these killings, injuries, and sufferings? No compassion for the tears of bereaved parents who had pinned so much hope on their now-murdered children?

Many in Bangladesh seem to have been processing the tragedy of the mass slaughter of students in dead silence. But what does it tell us about our status as human beings and about the value of our lives as Bangladeshis? I am talking about the lives of all Bangladeshis irrespective of their political complexion or partisan preferences. I repeat: here I am concerned with the lives of all Bangladeshis, including those who murdered our students in the streets.

The normalisation of government-sponsored violence points to the sad truth that our lives are cheap. Bangladeshis can be harassed and killed, and the perpetrators face no consequences. Only a select few at the top of the government enjoy Brahmanical privileges, while the rest are pawns or hostages in an undemocratic system.

Gruesome and unbearable shoot-to-kill images have continued to emerge. What transpires through a cursory look at social media sites is that students have been killed and maimed like birds. These students have parents and siblings; they are sons and daughters of Bangladesh society and are the future of the country. Attacks on them are attacks on the entire population.

As regards the Manchester airport incident, race was most probably an important factor that incited the violent behaviour of the police officer concerned. But why did our law enforcers kill our young people in such large numbers? It's not race hatred or political differences that have snatched away so many precious lives from us. It is the reduced value of our lives that made this possible.

Our lives are cheap. When we degrade and mistreat each other, we do so at our own peril. The oppressor and the oppressed among us all are lesser human beings. This realisation and efforts to address it will mark the beginning of our collective healing.

The normalisation of government-sponsored violence points to the sad truth that our lives are cheap. Bangladeshis can be harassed and killed, and the perpetrators face no consequences. Only a select few at the top of the government enjoy Brahmanical privileges, while the rest are pawns or hostages in an undemocratic system.

Students who were shot dead and injured were simply exercising their democratic rights and posed no threat to anybody. What took them to the streets tells volumes about present-day Bangladesh.

The phrase "the tip of the iceberg" is perhaps overused. But it serves to emphasise the magnitude of specific problems. The quota issue is only on the surface and only the tip of the iceberg. There are long, under-the-surface stories that have to be told to explain what gave the students such courage and brought them face-to-face with violence from law enforcement and ruling party men. They have defied the fear of death. On this issue, Bangladesh seems to have been in a war between two camps: the law enforcers and ruling party people on one side, and the general students on the other.

In a climate of cowardice and sycophancy, protesting students' exemplary courage and bravery have given Bangladesh a renewed patriotism and a glowing confidence in the country's future. FILE PHOTO: ANISUR RAHMAN

Meritorious students of underprivileged backgrounds from rural areas study at public universities with much hope and aspiration for a better life. Those who have graduated in the last couple of decades or are currently studying at Bangladesh's universities, mostly the public ones, are cognisant of the suffering to which they have been vulnerable at the hands of so-called student leaders (known as "cadres" in campus parlance). The way ordinary students are mistreated at many of Bangladesh's universities may reveal a pattern reminiscent of the master-slave relationship.

We do not discuss it enough, but we know what happens especially in the campus and dormitories at most universities in Bangladesh. You may not find many Bangladeshi university students/graduates who have not experienced or heard of the beatings of ordinary students by the "cadres" at universities. What is more, sexual harassment of female students at universities is common knowledge in present-day Bangladesh.

University students in Bangladesh have been enduring all forms of mistreatment; many had hoped that upon graduation they would get government jobs. The quota system hammered the last nail in the coffin of that aspiration for a better future. Seeing no other options, like Thomas Gray's "village-Hampden ... with dauntless breast," students in Bangladesh are rising up against tyranny in their land. In a climate of cowardice and sycophancy, their exemplary courage and bravery and their faith in themselves and one another have given Bangladesh a renewed patriotism and a glowing confidence in the country's future.

The government has been trying to contain students through bullets, blood and poison gas, but the number of John Hampdens is perhaps too many for it to suppress. Meanwhile, forces beyond our control have continued to whittle down our country to its bones.

Early action can prevent nearly half of dementia cases

STAR HEALTH REPORT

A groundbreaking report from the 2024 Lancet Commission reveals that nearly half of dementia cases could be prevented or delayed by addressing 14 modifiable risk factors throughout life, starting in childhood. These factors include high cholesterol and vision loss, along with previously identified risks like smoking, obesity, and depression.

The report emphasises the importance of early and continuous intervention, even for those with a high genetic predisposition to dementia. It highlights 13 key recommendations for individuals and governments, such as treating hearing loss, staying cognitively active, and reducing vascular risks.

Using England as a case study, new research within the report suggests that implementing population-level interventions could lead to significant economic savings—around £4 billion—by tackling risk factors like excessive alcohol use, air pollution, and high blood pressure. This underscores the substantial public health and economic benefits of early preventive measures.

The Lancet Commission's findings stress that reducing dementia risks not only increases healthy life years but also decreases the time people spend living with dementia. By adopting the recommended policy and lifestyle changes, millions of lives could be improved, and the global burden of dementia significantly reduced.

The lead author Professor Gill Livingston from University College London stated, "It is never too early or too late to take action, with opportunities to make an impact at any stage of life."

WORLD HEPATITIS DAY 2024

It is time for action

STAR HEALTH DESK

World Hepatitis Day, observed on 28 July, raises awareness of viral hepatitis, an inflammation of the liver that causes severe liver disease and cancer. This year's theme is "It is time for action." With a person dying every 30 seconds from a hepatitis-related illness, we must accelerate action on better prevention, diagnosis, and treatment to save lives and improve health outcomes.

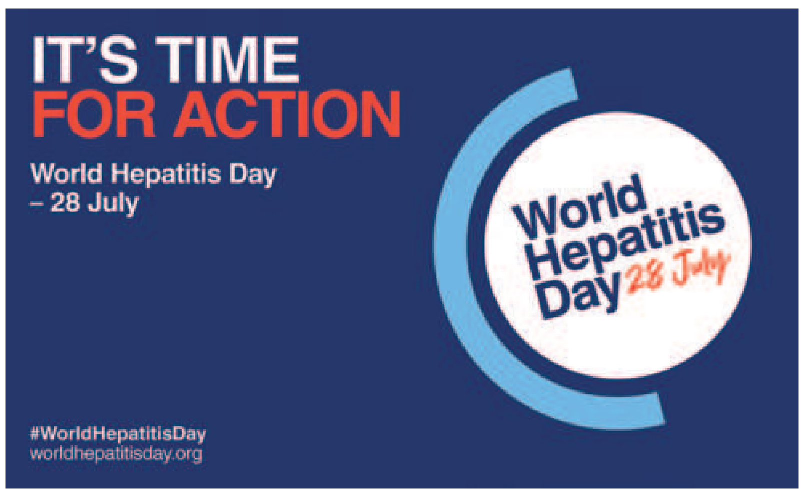
There are five main strains of the hepatitis virus: A, B, C, D, and E. Together, hepatitis B and C are the most common infections and result in 1.3 million deaths and 2.2 million new infections per year. Despite better tools for diagnosis and treatment and decreasing product prices, testing and treatment coverage rates have stalled. However, reaching the WHO elimination goal by 2030 should still be achievable if swift action is taken now.

KEY MESSAGES

1. The liver's vital role:
A liver performs over 500 vital functions every single day to keep us alive, which underscores the importance of testing, treating, and preventing viral hepatitis. Hepatitis is an inflammation of the liver, usually caused by a viral infection or non-infectious agents (such as drugs, toxins, or alcohol).

While all hepatitis viruses cause liver disease, they differ in transmission modes, severity of illness, geographical distribution, and prevention methods. Types B and C lead to chronic disease and are the most common causes of liver cirrhosis, liver cancer, and viral-hepatitis-related deaths.

2. Rising deaths:
Deaths from viral hepatitis-related causes are increasing. Combined, hepatitis B and C caused 1.3 million deaths in 2022. Around 304 million people are living with chronic viral hepatitis infection. Every day, 3,500 people die from hepatitis B and C infections, which equates to one death every 30 seconds. Over 6,000 people are newly infected with viral hepatitis each day.



3. Undiagnosed and untreated:
Nearly 220 million people with hepatitis B and nearly 36 million people with hepatitis C are undiagnosed. Most symptoms appear only when the disease is advanced, leading to diagnoses when serious liver disease or cancer has developed. Even after diagnosis, treatment and care coverage is astonishingly low. Of the 304 million people with hepatitis B and C, only 7 million are treated for hepatitis B and 12.5 million are cured of hepatitis C.

4. Prevention and action:
To eliminate hepatitis and achieve WHO's targets by 2030, simplified care services must ensure that all pregnant women with chronic hepatitis B receive treatment and their infants get hepatitis B birth vaccines to prevent infection; 90% of people with hepatitis B and/or C are diagnosed; and 80% of diagnosed people are treated for hepatitis B or cured of hepatitis C. Despite the availability of affordable diagnostic tools and treatments, many people still face out-of-pocket costs, and services are often only available at specialised hospitals.

Key actions include expanding access to testing and diagnostics, strengthening primary care prevention efforts, decentralising hepatitis care to bring it closer to patients, integrating hepatitis care within existing health services, engaging affected communities and civil society, and mobilising new funding avenues to support hepatitis elimination programs.

It is possible to make elimination of hepatitis into a reality. Now is the time to prioritise testing, treatment, and vaccination to meet the 2030 targets.

Support for all breastfeeding moms

World Breastfeeding Week, celebrated in the first week of August, is supported by WHO, UNICEF, and numerous health ministries and civil society partners. The theme for 2024 is "Closing the Gap: Breastfeeding Support for All."

This campaign aims to celebrate the diversity of breastfeeding moms throughout their journeys, showcasing how families, communities, and health workers can support them. This year, the focus is on recognising breastfeeding moms, ensuring they are seen and heard, and sharing relatable experiences about the importance of multi-level support, including:

- Creating a societal environment that values women and breastfeeding.
- Establishing a women- and breastfeeding-friendly healthcare system.
- Respecting women's right to breastfeed anytime, anywhere.
- Offering robust community support.

Key messages for this year's campaign include:

- Appreciation and support: Let us appreciate breastfeeding moms and ensure they get the support they need.
- Diverse forms of support: Support ranges from staff welcoming breastfeeding in local cafés to maternity protections from governments.
- Rights and protections: Women everywhere have the right to respectful breastfeeding counselling and supportive laws and policies.
- Normalisation and advocacy: We can help ensure women feel able to breastfeed anytime, anywhere, and work to improve their position at home, work, and public life.

Join the campaign from 1 to 7 August with the hashtags #WorldBreastfeedingWeek and #TogetherForMoms, and let us work together to support breastfeeding moms everywhere.

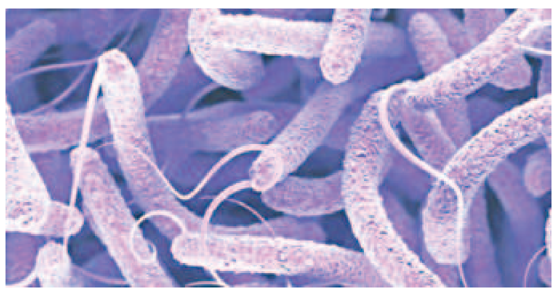
EL NIÑO AND CHOLERA

How climate events influence disease outbreaks

New research suggests that an El Niño event may have aided the establishment and spread of a novel cholera strain during an early 20th-century pandemic, supporting the idea that climate anomalies could create opportunities for the emergence of new cholera strains. Xavier Rodo of Instituto de Salud Global de Barcelona, Spain, and colleagues present these findings in the open-access journal PLOS Neglected Tropical Diseases.

Since 1961, more than 1 million people worldwide have died in an ongoing cholera pandemic, the seventh cholera pandemic to have occurred since 1817. The drivers of past cholera pandemics have been unclear, but one hypothesis holds that anomalous climate conditions may act synergistically with genetic changes of Vibrio cholerae—the bacterium that causes the disease—to facilitate the spread and dominance of new strains.

To help clarify potential links between climate and cholera, Rodo and colleagues applied a variety of statistical and computational tools to historical records of climate conditions and cholera deaths in various regions of former British India during the sixth cholera pandemic, which lasted from 1899 to 1923. They also compared past conditions with climate and cholera data for the ongoing pandemic.



This analysis revealed that anomalous patterns of cholera deaths from 1904 to 1907 occurred alongside out-of-the-ordinary seasonal temperatures and rainfall levels associated with an El Niño event; the timing of these occurrences correlates with the establishment of a new invasive strain during the sixth pandemic. In addition, these historical climate conditions show similarities to strong El Niño events that have been associated with cholera strain changes during the ongoing pandemic.

These findings support the possibility that anomalous climate events could help facilitate the establishment and spread of new cholera strains.

The researchers then explored future possibilities for climate-facilitated emergence of new cholera strains using standard climate prediction models. They found that climate change-driven increases in climate variability and extremes could boost the chances of emergence of novel strains through the end of the current century.

Meanwhile, to deepen understanding of this deadly disease, the scientists call for further research focused on the interplay of cholera evolution and climate anomalies.

Recognising heart attack symptoms in women

STAR HEALTH DESK

Heart attacks can present differently in women compared to men, leading to potential misdiagnoses and delays in treatment. Understanding these differences is crucial for timely intervention and better outcomes.

Women do not always exhibit the classic heart attack symptoms that are often associated with men, such as intense chest pain radiating down one arm. While these symptoms can still occur in women, many experience more subtle or even silent symptoms that can be easily overlooked. Here are six common heart attack symptoms in women that everyone should be aware of:

1. Chest pain or discomfort:
Chest pain is the most common symptom of a heart attack in both men and women. However, women may experience it differently. It might feel like squeezing, fullness, or pressure anywhere in the chest, not just on the left side. It as a vise tightening around the chest. It is essential to note that this discomfort is usually significant and uncomfortable during a heart attack.

2. Pain in the arm(s), back, neck, or jaw:
Women are more likely than men to experience pain in these areas. This pain can be confusing, as it might not be centred on the chest or left arm but instead appear in the back or jaw. The pain can be gradual or sudden, waxing and waning before becoming intense. Report any unusual or unexplained pain above the waist, as it could be a sign of a heart attack.

3. Stomach pain:
Heart attack-related stomach pain is often mistaken for heartburn, the flu, or a stomach ulcer. Some women describe this pain as severe abdominal pressure, akin to an elephant sitting on their stomach.

4. Shortness of breath, nausea, or lightheadedness:
Difficulty breathing without an apparent reason can be a warning sign of a heart attack, especially when accompanied by other symptoms. It can feel like running a marathon without moving. If you experience shortness of breath alongside other symptoms, it is crucial to seek medical attention immediately.

5. Sweating:
Women having a heart attack often break out in a cold sweat, which feels more stress-related than exercise-induced perspiration. Check out if you experience this type of sweating without a clear cause, such as heat or hot flashes.

6. Fatigue:
Extreme tiredness, even after minimal physical activity, is a common symptom among women experiencing a heart attack. Patients often report feeling an unusual tiredness in their chest, making simple activities like walking to the bathroom difficult.

It is important to recognise that not everyone will experience all these symptoms. However, if you have chest discomfort, especially if accompanied by one or more of the other signs, it is critical to visit emergency department immediately. Early recognition and treatment are key to improving survival rates and outcomes for heart attack patients. By being aware of these symptoms, women can take proactive steps to protect their heart health and seek prompt medical attention when necessary.

A closer look: Understanding antidepressant discontinuation symptoms

Clinicians prescribing antidepressants often face the challenge of managing symptoms that patients experience when stopping these medications. While it is known that discontinuation symptoms occur, the frequency and severity have remained unclear. A recent meta-analysis published in Lancet Psychiatry aims to shed light on this phenomenon.

The analysis pooled data from 44 randomised trials and 35 observational studies, revealing that the incidence of at least one discontinuation symptom was significantly higher in patients taking antidepressants compared to those on placebo (31% vs. 17%). Among randomised trials that included both antidepressant and placebo groups, this difference was smaller (8 percentage points). Severe discontinuation symptoms were found in 3% of patients on antidepressants, compared to less than 1% on placebo.

A liberal estimate suggests that 15% of patients discontinuing antidepressants will experience symptoms, though severe cases are much rarer, around 2%. Gradual tapering of the medication and occasionally switching to a longer half-life antidepressant like fluoxetine can help mitigate these symptoms. Recognising whether symptoms are due to withdrawal or a recurrence of the original condition is crucial for appropriate management.

TIPS

The consequences of untreated mitral regurgitation

Mitral regurgitation (MR) is a condition where the mitral valve in the heart does not close properly, allowing blood to flow backward into the left atrium when the left ventricle contracts. This can lead to a range of complications if left untreated. Understanding the potential consequences is crucial for those diagnosed with MR to take appropriate action and seek timely medical intervention.

Progressive heart failure:
One of the most significant risks of untreated MR is the development of heart failure. When the mitral valve leaks, the heart has to work harder to pump blood effectively. Over time, this increased workload can weaken the heart muscle, leading to heart failure. Symptoms of heart failure include shortness of breath, fatigue, swelling in the legs and feet, and persistent coughing or wheezing.

Atrial fibrillation:
Untreated MR can also lead to atrial fibrillation (AFib), a type of irregular heartbeat. The backward flow of blood into the left atrium causes the atrium to expand and stretch, which can disrupt the heart's normal electrical signals. AFib increases the risk of blood clots forming in the heart, which can travel to the brain and cause a stroke. Symptoms of AFib may include palpitations, dizziness, and chest pain.

Pulmonary hypertension:
Pulmonary hypertension is another serious complication of untreated MR. The increased pressure in the left atrium can cause elevated pressure in the pulmonary veins and, subsequently, the pulmonary arteries. This condition leads to high blood pressure in the lungs, which can strain the right side of the heart and eventually lead to right-sided heart failure. Symptoms of pulmonary hypertension include shortness of breath, fatigue, chest pain, and fainting.

Endocarditis:
People with untreated MR are at a higher risk of developing endocarditis, an infection of the inner lining of the heart chambers and valves. The abnormal flow of blood through the damaged mitral valve can create a suitable environment for bacteria to adhere to the valve. Symptoms of endocarditis include fever, chills, night sweats, fatigue, and unexplained weight loss. If left untreated, endocarditis can damage the heart valves further and lead to severe complications.

Reduced quality of life:
The symptoms associated with untreated MR, such as fatigue, shortness of breath, and swelling, can significantly impact a person's quality of life. Daily activities may become challenging, and the individual may find it difficult to maintain an active lifestyle. This can lead to a decline in physical and mental well-being.

Mitral regurgitation is a serious condition that requires timely diagnosis and treatment to prevent potentially life-threatening complications. If you suspect you have MR or have been diagnosed with it, it is crucial to follow your doctor's recommendations and seek appropriate treatment. Early intervention can help manage symptoms, prevent complications, and improve overall quality of life. Ignoring the condition can lead to severe and potentially irreversible damage to your heart and overall health.

Romania athletes celebrate on the podium during the medal ceremony after the women's eight final rowing competition of the Paris Olympics at the Vaires-sur-Marne Nautical Centre yesterday, ensuring the country's first gold in the event since the 2004 Athens Games. Paris erupts over Marchand, Riner's record riches

REUTERS, Paris

France have already collected more titles midway through the Paris Olympics than during the whole of the Tokyo and Rio Games after a crazy Friday night that had the home fans listening to three times.

Teddy Riner's record fourth Olympic title in judo, swimming poster boy Leon Marchand's fourth and Joris Daudet's victory in a sensational BMX 1-2-3 took Les Bleus's gold tally to 11 - one more than in Tokyo three years ago and Rio in 2016.

Marchand brought the host nation to a standstill once again and the 22-year-old did it in style, roared to the rafters by a rapturous crowd as he joined American greats Michael Phelps and Mark Spitz as the only male swimmers to have won four individual titles at a single Games.

"It's just crazy to be compared to those guys [Phelps and Spitz]. I don't think I realise from now. Maybe I will in a few days," said Marchand whose coach, Bob Bowman, also worked with Phelps.

Emphasising his status as the hottest property in the pool, Marchand shattered the 200 metres Individual Medley Olympic record of one minute 54.23 seconds set by Phelps at the 2008 Beijing Games and replaced it with a new best of 1:54.06.

It is the fourth such record set by the poster boy of the Paris Games, who has taken the burden of expectation and shaped it into another source of strength, in as many finals in the La Defense Arena.

Around the city, and at other venues, crowds celebrated and burst into the national anthem.

At the Stade de France, scene of France's momentous 1998 World Cup football triumph and venue for the track and field events, the decathlon 400m had to be delayed due to the noise from the stands.

"I don't think anything went wrong this week. It's been perfect," Marchand told reporters as the crowd chanted his name long into the night.

"Four gold medals is not what I thought I could possibly do," he added later. "I was trying to win one at first. I had four chances of doing it."

A few hours earlier, Frenchman Riner sent the partisan crowd into near madness when he left it late to beat world number one Kim Minjong of South Korea and claim the title in the +100kg category.

The 35-year-old, judo's most decorated athlete at the Olympics with six medals, now shares the French Summer Olympics record of four titles after claiming individual golds at the London and Rio Games and a team title in Tokyo.

The roar the crowd let out was deafening, and when Riner was awarded his medal by former biathlete Martin Fourcade, who holds the French record of five golds across Winter and Summer Olympics, it triggered another ear-splitting moment when the first official rendition of France's national anthem "La Marseillaise" resonated at the venue.

Meanwhile, French fans broke into an impromptu rendition of the Marseillaise in the middle of a Brazil v Netherlands beach volleyball game at the nearby venue by the Eiffel Tower as the news filtered through.

"I often said it but now it is just pure happiness, pure happiness," said Riner, who has surpassed Japanese judoka Ryoko Tani's five Olympic medals tally collected over five consecutive Games from 1992 to 2008.

Imranur, Sonia cap off Bangladesh's sorry campaign

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh's 11th campaign in the Summer Olympic Games finished yesterday as disappointingly, if not more, as the country's previous 10 campaigns.

Sprinter Imranur Rahman pulled the curtains down on a sorry campaign, which had generated some expectation due to his presence and that of archer Sagor Islam, who had qualified directly for Paris 2024.

Imranur, the country's three-time fastest man and national record holder, failed miserably in his attempt to qualify for the main heats of 10m sprint event.

The 31-year-old Bangladeshi sprinter clocked 10.73 seconds to finish his race -- 0.62 seconds slower than his personal best at the Stade de France.

Imranur eventually finished 25th among 45 competitors, with top 16 among them qualifying for the main heats.

Around the same time at the Paris La Defense Arena, swimmer Sonia Khatun finished 64th among 79 competitors in the heats of the 50m freestyle event. The 25-year-old was 0.42 seconds off her personal best mark.

The two frustrating results capped off another humiliating campaign for Bangladesh, the most populous nation to have never produced an Olympic medallist.

Enthekhabul Hamid, Bangladesh delegation's chef de mission, said he wasn't surprised by the performance of the athletes.

"Those who came with wildcards were expected to perform like these" Hamid, also the general secretary of Bangladesh Shooting Sports Federation, told The Daily Star yesterday over phone from Paris.

The Games started with frustration for Bangladesh as archer Sagor, the only athlete to have qualified for these games, finished 45th among 64 in the ranking round before losing in straight sets against three-time Olympic medallist Mauro Nespoli of Italy.

Hamid felt that stage fright and lack of experience at big events was the undoing of Sagor.

"Everyone had high hopes of Sagor. But he's only 18 and he got nervous in the main event," Hamid said. "This is symptomatic of all athletes. They don't often participate in such premier events, where only top athletes participate. So it's natural to fail if you're not used to competing at this level."

Shooter Robiul Islam was the next to be eliminated from the Games, finishing 43rd among 49 competitors in 10m air rifle event.

Only swimmer Samiul Islam Rafi managed to improve on his previous best timing. Even though he finished 69th among 79 competitors in 100m freestyle, Rafi's timing was 0.02 second better than his previous best.

Hamid felt that long-term training was what helped Rafi and he believes training and quality coaching is the only way to achieve success in such global events.

"The reason Rafi did relatively well is the one-year training he was given in Thailand," Hamid opined. "There is no alternative to long-term training under good coaching staff. Government should increase sports budget so that we can send our athletes to more international tournaments to give them exposure."

No reason we can't do well in Pakistan: Adams

Former New Zealand pacer Andre Adams has been working as Bangladesh's pace bowling coach since February this year and has overseen the pacers in home series against Sri Lanka and Zimbabwe and the ICC T20 World Cup in June. Bangladesh's next assignment is a tour to Pakistan for a two-Test series later this month. On Saturday, Adams spoke with The Daily Star's Samsul Arefin Khan about the Tigers' chances in the series and shared his observations about the pacers. Here are the excerpts:

The Daily Star (DS): What will be the biggest challenge for our pacers in Pakistan?
Andre Adams (AA): I think patience. If you look at their [Pakistan] Test series against Australia and New Zealand, those wickets were really flat. There is a trend at the moment in world cricket that Tests don't go beyond three or four days. I think in Pakistan, you got to have the will to take the game to five days. So, the pacers need to bowl with a lot of patience. Basically, I think the biggest challenge playing in Pakistan is accepting that it's not going to be like how you want it to be but you have to do what needs to be done.

DS: What skills the pacers need to be successful in Pakistan?
AA: One of the biggest things while playing in Pakistan is the ability to use the movement in the air with the new ball as well as the older ball, when you get some reverse swing. And certain variations are obviously going to be very crucial. Whether it's cross seam or wobble seam or even just wide of the crease or close to the stumps, you need to try some variations and see what the ball does.

DS: Tanzim Sakib had a fantastic T20 World Cup, how do you rate him as a red-ball prospect?
AA: I think he is exciting. For him, it's just going to be about learning what he needs to do and doesn't need to do. It's going to take a little bit of time. He's certainly an exciting prospect like [Nahid] Rana and Hasan [Mahmud]. I'm happy that I'm dealing with a group of bowlers who really want to do well.

DS: BCB has recently given Taskin Ahmed the green signal for red-ball cricket. Do you think he is ready to return to Tests?
AA: I don't think so, it's too early. He needs to get the opportunity to bowl before becoming a candidate. I think it's very exciting for Bangladesh that Taskin wants to play red-ball cricket. We should be grateful for that as he can easily go and chase cash around the world. He just needs time. You need to be fit and strong and there's no getting away from that. Taskin is certainly working hard on that aspect. The unfortunate thing is fast bowlers do get injured. But if he wants to play and gets fit, there is no reason why he can't play.

DS: Bangladesh's record in Pakistan is really poor. Do you think they have a good chance of doing well this time?
AA: Yes, I think we do. It's going to be a huge challenge. They are ranked above us in Test cricket. We just need to be prepared to play the long game. But there's actually no reason why this group of batters can't score runs. No reason as well for the bowlers to not take all wickets. Just because we haven't done it yet, doesn't mean we can't.

Tensions spilt over after France's 1-0 quarterfinal win over Argentina in the Paris 2024 Olympic Games in Bordeaux yesterday. Players and staff members clashed on the pitch and confrontations continued down the tunnel, fuelling an already-heated rivalry. It was the first meeting of the nations since the FIFA World Cup final in 2022. France will now take on Egypt in the semifinal, while Spain await Morocco for a spot in the gold-decider. AL activists to take positions on streets from today

Awami League has decided to take positions on the streets from today and continue to do so throughout August while holding programmes to mark the National Mourning Day (August 15).

Today, they will gather at every ward of the capital, all districts, metropolitan areas, and thana headquarters.

They party yesterday communicated the decision with its district-level leaders.

It also announced a mourning procession from the Engineers Institute to Bangabandhu Bhaban in Dhanmondi-32 on Monday. According to sources, the ruling party will try to ensure maximum participation "to show its strength".

AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader made the announcement of the programmes at a press conference at the party president's Dhanmondi office yesterday.

"We had scheduled programmes for yesterday [Friday] and today [yesterday]. We avoided those as we don't want any conflict," he said.

"The demands of the quota reform protesters have been met. The movement is now in the hands of a third party that wants to make Bangladesh a failed state. We can't allow their evil efforts to succeed."

He called upon the students to behave responsibly and alleged that vested quarters are spreading propaganda on social media.

Quader said the incumbent AL government was democratically elected under the leadership of Sheikh Hasina, but now the BNP-Jamaat alliance is attempting to overthrow it.

"BNP-Jamaat is trying to turn the quota movement into an anti-government movement. The Sheikh Hasina government is addressing the situation with patience and restraint."

AFTERMATH OF HAMAS LEADER'S KILLING

Fears of Middle East war grow

US to deploy more warships, fighter jets to ME; Iran says expects Hezbollah to hit deeper inside Israel

AGENCIES

Fears of a regional Middle East war grew yesterday after the assassination of Hamas's political leader, blamed on Israel, triggered vows of vengeance from Iran-backed Middle East groups.

The United States said it would move additional warships and fighter jets to the region as the Iran-aligned "Axis of Resistance" readied its response to the killing of Ismail Haniyeh.

The groups from Lebanon, Yemen, Iraq and Syria have already been drawn into the nearly 10-month war in Gaza between Israel and the Palestinian movement Hamas.

Iran yesterday said it expects one of those groups, Lebanon's Hezbollah, to hit deeper inside Israel and to no longer be confined to military targets.

- Britain says situation worsening in the region rapidly
- Iran says 'short-range projectile' killed Hamas chief
- Five killed in Israeli West Bank air strike

With such talk growing, the Pentagon said it was bolstering its military presence in the Middle East to protect US personnel and defend Israel.

An aircraft carrier strike group led by the USS Abraham Lincoln will replace one helmed by the USS Theodore Roosevelt in the region, the Pentagon said.

Defense Secretary Lloyd Austin also ordered additional ballistic missile defence-capable cruisers and destroyers to the Middle East and areas under United States European Command, as well as a new fighter squadron to the Middle East.

On Friday, thousands of people in Qatar attended funeral prayers for Haniyeh, who was buried north of the capital Doha two days after his death.

Iran's Revolutionary Guards yesterday said he was killed by a "short-range projectile" fired "from outside the accommodation area" where he was staying.

Haniyeh had been in Iran to attend the swearing-in of President Masoud Pezeshkian on Tuesday.

Two police personnel, including an assistant sub-inspector and a constable, were suspended over the killing of Rangpur Begum Rokeya University student Abu Sayed during a quota protest on July 16.

They are ASI Amir Hosain and constable Sujan, Rangpur Metropolitan Police Commissioner Md Moniruzzaman told The Daily Star yesterday.

They were suspended due to their unprofessional behaviour, negligence in discharging duty, and violation of legal order given by the high-ups, he said.

Earlier, police formed a four-member committee led by Additional Commissioner Saifuzzaman Faruki to investigate the incident.

The committee submitted a preliminary report and based on the findings, they were suspended on Thursday, the police commissioner said.

22 US congressmen write to State Dept; UN rights chief for steps to prevent violence

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-two US congressmen have urged the State Department to take actions to hold complicit Bangladesh government officials accountable for the abuses against the people.

"In order to prevent the further deterioration of democracy, the US must partner with the international community to support the right of the people to a representative democratic government that upholds human rights and respects individual freedoms," they said in a bipartisan letter to Secretary of State Antony Blinken on Friday.

"The US must condemn all acts of violence, ensure critical civil liberties, such as the freedom of expression and peaceful assembly, are protected, and take action to hold complicit government officials accountable for the above abuses against the Bangladeshi people," the letter said.

More than 200 people were killed and thousands injured during the recent violent clashes surrounding students' protests demanding reforms to the quota system in government jobs. More than 11,000 have also been arrested in the last couple of days.

At least 93 dead as violence grips the country

STAR REPORT

At least 93 people were killed and more than a thousand others injured, many with bullets, as a new wave of violence convulsed Bangladesh yesterday.

Ruling party activists and police clashed with anti-government protesters in at least 20 districts on the first day of the student-led non-cooperation movement designed to keep pressure on Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to step down.

With yesterday's count, the total death toll in anti-government protests crossed 300 in just three weeks, making it the bloodiest period in the history of Bangladesh's civil movement.

The day began with an eerie calm, but it turned violent after supporters of the ruling Awami League descended on the streets to subdue anti-government protests.

As violence spread, an angry mob attacked a police station in the northern district of Sirajganj, beating 13 police personnel to death. Separately, at least five people died in clashes in Raiganj upazila of Sirajganj, taking the total death toll to 18 in the district, the highest tally among all.

In the capital, at least 12 people were killed. Most of them were brought dead to Dhaka Medical College and Hospital.

With the country already on the boil, attackers torched or vandalised the homes of some ruling party lawmakers, Awami League offices, police stations, law-enforcement vehicles, prison vans and hospital buses throughout the day, forcing the authorities to tighten a nationwide curfew and block 4G mobile internet to quell the violence.

With yesterday's count, the total death toll in anti-government protests crossed 300 in just three weeks, making it the bloodiest period in the history of Bangladesh's civil movement.

Details of death and destruction kept coming from across the country until late last night. The death toll is likely to rise as many were hospitalised with grievous injuries, according to reports filed by The Daily Star's district correspondents. At least 70 establishments owned by individuals or the government were set on fire, according to fire service data.

Bangladesh announced the shutdown of public and private offices, including banks, for three days, while students scheduled a long march for today, setting themselves on a potential collision course with pro-government groups.

It all came as protesters whittled their demands down to just one: the resignation of Hasina and her cabinet members. Simultaneously, they started a non-cooperation movement, urging citizens not to pay taxes and migrant workers not to send remittances from abroad through banking channels.

The latest spell of violence was born out of job quota reform protests led by students. The protests entered a

Protesters call for 'March to Dhaka' today

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The anti-discrimination student movement has moved up the "March to Dhaka" programme from Tuesday to today to press for their one-point demand – the resignation of the Sheikh Hasina-led government.

They called upon the students and people from across the country to join the march towards the capital.

Earlier around 2:00pm yesterday, the March to Dhaka was announced for tomorrow. However, as incidents of violence and deaths unfolded throughout the day, the protesters decided to move it forward.

They made the fresh announcement around 5:00pm through social media, and also rejected the nationwide curfew announced from 6:00pm last evening.

"At one stage, the police officers thought they were safe. But hundreds of people made a sudden attack on the station," said Hannan.

They have so far recovered the bodies of 13 policemen, including the officer-in-charge, four sub-inspectors, one assistant sub-inspector, and seven constables, he said, adding that the attackers also torched the police station.

Resist the saboteurs with an iron hand

PM urges people

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday asked people to deal with saboteurs with an iron hand.

"Those who are now causing the violence are students. They are criminals," Hasina was quoted as saying by Assistant Press Secretary ABM Sarwer-E-Alam Sarker.

The government in a press release urged students and parents to return home and stay safe.

"Militant attacks are taking place in various places. Strict action will be taken against the attackers," it reads.

Besides, the ruling Awami League said the party had reached the end of its patience and would resist those engaged in terrorism and anarchy.

Briefing reporters at the AL president's Dhanmondi office, presidium member Jahangir Kabir Nanak urged people to resist militant groups and BNP-Jamaat.

dangerous phase after at least 208 people were killed in indiscriminate firing by law enforcers, members of Border Guard Bangladesh and ruling party activists, in a spasm of violence from July 16 to August 3.

Tension in Bangladesh has been simmering since Saturday night, following AL General Secretary Obaidul Quader's announcement that the ruling party activists would be on the streets to maintain their positions against protesters.

In Dhaka, some areas felt like battlefields yesterday as police, ruling party activists and protesters engaged in three-way violence at Farmgate, Dhanmondi, Mirpur 10, Uttara, Shahbagh and Gulistan.

Hundreds of ruling party supporters wielding sticks walked down Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue towards the Karwan Bazar intersection around 12:50pm, raising fears of violence.

The road stretching from Farmgate to Bangla Motor resembled a "battlefield" as police and ruling party men fired indiscriminately on a huge crowd of protesters, who were advancing towards Farmgate with sticks in hand. They were also carrying drums and plastic traffic barriers to the protest site. At times, they threw brickbats at the police and Awami League supporters along the way.

A clash broke out between protesters and ruling party men near the Awami League office in the capital's Dhanmondi around 12:30pm when protesters from Dhanmondi-2 moved to Dhanmondi-3. Sounds of gunshots and stun grenades rang out in the area.

Most shopping malls, shops, bank branches and other establishments were closed. Public transport disappeared from the streets, forcing people to walk home or to workplaces, while long-haul buses and trains suspended their services.

In Old Dhaka, a clash between police and protesters halted proceedings at the Chief Metropolitan Magistrate's Court premises.

Over a hundred protesters, along with pro-BNP lawyers, broke a collapsible gate to the court premises, which the police had cordoned off since morning. The protesters threw brickbats at the doors and windows in the court area, witnesses said. Two prison vans and two police cars were vandalised by unidentified people as violence broke out.

The Shahbagh intersection was on edge after rival groups gathered since morning, leading to a violent clash. Both groups barged into the Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University premises and engaged in another round of clashes. At least 24 vehicles were set on fire with black smoke billowing skywards.

Meanwhile, the Mirpur-10 intersection turned into a hotspot as protesters arrived in droves. AL men, some of them with firearms, had already occupied the area, backed by police. Numerous gunshots rang out, sending panic through the area.

Live bullets can't be used if there's no riot or law violation: HC

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The High Court yesterday observed that law enforcers can use rubber bullets, teargas shells and then live bullets if anyone violates the law.

Live bullets cannot be used if there are no riots or violation of the law, the court added.

The bench of Justice Mustafa Zaman Islam and Justice SM Masud Hossain Dolon made the observation while delivering an order on a petition that challenged the legality of keeping six coordinators of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement in the DB custody and the use of live rounds on demonstrators.

The bench, however, rejected the petition saying that it has become infructuous after the release of six coordinators of the movement.

The petition was filed by Supreme Court lawyers Aynunnahar Siddiqua and Manzur-Al-Matin on July 30.

The six coordinators were freed on Thursday.

Yesterday, the HC observed that "every citizen shall have the right to participate in peaceful procession, assembly and public meetings as per the directions of the constitution.

Says Dr Kamal Hossain about law enforcers using lethal weapons on protesters

Excessive force and lethal weapons used by law enforcement agencies on unarmed protesters during recent quota reform protests was in clear violation of human rights and contradictory to democracy and justice, Gonoforum founder Dr Kamal Hossain said yesterday.

In a statement, Dr Kamal, also an eminent jurist, called for a neutral probe into the killings and tortures during the protests.

He said the probe should be done under the stewardship of international expertise and culprits be brought to justice.

"However, suppressing dissents or harassing common people on this pretext will in no way be acceptable," he added.

He slammed the government order to "shoot on sight" and denounced "extra-judicial killings"

Entire state structure must be overhauled

Says TIB

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Transparency International Bangladesh yesterday condemned the unlawful use of lethal weapons and the disproportionate use of force by law enforcement agencies.

"The entirely peaceful, non-violent and apolitical anti-discrimination student movement has been subjected to imposed violence, leading to an unprecedentedly tragic loss of hundreds of lives and a reign of terror over the past two weeks," said TIB in a statement.

"The entire state structure must be overhauled including all institutions associated with the rule of law, particularly the law enforcement and intelligence agencies through an initiative grounded on national consensus," it said.

Those responsible for ordering and approving this unprecedented brutality must be subjected to exemplary accountability, TIB said in the statement.

Other than what TIB termed "cruel killings", these weeks have been characterised by arbitrary filing of cases, indiscriminate attacks, mass arrests through block raids, illegal remand, detainment, and torture in detention by the Detective Branch, unjust warrants, online and offline threats, and systematic violation of constitutionally guaranteed human rights including freedom of speech, right to protest and freedom of association.

"According to independent assessments, at least 200 students and ordinary individuals, including children, teenagers, journalists, and other professionals, have been killed by law enforcement agencies. At least 213,000 individuals have been implicated in more than 200 cases in the police stations of the capital alone."

In the statement, TIB demanded that proper accountability for human rights violations of all types must be ensured via an internationally acceptable investigation conducted by a United Nations-engineered initiative.

At least 172 people were admitted to Chattogram Medical College Hospital (CMCH) yesterday after sustaining injuries during clashes between protesters and the police, along with ruling Awami League and Chhatra League activists across the port city and neighbouring upazilas.

Tuhin Shuvro Das, an emergency medical officer at CMCH, confirmed the matter, saying that most of the injured were hit by bullets.

He said as of 9:00pm yesterday, at least 110 people were admitted with bullet wounds while 62 were admitted with other injuries. Of them, three are in ICU.

The atmosphere at CMCH turned grim from 11:45am as a continuous stream of injured individuals arrived. A total of 90 people were admitted to the casualty ward alone by 6:00pm, with many patients being referred to other wards due to overcrowding.

Md Shahadat, 11, from West Madarbari, was admitted to the Paediatric Surgery ward around 4:50pm with injuries from rubber bullets. Shahadat said he was standing by the roadside in New Market area when he got hit by a rubber bullet.

A clash was ongoing in the area at that time.

Mohiuddin, a madrasa student from Patiya upazila, was admitted to the casualty ward with a bullet injury in his right hand. He was caught in a clash between protesters, police, and AL men.

Hospital sources reported that around 12 madrasa students were injured and admitted to CMCH, most of them with bullet wounds.

Meanwhile, a tense situation prevailed across Chattogram district yesterday, with very sparse movement of public transport. No long-haul buses were seen on the roads, and hardly anyone ventured outside unless it was an emergency.

Numerous clashes occurred throughout the day between protesters and police, AL, and BCL men in areas including New Market, Jubilee Road, and Kazir Dewri.

Eyewitnesses reported seeing ruling party men firing at protesters. There were also numerous chases and counter-chases between them.

At one point, protesters were besieged by AL and BCL men from three sides at Wasa intersection.

Meanwhile, army personnel were seen posted and checking vehicles at various points in the port city, including GEC, Wasa, Lalkhan Bazar intersections, and Chatteshwari Road.

Innocent people get caught up in violence

Mohammed Ashik, 23, who works at a mobile repairing shop in Chattogram city's Reazuddin Bazar, was going to his workplace around 11:20am when he found himself in the line of fire as activists of Jubo League and Chhatra League were shooting at protesters yesterday.

Admitted to the casualty ward at Chattogram Medical College Hospital, Ashik was seen in agonising pain. "My employer asked me to join work, so I was heading there when suddenly a bullet hit my right leg and I fell down," he said.

Ashik's father Jalal Majhi said he had asked his son to leave for their hometown in Noakhali as the situation in the port city was worsening. "Even before he could leave, he got shot," he added.

Abul Hasnat, a staff member at Chattogram lawyers' canteen, was struck on his head with a sharp weapon by unidentified people who stormed into his house on the third floor of Gazi Tower in New Market around 11:30am.

"I was standing on the third floor when a violent clash was going on outside. Some armed men came up and hit me on the head with a sharp weapon, leaving me unconscious," he recounted while lying on a hospital bed.

Shipon, a rickshaw puller, was shot when he went outside their home to call his son back inside as violence ensued nearby in the Tigerpass area.

"We live hand to mouth. We neither harmed anyone nor got involved in any movement, then why are we paying the price?" asked his wife.

The port city's New Market area turned into a battlefield yesterday as BCL and JL members, brandishing firearms and sharp weapons, engaged in hours-long fierce clashes with protesters at 11:15am near Shah Amanat Market.

According to witnesses, the BCL and JL members were seen firing at the protesters, and numerous gunshots and crude bomb explosions were heard.

BNP supports one-point demand wishers of the BNP and its affiliated bodies at all levels should take to the streets and unite with the students to accelerate the fall of the 'autocratic' government in the larger interest of the country and the nation," he said.

He also called upon all political parties, organisations, individuals, professionals, workers, farmers, and people to make the non-cooperation movement a success.

Fakhrul said a wave of mass uprisings is sweeping across the country against the government.

"The law enforcement agencies will place highest priority on the protection of human lives," the bench said.

The HC judges said law enforcers may use force only when necessary.

The bench said, "Freedom of peaceful assembly is to be enjoyed equally by everyone and the authorities must not discriminate against any individual or group or organisation."

"The authorities concerned must comply with the legal obligations and should be accountable for any failure to do so," the HC said.

"What will the police do when a general assembly or procession turns into an unlawful assembly?" the bench asked.

"Police will continue using respective articles of the constitution, penal code and procedural laws of our land in the enforcement of unlawful assemblies, riots, and other offences against public tranquility," it said, adding that in this situation, the police will follow the relevant articles of the constitution as well as domestic laws," it said.

Hence, in a democratic state, it is essential that the police should act within the four corners of the law and then respect of the constitutional right of the citizens, the HC added.

The details of the observations and grounds, on which the court delivered the order, will be known after its full text is released.

CHILD MURDERS

UK grapples with worst riots in 13 yrs

AFP, London

UK authorities yesterday faced growing pressure to put an end to England's worst rioting in 13 years after disturbances linked to child murders and involving far-riot agitators flared across the country.

Unrest related to misinformation about a mass stabbing that killed three young girls last week spread to multiple towns and cities on Saturday as anti-immigration demonstrators clashed with police.

The violence is posing a major test for Prime Minister Keir Starmer, who was elected only a month ago after leading Labour to a landslide win over the Conservatives.

About 90 people were arrested after skirmishes broke out at far-right rallies in numerous places including Liverpool, Manchester, Bristol, Blackpool and Hull, as well as Belfast in Northern Ireland.

23 killed as Sudan paramilitaries shell Darfur city

AFP, Port Sudan

Shelling by Sudanese paramilitaries killed at least 23 people on Saturday in the besieged Darfur city of El-Fasher, activists said.

The capital of North Darfur state is the largest city in the vast western region not yet under the control of the paramilitary Rapid Support Forces (RSF), who have been battling the regular army for more than a year and have laid siege to El-Fasher since May.

The El-Fasher Resistance Committee said in a statement published on its Facebook page that "deliberate bombing" by the paramilitary forces resulted in "23 martyrs", all civilians, and 60 wounded.

RSF shelling of El-Fasher last week killed at least 65 people, said the committee, one of hundreds across Sudan that used to organise pro-democracy protests and have coordinated frontline aid since the war began in April last year.

Medical charity Doctors Without Borders (MSF) has said that by late June, at least 260 people had been killed in the fighting in El-Fasher.

The war, which pits the RSF, led by Mohamed Hamdan Daglo, against the army headed by General Abdel Fattah al-Burhan, has killed tens of thousands of people with some estimates as high as 150,000, according to United States envoy Tom Perriello.

The United Nations says Sudan faces the world's largest internal displacement crisis, with more than 10 million forced to flee internally or abroad.

'We have never been so strong'

Says Venezuela opposition leader despite arrest

AFP, Caracas

Venezuela's opposition leader emerged from hiding on Saturday, declaring "We have never been so strong," as President Nicolas Maduro slammed what he called attempts to "usurp the presidency" following last week's disputed election.

Thousands gathered peacefully across Venezuela, including in the capital Caracas where Maria Corina Machado thrilled supporters with a surprise appearance in a truck bearing a banner reading "Venezuela has won!"

Machado, who spent much of the week in hiding after Maduro threatened her with arrest following deadly post-election protests, had backed the candidacy of Edmundo Gonzalez Urrutia after she herself was banned from running.

Supporters say he won 67 percent of the July 28 vote, and several Latin American countries and the US have recognized him as president-elect.

Others have called on Venezuela to release detailed vote tallies, including EU states France, Germany, Italy and Spain.

ASSASSINATION OF HAMAS' LEADER

Biden voices hope Iran will stand down

Hamas begins consultations to choose Haniyeh's successor

REUTERS, Wilmington

US President Joe Biden expressed hope Iran would stand down despite its threat to avenge the assassination of Hamas' leader in Tehran, as fears mounted that Israel's offensive in Gaza could escalate into a wider Middle East conflict.

Regional tensions have soared following the assassination of Ismail Haniyeh, Hamas' top leader, on Wednesday, a day after an Israeli strike in Beirut killed Fuad Shukr, a senior military commander from the Lebanese group Hezbollah, which like Hamas is backed by Iran.

Iran and Hamas have blamed Israel for Haniyeh's killing, and they, together with Hezbollah, have vowed revenge. Israel has not claimed or denied responsibility.

Asked by reporters whether Iran would stand down, Biden said on Saturday in response to a shouted question, "I hope so. I don't know."

Seeking to bolster defenses in the Middle East in response to threats from Israel's foes, the Pentagon said on Friday it would deploy additional fighter jets and Navy warships to the region.

Haniyeh's death was one in a series of killings of senior Hamas figures as the Gaza offensive nears its 11th month, and it fuelled concern that the conflict in Gaza was turning into a wider Middle East war, reports Reuters.

Hamas said it had begun a "broad consultation process" to choose a new leader three days after the assassination of Haniyeh, who was the face of the group's international diplomacy.

The US and international partners including France, Britain, Italy and Egypt continued diplomatic contacts on Saturday seeking to prevent further regional escalation.

The US urged its citizens who wish to leave Lebanon to start making plans immediately, and the British government advised its nationals to "leave now." Canada warned citizens to avoid all travel to Israel, saying the regional armed conflict endangered security.

Violence continued on Saturday in the Palestinian territories.

An Israeli airstrike on a school sheltering displaced persons in Gaza City killed at least 15 Palestinians on Saturday, hours after two strikes in the occupied West Bank killed nine people including a local Hamas commander, Hamas said.

The Israeli military said the first of two West Bank airstrikes hit a vehicle in a town near the city of Tulkarm, targeting a Hamas cell it said was on its way to carry out an attack.

Two migrants dead after rescue at sea

Says Italian coastguard

AFP, Rome

Italy's coastguard said yesterday two migrants died after they were rescued along with more than 30 others in the Mediterranean off the eastern coast of Sicily.

The coastguard said it received a distress call late Saturday from a boat located about 17 miles southeast of Syracuse carrying Syrian, Egyptian and Bangladeshi migrants.

Search and rescue operations began after the coastguard dispatched a patrol boat and plane to the area, but "the occupants of the vessel ended up in the water as the patrol boat approached," it said in a statement.

Although 34 people were recovered from the water, put onto the patrol boat and transferred to Syracuse's port, one died upon arrival and another after reaching the hospital.

"The search at sea for a missing person who was on board the vessel, which later sank, is currently under way," it said.

The coastguard said it was investigating how the migrants ended in the water as the boat approached.

California wildfire now fourth-largest in state history

Hot weather offers no relief

REUTERS

More than 6,000 firefighters in California's Central Valley continued to battle the largest blaze in the US on Saturday, which burned its way into the history books as the state's fourth-largest conflagration on record.

There was barely a taste of rain on Saturday from thunderstorms that brought wind and rainfall of zero to one-tenth of an inch.

The heat of 100 degrees Fahrenheit (38 Celsius) along with winds up to 25 mph or more in some spots, offered little relief to the firefighters trying to contain the Park Fire, scorching the wilderness terrain some 100 miles (161 km) north of Sacramento, the state capital.

"We had some thunderstorms that just brought us down-drafts, that's a problem," said Christopher Young, a spokesman for the California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection, or Cal Fire. "Lightning is a factor we worry about."

Blazes from the Park Fire, started by an alleged arsonist who pushed a flaming car down a 60-foot gully near Chico, California, on July 24, has since burned more than 400,000 acres or more than 600 square miles, an area larger than the city of Los Angeles. The 42-year-old man arrested had not entered a plea as of Saturday, but was charged with arson and held without bail, officials said.

More than 560 homes and other structures were destroyed since the blaze started 11 days ago, feeding off of downed timber and tinder-dry grass and brush. The fire was 27 percent contained on Saturday, officials said.

Garment factories shut down for indefinite period

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Out of fear of vandalism and subsequent losses amid the current spell of violence, Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) yesterday instructed all the factory owners to keep their units shut until further notice.

The garment exporters' platform circulated the message among the members through WhatsApp, said Md Ashikur Rahman Tuhin, a director of the BGMEA.

This is yet another blow to the sector as the apparel factories were shut down for four days during the first round of violence two weeks ago though this is the peak season for Christmas shipments and taking work orders for the next summer and spring seasons.

During the violence in mid-July, the exporters could not communicate properly with their business partners abroad because of an internet blackout.

Exporters now fear mounting losses as export performance had already been poor over the last two years because of the severe fallout of Covid-19 pandemic, Russia-Ukraine war, runaway inflation in the Western world, Red Sea crisis and a labour unrest at home.

Amid violence across the country, majority of garment factories were shut down yesterday on the first day of a countrywide non-cooperation movement called by the organisers of Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

At least 73 people, including 14 policemen, were killed and dozens injured yesterday as fierce clashes took place in different areas in Dhaka and other parts of Bangladesh.

More than 400 garment factories in Narayanganj, Narayanganj BSCIC and Fatullah areas were closed though many of the units ran for some time in the morning.

Some factories were operational in Rupganj and Araihazar areas of Narayanganj district, said Mohammad Hatem, executive president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA).

Also, almost all the factories in Ashulia, Savar, Maona, Tongi and Chattogram had started production in the morning, but after a few hours the student protests began and some factories were vandalised, leading to the closure of the units.

At least six garment factories were vandalised in Narayanganj BSCIC and its adjacent areas, Hatem said, adding that fearing further escalation of the vandalism, the other factory owners have shut down their units.

Hatem confirmed that the workers left their workplaces peacefully after the shutdown.

"We will sit in meetings soon with the owners, the government and other high-ups on how to run our factories," Hatem said, adding that they will monitor the situation at least for two days.

A sign on the wall of a garments unit states that the facility is closed due to the imposition of an indefinite curfew by the government because of heightened unrest around the country on the first day of a non-cooperation movement called by students. PHOTO: ANISUR RAHMAN

- Garment factories have been shut for an indefinite period
- Factories had to close for four days two weeks ago
- International retailers are concerned about timely shipment
- The sector lost Tk 6,400cr due to factory closure and shipment disruption
- The primary textile sector lost $58.8m amid the unrest in July
- Now is the peak time for shipping ahead of Christmas
- Garment exports fell 5.2% in Jul-May FY24
- Exporters take orders for summer shipments a year in advance

Factories in Konabari and Kashimpur under Gazipur district were shut down although those were opened in the morning, said Arshad Jamal Dipu, vice-president of the BGMEA.

The factories were shut down anticipating violence, he said but could not confirm how many factories were closed.

He said the factory owners are fearing a shutdown of internet again as two weeks ago they suffered a lot and lost business because of the internet blackout. Exporters could not communicate online with their foreign retailers and brands.

Moreover, this is the time for bond renewal of the export-oriented garment factories and already seven factories have complained to him that they cannot renew the bond licences because of the current crisis, Dipu also said.

The owners are also facing trouble in garment shipment and import of raw materials, he added.

Md Towhidur Rahman, president of Bangladesh Apparel Workers Federation, confirmed that all the garment factories in Kaliakoir area have been shut down by the owners fearing escalation of unrest in the sector.

The owners announced closure to save their factories and other assets, he said.

Nazma Akter, president of Sammilito Garment Sramik Federation, a workers' platform, said that the BGMEA leaders held a meeting with the union leaders on Saturday and asked them to be more responsible during the crisis so that the garment factories could remain safe.

The owners are announcing closure of the factories fearing spread of violence in the sector, she said.

The garment exporters fear that if their workers join the ongoing movement across the country, it will further dent the sector, which was hamstrung for four days when factories were completely shuttered due to violence in mid-July.

The sector also suffered serious repercussions because of a five-day internet blackout, which hindered communications between garment suppliers and international retailers and brands, meaning they could not make business deals or hold meetings.

Last week, international retailers and brands expressed concern at a meeting with the leaders of the BGMEA, flagging the difficulties in communication with their headquarters and local suppliers.

The months of July, August and September comprise the peak season for both shipment of goods for next Christmas and also for booking the work orders from the international retailers and brands for the next summer and spring seasons.

The BGMEA has already said they have incurred losses of Tk 6,400 crore because of the shutdown and internet blackout, while the losses estimated by Bangladesh Textile Mills Association stand at $58.8 million.

Five textile, garment and plastic mills set on fire

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

At least five garment, textile and plastic factories have been set on fire in the Ashulia and Sreepur areas during the violence.

Rozina Islam, duty officer at the Central Control Room of the Fire Service and Civil Defence in Dhaka, said Sinha Textile, Beximco Synthetics, a warehouse of scrapped clothing items (jhoot) of Ha-Meem Group, and Bengal Plastic at Zirani in Ashulia were set on fire between 6:30pm and 7:30pm yesterday.

Another spinning mill was set on fire in Sreepur, Islam told The Daily Star over phone.

No death or injury was reported due to the fires, she also said.

Almost all garment factories were open yesterday but shut down after lunch due to fears of vandalism and labour unrest, factory owners said.

Moreover, the Bangladesh Textile Mills Association announced the closure of all its members mills for three days in line with the government's decision for three days of general holidays

Zirani, Ashulia, Savar and Baipail areas are industrial dense areas for garment and textile industries.

Textile units to remain closed

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Textile millers will keep their production units closed due to the prevailing volatile situation in the country.

Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA), which represents the $25 billion primary textile sector, announced the decision in a statement yesterday.

The decision came because of the deteriorating law and order situation in the country and the government's declaration of a three-day holiday from today, the BTMA said.

Transport operators dealt a fresh blow

JAGARAN CHAKMA and MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Transport of passengers and export-import goods began to suffer again yesterday as most vehicles avoided plying roads amid a new wave of violence surrounding the students' non-cooperation movement.

The students took the measure against the government to protest the deaths of over 204 people and nationwide arrests by the police.

The latest disruption comes just over a week after vehicular movement on the highways was severely restricted due to violence centring the quota reform movement.

"No trucks, covered vans, or prime movers are operating on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway as the owners are afraid of violence," said Chowdhury Zafar Ahmed, general secretary of the Bangladesh Covered Van-Truck-Prime Mover Goods Transport Owners Association.

Compared to normal times, only one-fourth of the covered vans and prime movers operated on the road on Saturday night, he added.

Data from the Roads and Highways Department (RHD) shows that around 35,000 to 40,000 vehicles use the four-lane highway daily, with 35 to 40 percent being goods-laden ones.

The highway is the main route for around 90 percent of Bangladesh's international trade. Any disruption means that export-import activities, as well as production in factories, will suffer.

An official of the RHD said the movement of vehicles on the key highway connecting the capital to the port city slumped yesterday.

Apart from goods-laden vehicles, the unrest has also affected the movement of inter-district passenger buses.

Transport operators were dealt a fresh blow as they are again being unable to ply the roads due to safety concerns. Although some are keen to make up losses of previous weeks and risk the journey, there are virtually no customers. PHOTO: RAJIB RAIHAN

Md Abdus Sattar, general manager of Green Line, said they are not operating buses due to a lack of passengers.

"No passenger has bought any tickets today (Sunday), though we were ready to run our buses," he said, adding that Green Line operated buses on almost all routes on Saturday night despite having very few passengers.

"Not only us, but all bus operators are facing the same situation," he added.

Mosharref Hossain, general manager of Hanif Enterprise, said they stopped operating all their long-distance buses since yesterday morning.

On July 23, Khandker Enayet Ullah, secretary general of the Bangladesh Road Transport Owners Association, had told The Daily Star that around 30,000 buses ply inter-district routes daily under around 200 companies. Each bus is losing at least Tk 6,000 in revenue daily.

The loss is even greater if fixed expenditures are factored in, he said.

Bangladesh has over 83,000 registered buses, with private investment in the business growing in line with the expansion of national and regional highways.

Buses carry roughly 70 percent of passengers, followed by inland waterways, rail and air.

Export and import activities at Chattogram port were disrupted yesterday. Though assessment activities of import-export goods were normal, clearance of imported goods was slow.

Officials from customs and the port authority reported that, until 3pm yesterday, approximately 200 trucks were cleared from the port though, on average, the port sees the departure of around 7,000-8,000 trucks daily during usual times.

However, the shipment of cargo containers bound for the Kamalapur inland container depot (ICD) was halted due to the closure of railway wagons, as per port officials.

Mohammad Fyzur Rahman, commissioner of Chattogram customs house, said customs activities related to import and export consignments continued as usual, but there was a noticeable decrease in the release of goods due to a shortage of long-route vehicles.

"Transportation of containers carrying imported goods from Chattogram to Dhaka, and vice versa, was disrupted due to the closure of railway wagons," said Akbar Hossain, commissioner of Kamalapur ICD.

Nonetheless, the clearance and customs procedures for goods previously located in Dhaka were proceeding as usual, he said.

Stock indices nosedive amid unrest

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Major indices of the stock market in Bangladesh took a steep dive yesterday, hitting a three-year low as investors started offloading shares in fear that the country's economy may deteriorate further amid the ongoing unrest.

The DSEX, the benchmark index of the Dhaka Stock Exchange (DSE), plunged by about 1.96 percent from the previous session to close at 5,229 points.

This was its steepest fall since May 2022, when the main index of the country's premier bourse dropped 135 points, or over 2 percent of its total at the time.

After speaking with the officials of at least five brokerage houses, The Daily Star found that their offices were open albeit with limited staff while the doors were practically shuttered.

Still, almost no investors came while the few that did were mostly there to sell.

"As political instability is growing, investors are worried that the market could close again due to another internet blackout. So, they are selling their shares," said a senior official of a leading brokerage house.

Following weeks of unrest, the protestors called for a countrywide non-cooperation movement starting yesterday.

The DS30, an index comprising blue-chip stocks, fell by 2.2 percent to 1,859 points while the DSES, which measures the performance of shariah-compliant companies, dipped by 1.84 percent to 1,143 points.

A merchant banker informed that while he did not receive any buying orders, at least 25 selling orders were placed yesterday.

"It is understandable that people are panicked about the political situation as there is no indication that the situation will improve anytime soon," he said.

This is because investments may lose value or even become a loss if the performance of listed companies is badly hit for having to halt production amid the political instability.

"So, they are selling their shares," the merchant banker added.

He also informed that people are preferring to keep cash in hand rather than invest as they fear another internet outage could disrupt trading activities.

Turnover, which measures the total value of shares traded during the session, fell by 63 points to Tk 207 crore. Of the stocks to witness trade, only six advanced, 372 declined and 19 remained the same.

Unilever Consumer Care saw the most trade, with Tk 48 crore worth of its shares transacted, followed by Heidelberg Materials, Square Pharmaceuticals, Express Insurance, and British American Tobacco (BAT) Bangladesh.

However, the performance of BAT Bangladesh dragged down the DSEX the most, claiming around 7 points, while Renata took away 6 points, Brac Bank 5 points, Grameenphone 5 points and Beximco Pharmaceuticals 4 points, according to LankaBangla Securities.

Shyampur Sugar Mills, a junk stock, was the day's top gainer with a rise of about 5 percent while Unilever Consumer Care advanced 2 percent.

However, Zeal Bangla Sugar Mills dropped the most, with its share value eroding by 3 percent, followed by Monno Agro and General Machinery and Eastern Lubricants with 2.9 percent each.

The trend was similar at the Chittagong Stock Exchange (CSE) as the Caspi, the broad index of the port city bourse, shed 1.27 percent to close at 14,926 points.

Retailers fear immense losses for political crisis

SUKANTA HALDER

The owners of retail outlets in Bangladesh fear they could incur massive losses due to the ongoing unrest stemming from a student movement seeking the resignation of the government.

Shops and malls all over the country were closed yesterday, the first day of a non-cooperation movement announced by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement aimed at driving home their one-point demand.

However, businesspeople said the subsequent declaration of an indefinite curfew that started yesterday and yet another three-day general holiday from today will cause unimaginable losses.

Consumers are panicking about the economic uncertainties considering the country's current state. So, people are being more careful with their spending, they added.

At least 73 people were killed and dozens injured as fierce clashes took places across the country yesterday. The government imposed a curfew for an indefinite period from 6:00pm.

Besides, the government also announced a three-day general holiday starting today for ensuring public safety amid the ongoing protests across the country.

Dewan Aminul Islam Shaheen, president of the Dhaka New Market Business Owners' Association, said that four to five traders from their New Market area opened their shops yesterday morning.

"But due to the serious deterioration of the situation, they later closed up and went home," he said, adding that all shops in the Science Laboratory and Elephant Road area did the same.

Shaheen also said the business situation has been very bad for the last two weeks while sales practically hit zero yesterday.

"In the current situation, traders will have to face bigger losses," he added.

While visiting shopping centres in the Dhanmondi, Jigatola and other commercial areas of Dhaka, it was found that all of them were closed.

Mozammel Haque, general secretary of the Sanmar Ocean City Shop Owners' Association in Chattogram, told The Daily Star that all the shops in their market were closed yesterday.

"We are facing a lot of losses due to the unstable situation for more than two weeks. We will have to suffer more losses in the coming days because of closure and indefinite curfew," he added.

Customers began to shy away from shopping as the overall environment worsened since violence flared in the middle of last month. The situation had led the authorities to impose a curfew and a three-day general holiday beginning on July 20.

Retailers were dealt the blow in less than a year after they contended with losses for more than a month in the face of hartal and a countrywide blockade enforced by the BNP and its allies in the run-up to the parliamentary elections in January this year.

Helal Uddin, president of Bangladesh Shop Owners Association, said all shops and malls across the country were closed yesterday. However, some opened in the morning but later closed.

"There is loss of business now and what will happen in the coming days is unimaginable," he added.

Students launched the quota reform movement on July 1 citing that it discriminated against general students seeking to secure public jobs.

The demonstrators started to stage sit-ins on the roads in different areas, blocking traffic since July 15, and law enforcers later tried to disperse them by force, causing the movement to turn violent.

The government then slapped the curfew for an indefinite period from midnight of July 19 and deployed the armed forces to contain the unrest.

Banks to remain closed for three days from today

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Banks and financial institutions will remain closed for three days beginning from today during the general holidays, said a top official of the Bangladesh Bank yesterday.

The announcement comes after the government declared an indefinite curfew from 6 pm yesterday in the face of a new wave of violence and deaths of people across the country.

At least 73 people were killed and dozens injured because of fierce clashes in different areas in Dhaka and other parts of Bangladesh on the first day of the non-cooperation movement announced by the Anti-Discrimination Students Movement on Saturday.

Banks and financial institutions will remain closed on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday during the general holidays, said BB Spokesperson Md Mezbaul Haque.

Earlier, banks were shut for three days from July 21 in line with a three-day general holiday following the imposition of a curfew from July 20. On July 24 and 25, the banking hour was 11am to 3pm and it was 10am to 3pm on July 28 and 29 respectively.

Since July 31, banks had been open from 10am to 6pm and the banking transaction hour was between 10am and 4pm.

Clashes disrupt services in banks, other sectors

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Banking activities were heavily disrupted yesterday, particularly in Dhaka, amidst violence flaring up on the first day of a non-cooperation movement declared by protesters.

Private offices and businesses also faced difficulties in carrying out their activities commuting inside the city because of clashes between ruling party activists, law enforcement agencies, and demonstrating students that led to the killing of at least 50 people and injuries for scores of others.

The presence of customers at banks was significantly low. Clients, except for emergencies such as for cash withdrawals, avoided visiting branches. Several banks kept shutters of their branches down amid security concerns, according to bankers.

"We have never seen such a low presence of clients," said a senior official of a private bank in Motijheel, the city's commercial district, adding that about a dozen customers took service from the branch until noon yesterday.

"Most of the customers came at the beginning of office hours. Literary, there was no customer after midday," said an official of another bank.

Ahmed Ali, a resident in the Indira Road area in Dhaka, said he tried to go to a branch of Standard Chartered Bank at Pan Pacific Sonargaon Dhaka at about 1:30pm but was compelled to return home as Karwan Bazar turned into a battleground between protesters and ruling party activists.

As the situation became tense in the second half of the day, many officials of the central bank and commercial banks were seen leaving office.

An official of Dutch-Bangla Bank, seeking anonymity, said there was no formal instruction to leave their workstations before office hours, but most officials have left for homes as customer presence was significantly low.

There were little to no banking activities yesterday amidst a non-cooperation movement called by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement. The photo was taken at a bank in the capital's Motijheel.

Many bankers were also seen absent from their duties as they could not commute from their residences because of a lack of transports in the city.

Md Shafiqul Islam, manager of a branch of Sonali Bank in Motijheel, said officials, who completed their work early, left office early.

He said, as the government announced a fresh curfew from 6:00pm, the officials who live quite a distance away have left early.

Like the bankers, very little activities were carried out at private offices in the capital yesterday.

Sabbir Ahmed, an official of a travel agency in Dhaka, said they did not get a single client yesterday. So only two officials were on duty out of 20.

Hasibur Rahman, a resident in Raja Bazar area in Dhaka, said a water tap in the house was broken but he could not find any plumber.

"As this type of shop remained closed, I have collected mobile numbers and called two of the plumbers but none wanted to come for security reasons," he added.

Foisal Hossain, an official of Delta Life Insurance in Gulshan, said he went to the office on time but left for home along with his colleagues early on safety concerns.

China issues plan to boost household consumption

AFP, Beijing, China

China has issued a set of directives aimed at boosting household consumption, a weakness weighing on growth in the world's second-largest economy, with the plan targeting sectors including child and elder care, and food and beverage.

Leaders including President Xi Jinping pledged last month to help boost domestic consumption and ease pressure on China's ailing property sector, following a gathering of the ruling Communist Party's top brass.

The State Council, China's cabinet, published a list of 20 general directives on its website on Saturday evening, constituting a general roadmap for ministries and local authorities as the economy recovers after the lifting of strict pandemic measures at the end of 2022 that had hindered growth.

The plan, which does not include proposed budgets, urges authorities to "increase the supply of care services for the elderly", a sector with growth potential in a country with an ageing population.

It also calls for the development of childcare services, as fewer young people opt to have babies due to the high cost of education and lack of social benefits.

We must turn back from further violence

Country heading towards a dangerous path

The continuation and, indeed, re-escalation of violence, which led to around 70 people getting killed yesterday, is pushing the country towards greater danger. Violence first broke out in mid-July when the student wing of the ruling party attacked student protesters of the quota reform movement. Then we saw law enforcers being used to suppress the protests. Even though such incidents declined after a few days, and the government indicated its willingness to pursue a path of dialogue, yesterday's events suggest that it has decided to return to the path of force. In addition to the killing of ordinary people, the killing of police personnel and attacks on ruling party members' houses indicate that the violence is taking on a different colour. This may escalate into a civic conflict with very ominous consequences.

We believe the prime minister's invitation for dialogue, even though it was initially declined, was the wiser path to try and resolve the crisis. But yesterday's events indicate a complete U-turn from that and towards the use of force on both sides. We strongly believe this is the wrong approach. This violent reaction will only lead to more resentment, destruction, injuries and deaths. Therefore, the ruling party's decision to resort back to the use of brute force, particularly using its student wings, is not only illegal, but also a mistake.

On August 3, we saw the most massive number of people protesting. In the biggest rallies that took place in Dhaka, protesters were fully peaceful. The very next day, we saw ruling party affiliated men taking to the streets with sticks, rods, machetes and, in some cases, firearms. And it seemed they were intentionally placed to face off against the protesters.

The ruling party has full right to peacefully demonstrate its strength. But under no circumstances should that show of strength be done with the use of violence. If it truly wants to reduce tensions, why create a situation where there is a face-off between its supporters armed with deadly weapons and the protesters? And why would they fire live ammunition? Its supporters could have easily gathered somewhere else, instead of taking position where the protesters were and attacking them. Such tactics raise questions regarding the government's declaration that it does not want conflict but would rather have a peaceful resolution. From what we witnessed yesterday, it is the presence of ruling party members that created this confrontation, leading to conflicts.

The events of yesterday show that the country is becoming a battleground between ruling party men and the protesters. This will create much deeper divisions that could prove impossible to mend. Right now, the entire country is heading towards an extremely dangerous path. At this point, the use of force would be most detrimental for the whole nation. We strongly call on the ruling party to withdraw its members, and for both sides to avoid a head-on collision that serves no one and, instead, come to the negotiating table for a peaceful settlement. That is the only way to prevent further deaths and injuries.

How long must we wait for justice?

As bodies pile up, govt yet to show sincerity about fair investigations

The bloodstains from July's unprecedented violence haven't faded yet, with the wounds of survivors far from healed. But already new blood is being spilled. Sunday marked the start of the second wave of violence in under two weeks, claiming about 60 lives across the country. As we brace for more uncertainties and possibly further bloodshed in the coming days, harrowing details are still emerging about the first wave, which serve as a grim reminder of the severe repercussions when state power is wielded without accountability.

After analysing the injuries sustained by the deceased during the first wave of violence, The Daily Star has found that 195 victims—or 95 percent—were killed by bullets, including live rounds, rubber bullets, and shotgun pellets. Of them, 113 were shot by live rounds that mostly hit in the head, chest, abdomen, etc. Even a single gunshot to these vital body parts can kill in minutes. As a security expert told this daily, under the rules of engagement for civilian protests, security forces are supposed to crouch in a lying position and shoot below the hip to incapacitate the opponent. If they are standing or aiming upwards—as they did during the first wave—then it indicates an intent to kill rather than disperse. Moreover, fatal shots were also fired from close range in many cases. For example, more than two dozen people died from rubber bullets, meaning that they were likely shot at point-blank range. These targeted and lethal shootings show how far the government was—and still is—willing to go to suppress the demands for justice.

But such heavy-handed tactics do not work, as it should have been abundantly clear by now. If the Awami League government is unsure about how to handle the present crisis, it is partly because it has never faced anything like it in its 15-plus years of uninterrupted rule, and partly because of its unwillingness to adapt and learn and engage with citizens in a democratic way. But this is not a war that the deaths of civilians caught in the middle of clashes can be accepted as collateral damage. There are no winners in this. We have all lost as a nation when at least 204 people—including 43 students and 32 children—died during the first wave. If the protesters now feel that fair justice is not possible under the present government, it is precisely because the latter has given no hint yet of its sincerity in that regard.

We, therefore, urge the government to change its uncompromising stance, stop continued crackdown on protesters, and immediately make way for a fully-fledged investigation by the UN. The government must be able to convince the protesters that it will not try to protect members of security forces and its own party cadres responsible for the killings. This may be the only way left for it to come out of this unprecedented crisis.

We must step back from the precipice

MANZOOR AHMED

Awami League leaders including Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina plaintively ask, "All job quota demands have been met; why, then, are the students protesting?" If the ruling party leaders don't understand or pretend not to understand why students are not staying back at home (their campuses and dormitories remain shuttered), we are in much deeper trouble than one could imagine. We are already at the precipice.

July 2024 will surely be marked as the blood-drenched July and will find its place in history with other milestones of student movement, such as 1952 (Language Movement), 1969 (Mass Uprising), and 1990 (anti-Ershad movement), which turned the tide of history.

The question frequently raised is how a demand for quota reform in government job recruitment by university students in Dhaka has been allowed to spread nationwide and to turn into a bloodbath. The common answer is that the regime has totally failed to sense the public pulse. Incompetence, arrogance, and mockery of protesters by supposedly responsible people were combined with a belief that it would be controlled by applying force and by unleashing the student arm of the ruling party. They failed to realise the depth of grief and pain of the people when Abu Sayed of Begum Rokeya University, Rangpur was gunned down by police on July 16, at close range and in public view, as he stood alone with a stick in hand. The government failed to realise that it was fast going out of hand. It failed to sit back, take stock and change its game plan.

> There is no reason why the prime minister cannot offer an unconditional apology for the mayhem caused, lives lost and how the situation has been handled by her government, despite whatever blame can be apportioned to opportunist mischief-makers.

The regime failed to see that the movement wasn't just about quotas, and the longer it continued, it conflated and merged into all the grievances and pains of the people.

Corruption and cronyism affected every citizen who came in contact with any government agency; obscene amassing of wealth by those favoured by the regime reached a new height; and the daily struggle of families to make ends meet in the face of inflation and price hikes of daily necessities was aggravated by syndicates of hoarders and extortionists nurtured and tolerated by the authorities.

They did not feel the people's pain and grief caused by more than 200 deaths of students and citizens of all ages, including children, some of whom were killed and injured in the safety of their homes by firing from helicopters roaming over residential neighbourhoods, according to the victim families' accounts.

It is very difficult to understand why student coordinators of the protest were not reached out early, in order to come to an understanding about the outcome and about a process to be followed, including handling the judicial process. The public does not understand why and how the police, Rab and border forces called in to the cities became so reckless and vengeful as to aim at the protesters' eyes and heads using not just rubber bullets, but also shotgun ammunitions and lethal bullets. In the fray, they themselves suffered attacks and loss of life. Have the rules of engagement, operational procedures and command and control broken down completely, or has this been part of the plan to subdue protest by terrorising the protesters and citizens?

The usual playbook of large-scale arrests casting a wide net and alleging vague criminal acts, picking up the people at the dead of night, not informing families of the whereabouts of those picked up, not allowing families to visit those in custody—all illegal under our constitution and laws—have continued. The regime's game plan does not require that the charges are properly framed and allegations are proven in the court. The hapless people taken into custody under any excuse would suffer harassment, physical abuse, long incarceration, material loss and mental agony, no matter what verdict the slow process of justice eventually hands down. And none are held answerable for this cruel travesty.

#Save Bangladesh

Considering past experiences, it is difficult to have any faith in government enquiries and the possibility of real perpetrators being punished. As the sister of 19- year-old Mahmudur Rahman Shoikot of Nurjahan Road in Mohammadpur, shot in the head as he was looking for his injured friend, asked, "Police killed my brother; should we go to them for justice?"

Students have now called for a non-cooperation movement. It is a deep expression of their frustrations. As of this writing, the prime minister has said the doors of Gono Bhaban are open to students. She has been holding meetings with university heads. These are moves that should have come much earlier.

There is no reason why the prime minister should not declare the acceptance of the nine-point demand of the students for accountability and justice regarding the government's handling of the quota reform movement and the deaths and injuries, restoring academic peace on campuses, and allowing legitimate channels of expressing students' views and complaints through elected student unions.

There is no reason why the prime minister cannot offer an unconditional apology for the mayhem caused, lives lost and how the situation has been handled by her government, despite whatever blame can be apportioned to opportunist mischief-makers.

The prime minister should demonstrate her bona fides by offering full cooperation to the Eminent Citizens' Enquiry Commission headed by Justice MA Matin and Sultana Kamal, and vow to give due consideration to its findings and recommendations.

The prime minister should ask the ministers involved in aspects of the quota reform movement to accept their share of the responsibility. Officials of law enforcement agencies need to be placed on suspension pending appropriate investigation. A process should begin to bring those respected for academic feat and personal integrity into university management.

As a gesture of good faith, the prime minister should pledge to negotiate with the UAE authorities about deporting back to Bangladesh the 57 Bangladeshis who have been sentenced to prison for holding a rally in the UAE supporting the students' movement.

The words, actions and gestures must reflect a good faith effort, signal a change of plans and strategies, and a change of heart and mind. And a willingness and openness should be demonstrated to consult and dialogue with all about overcoming the hurdles to build a just and democratic society.

No sane person can believe or declare that it is too late.

Will India learn anything from the Wayanad Tragedy?

Pallab Bhattacharya is a special correspondent for The Daily Star. He writes from New Delhi, India.

PALLAB BHATTACHARYA

The deadly waves of landslides, triggered by incessant heavy rains in the hills of southern Indian state of Kerala's Wayanad district, has once again brought to sharp focus the debate over development and ecology.

Following the first day of the landslides on July 23, the Indian Environment Ministry issued a fresh draft notification declaring over 56,800 square km of the Western Ghats as an Ecologically Sensitive Area (ESA) spanning six states, including the devastated Wayanad villages. This was the sixth such notification by the Environment Ministry in a decade since 2014, but the final notification has never seen the light of the day after running into objections from political parties and governments.

The Western Ghats, among the world's eight most important biodiversity hot spots, runs between India's south to west through Kerala, Tamil Nadu, Karnataka, Goa, Gujarat, and Maharashtra. What is at stake is the life of more than 50 million people living in the region, most of them dependent on agriculture and plantations.

According to official documents, the significance of the Western Ghats as a global biodiversity area and a treasure trove of biological diversity has been repeatedly emphasised. It is also the origin of Godavari, Krishna, Cauvery, and a number of other rivers of peninsular India, on which depends much of the economy of the region.

Environmental scientists have attributed the landslides to a combination of loss of forest cover due to unregulated infrastructure development, quarrying, mining in the fragile terrain, and climate change. The increase in the rainfall on Kerala in recent years is seen by environmentalists as the result of warming of the south eastern part of the Arabian Sea, causing heightened precipitation.

In 2011, an expert panel set up by the Indian government, led by ecologist-academic Madhav Gadgil, had submitted a report, recommending a ban on these activities and designating 75 percent of the entire Western Ghats region as an ecologically sensitive zone (ESZ), a graded zonation approach to regulating industrial and agricultural activities and creation of an overarching ecological authority for the region. The expert report is gathering dust following resistance by political parties, which opposed cutting down the ESZ areas for industries and other development activities. The opposition has largely stemmed from fears that any move to ban certain activities and the demarcation of whole villages as ESAs will deprive the local people of economic growth opportunities.

Another government-appointed committee, headed by leading scientist K Kasturirangan, had suggested in 2013 that the Meppadi Panchayat in Wayanad, one of the most severely affected places by the July 23 landslide, be included in the larger eco-sensitive zone being demarcated in the state. The Kasturirangan panel proposed 37 percent of the Western Ghats be demarcated as ESA because the previously proposed 75 percent figure was considered too high. However, the Kasturirangan committee recommendations also remain unimplemented.

Maharashtra's Congress-NCP coalition government submitted to the federal Environment Ministry in 2012 that the creation of an overarching Western Ghats Ecological Authority would run parallel to existing government agencies and opposed the idea. Kerala, Maharashtra and Tamil Nadu opposed a proposed ban on new hydropower projects in the region.

In 2022, the BJP government had issued a notification of ESAs in the Western Ghats but the party's government in Karnataka opposed the move. The then Karnataka Home Minister, Aranga Jnanendra, had said, if the draft notification was accepted as it was, "it will affect the lives of people in rural areas."

The Indian Express quoted Pandurang Hegde, an environmental activist associated with the Save Western Ghats Movement in Karnataka, as saying that irrespective of which political party is in power, they have always projected protection of Western Ghats as an "anti-people issue."

Hedge added, "Those with vested interests desiring to exploit natural resources do not want the demarcation of ESAs and politicians have used local people as a shield to justify the delays."

In an article in The Indian Express, Amitbah Kant, India's G20 Sherpa, says a 2022 study on depleting forest cover in Wayanad showed 62 percent of the district's green cover disappeared between 1950 and 2018, while rubber plantation cover rose by around 1,800 percent.

The intensity of the landslide increased because rubber trees are less effective in holding soil compared to the dense forest cover of pre-plantation times. Besides, the sharp rise in eco-tourism in Wayanad, one of the most scenic spots in India, has gone on unchecked in the last so many years with the construction of hotels, resorts, and roads through the hills.

The main challenge is aligning the biodiversity of the Western Ghats region with adequate opportunities for the local people in the broad framework of ESA. It is not merely an issue of development regulation, but is intimately linked to positive promotion of environment-friendly and socially inclusive growth.

Burdened by the standard pessimism that comes with dreary middle age, you know that tyrants never go gentle into that good night.

Every time you try to write, you feel those jeers ring in your ears, from your, shall we say, self—no no, not this self, but that other one; you know which one—the troll, the dark comedian, the eternal cynic who says: give it up, your words never have and never will change a damn thing. You counter by saying that's perfectly fine, that it's not the role of the writer to turn the wheels of history like an action hero, but to simply put pen to paper and describe what they see. But even as you say this, your protestations appear feeble and vacuous. Because sure, you can write about how we are living in an undemocratic situation where human rights and rule of law have been tossed out the window, where the authoritarian playbook is being deployed in clear daylight, where curfews and internet blackouts and extrajudicial disappearances are being normalised as tools to keep citizens under control, but... everybody knows that already!

Still, the facts pile up with nowhere to go. Over 200 killed, 11,000 arrested, many of them minors. A lady who works near your house says her son got picked up by the police on his way to work, simply for identifying himself as a student. Your university student friends say they live in fear but refuse to back down from the struggle. Undeniable video evidence of police violence filters through to your computer screen, and these videos have been examined and authenticated by foreign agencies with the expertise to do so.

That ill sensation you already feel is compounded by the reactions of the government—lies heaped upon lies, a pretty picture utterly disconnected from reality. An official throws out a barrage of contradictions: protesters destroyed the internet lines, no no we shut it off to enforce law and order, no no we are working to restore internet, it's back but no no, not social media just yet. This is reminiscent of what Jacques Derrida called "kettle logic," based on a reading of Sigmund Freud's exchange with a man who tosses out all kinds of arguments in his own defence. The man has returned a damaged kettle to his neighbour, and when accused, he says 1) it was damaged when I got it, 2) there is no damage, 3) I never borrowed your kettle. Derrida uses a keen and close reading to tease out, among other things, such kettle logic in a given discourse, where a writer's or philosopher's own inconsistencies cause the argument to self-deconstruct. But here in Bangladesh, no Derrida is needed, because the contradictions are deafening, and the regime-sanctioned-gaslighting loud enough to drive one up the walls.

This dark feeling threatens to become all-engulfing, but now news trickles in, story after story from here and there of bravery, resistance, humanity. Students who flung themselves in front of their peers to protect them, friends and allies who offered shelter, lawyers who stood in front of police cars daring the jackboots to make a rash move. And you realise, in that a-ha moment that no, it's not you, nothing is broken within you, it is simply that boot, that weight of the regime, that thing on your neck that has caused this feeling.

And so you fall into a sort of malaise. Your lived self feels misaligned from your true self and despair becomes you—this, you recognise, is what Soren Kierkegaard would have called "the sickness unto death." Your therapist can do little other than offer platitudes of well-being—stay positive, try gratitude journaling... that sort of hokum. Sometimes you wonder if something is wrong with you, and in the midst of the blackout and curfew, with no human contact, sometimes you wonder if you are the only one feeling this way, everyone else being happy and well-adjusted. You split off from yourself and hover near the ceiling, and start thinking of yourself in the second-person singular. Rhetorical flourishes can be a way of coping.

This dark feeling threatens to become all-engulfing, but now news trickles in, story after story from here and there of bravery, resistance, humanity. Students who flung themselves in front of their peers to protect them, friends and allies who offered shelter, lawyers who stood in front of police cars daring the jackboots to make a rash move. And you realise, in that a-ha moment that no, it's not you, nothing is broken within you, it is simply that boot, that weight of the regime, that thing on your neck that has caused this feeling. Anxiety, depression, and helplessness are a natural, logical reaction to it, and in fact, happily prancing around as if everything is fine—now that would be the mental illness.

When the internet is back, you see the social media profiles all bleeding red in unshakeable solidarity for those who demand nothing but justice and refuse to be cowed. A new generation, one with a conscience and a fresh pair of eyes is saying to the regime: I'm hip to all your tricks, your algebra, your politics.

That thing—that jackboot—on your neck is still there, and you know it probably will remain there for a good while to come. You have, after all, danced this dance many times before and your capacity for youthful idealism—that spontaneous, romantic, revolutionary energy that says change is at hand!—is diminished. You have seen, read, and heard too much. Internet memes likening protesters to Marvel superheroes leave you cold, because you are all too aware that life is not a comic book or a meme, and real-world violence is not fun or exciting.

For a long time, it was enough to call someone a razakar to send a nervous chill down their spine and make them back down. For a long time, the older generation patronisingly lectured the youth with the good old "but you kids haven't seen the war like we have have!" as if our lives in Bangladesh post-1971 have been nothing but gravy. Many kept quiet and endured such evasion of responsibility from our elders. But no more! The unity and heart online are visible for all to see—no wonder the powers-that-be are scared of the internet.

And just like that, life flows back into your veins, a thirst you didn't know you had feels quenched bit by bit, and a gust of hope lifts you up and places you on your writing desk, telling you to get to work.

You are now in debt to the fighters out there—so many of them unjustly killed, maimed, imprisoned. They and their families have been failed completely by a government that was duty-bound to serve and protect. Any government official responsible with a shred of a conscience upon learning of the events that have transpired over the last few days would turn red with shame, resign their post, and beg the nation for forgiveness. But not here in Bangladesh, because apology is not the way of the jackboot.

This is why it is all the more important that we acknowledge each other, that we reach out to and hold on to each other, that we lift each other up, and spread kindness, fairness, and the values of democracy and social justice as far and as wide as we can. Is that futile? Very well then, it's futile! But you cannot always take on the sins of the world onto your own shoulders—all you can do is act in line with your ethics and stay straight with your maker, align yourself with your true self, and continue to speak truth to power even if your voice shakes.

That thing—that jackboot—on your neck is still there, and you know it probably will remain there for a good while to come. You have, after all, danced this dance many times before and your capacity for youthful idealism—that spontaneous, romantic, revolutionary energy that says change is at hand!—is diminished. You have seen, read, and heard too much. Internet memes likening protesters to Marvel superheroes leave you cold, because you are all too aware that life is not a comic book or a meme, and real-world violence is not fun or exciting.

Nor is the fight of good versus evil as simple as you would like it to be. Burdened by the standard pessimism that comes with dreary middle age, you know that tyrants never go gentle into that good night, and when they do, it is often tyrants who replace other has-been tyrants—think the departure of Ershad or the Shah of Iran or the last Tsar of Russia or Hosni Mubarak—and escape from the cycle seems impossible. And yet, and yet, and yet. The contagion of courage changes something in you—because that icy shudder of loneliness is now gone, that nonsensical jumble of thoughts has transformed into a more articulate stream, and now, wind in your sails from a rush of solidarity, you do that one thing that you are still able to do—write about it all. You know very well your words can't change a thing, but if there's even a sliver of a possibility that these words might travel out into the ether and let another oppressed, depressed, repressed soul know that they are not alone, then this debt of yours—of mine—is paid forward.

Why cancel prisoners' right to visitation?

It is unacceptable that prisoners are being denied visitations from their families for over two weeks. On August 3, when we went to see our clients at the Dhaka Central Jail, we were stopped at the jail gate by a security guard named Halim and some other female guards. They tried to turn us away along with other visitors who had gathered at the gate. After learning that we were lawyers from the Supreme Court, they calmed down a bit. We told them that we wanted to see our clients, who were in the prison, but they said they could not allow the visitation. When we asked for the reason, they responded that it was an order from above. We asked if they had received the order in writing. They said they did not receive anything in writing, but were verbally instructed.

We then gave the security guard our card and asked him to take it to the jailer and requested a meeting with him instead. We learnt from the other guards that visits had been stopped since July 20. No one has been able to see the students who have been sent to jail over the last few weeks due to mass arrests. Even other prisoners, in unrelated cases, are unable to meet anyone anymore.

At one point, a prison official came to the gate to meet us. He reiterated that no prisoners would be allowed to meet anyone. When we asked for the reason, he said they did not have any answers. He advised us to meet someone of a higher rank to get more details or to learn the reason behind this restriction. He gave us the phone number of the deputy superintendent of jail. Barrister Sara Hossain called the person and asked why visitors were barred from visiting detainees. He informed us that the direction had come from the home ministry. He said a circular had been issued in this regard on the website of the Department of Prisons. We saw that the circular on the website had been issued on July 21, even though we had learnt from people at the jail gate that visits had been stopped since July 20. It is possible that the instructions were given on July 20 and the circular was issued a day later.

The problem with this order is that two kinds of people are sent to jail: those who are convicted and sentenced with imprisonment, and those who are sent to jail while their cases are still on trial. The jail code clearly states that all of them have the right to visitation by their families once a week for one hour. They are now being deprived of this legal right.

The problem with this order is that two kinds of people are sent to jail: those who are convicted and sentenced with imprisonment, and those who are sent to jail while their cases are still on trial. The jail code clearly states that all of them have the right to visitation by their families once a week for one hour. They are now being deprived of this legal right.

Another concerning fact is that ordinary people do not know about the suspension of visits. Some people are looking for their sons or brothers. They are coming to the central jail from Brahmanbaria, Bogura, or other places, quite far from Keraniganj. They don't know how their family members are faring in jail. A lot of them don't even know if their family members are in this jail. I even found people who heard that a relative had been arrested. When they went to the police station, the officers informed them that the person had already been sent to jail. When they tried to visit them in jail, they couldn't. They still haven't been able to establish any form of contact with them. These people come to the jail every single day hoping to establish contact.

It was very painful for us to witness this suffering of the common people. The circular has been published on the prison website only, and many families are not tech-savvy. If the circular had been published and publicly distributed, these people wouldn't have to travel from one district to another, making futile attempts to see their loved ones. Given the country's current situation, travelling is also difficult. The way the government ignores people's suffering disheartens us.

We believe that this circular denies people their rights. The constitution is the supreme law and clearly grants prisoners the right to visitation by their families for one hour a week. Visitors can also send them essentials such as food, clothes, and medicine. Many are now deprived of medical treatment. They can't receive or even buy their medicines due to lack of money.

The formal methods of sending food and money are also unavailable right now. We did observe some informal methods of sending money or clothes into the prison. But relatives sending anything into the prison right now have no way to confirm whether the prisoners they are sending the items to are actually receiving it.

Three coordinators of the movement – Asif Mahmud, Sarjis Alam and Abu Baker Majumder – confirmed the developments to The Daily Star.

Addressing the protesters in the capital's Shahbagh at 3:00pm, Nahid Islam, a key organiser, said the Awami League activists were deployed on the roads to drive the country into a state of civil war.

"Our objectives, goals and destination are clear. Victory alone is our goal. We are still giving time. If the government continues to resort to violence, we want to let them know that we are looking at the Gono Bhaban.

"If my brothers are shot in the chest, if any of my sisters are injured, we will not sit idle. Form up a 'Protirodh Sangram Committee' [resistance struggle committee] in every neighbourhood, village, mohalla, and alley. Form up resistance wherever [we are] attacked."

He urged students to continue their sit-in at Shahbagh until the fall of the government.

Meanwhile, demonstrators marching with the bodies of victims were dispersed in Shahbagh last evening.

They visited Dhaka Medical College Hospital around 6:00pm yesterday. From there, they marched towards the Shaheed Minar with the bodies of four people killed in yesterday's violence.

After a brief protest there, they headed towards Shahbagh through Dhaka University's Teacher-Student Centre.

They chanted slogans: "Amar Bhai Morlo Keno, Sheikh Hasina Jobab Chai [Why did my brother die? Sheikh Hasina I want an answer]", "Lorai, Lorai, Lorai Chai, Lorai Kore Bachte Chai [Fight, fight, fight; we want to fight; we want to fight and live]", and "Dofa Ek Dabi Ek, Sheikh Hasinar Padatyag [One point, one demand, Sheikh Hasina's resignation]".

While crossing the Shahbagh Police Station, some protesters started throwing brickbats at it.

In retaliation, police lobbed stun grenades and teargas shells, dispersing the demonstrators. Three of the bodies were left on the street.

Among the four bodies, two have been identified -- Abdullah Siddique, 23, a student of Habibullah Bahar Degree College and Touhidul.

The Daily Star could not independently verify where the bodies were later taken.

Four police officials, including an assistant sub-inspector, were injured in the incident, our staff correspondent reported from the spot.

A few minutes later, police took control of Shabagh and the DU campus.

No protesters were found in Shahbagh, and police were seen positioned at every intersection on the campus when this report was filed at 8:00pm.

minister for ICT and telecom, could not be reached for comment.

The government shut down mobile internet service on July 17 to 'control the situation and counter fake news'.

A day later, broadband internet was blocked, severely affecting public life and a wide range of economic activities, including utility bill payment, online banking, international communications, digital commerce and clearance of goods from ports.

The government restored broadband internet on a limited scale on July 23. However, social media platforms like Facebook, TikTok, WhatsApp and YouTube, remained blocked.

Mobile internet was resumed on July 28, while social media restrictions were lifted on July 31.

However, mobile internet users could not access their Facebook and Messenger accounts for approximately seven hours on August 2.

place in different areas in Dhaka and other parts of Bangladesh on the first day of the non-cooperation movement announced by the Anti-Discrimination Students Movement.

On Saturday, Home Minister Asaduzzaman Khan relaxed the ongoing curfew, which was imposed on July 20, from 6:00am to 9:00pm.

Speaking to The Daily Star, Mezbah Uddin Chowdhury, senior secretary at the public administration ministry, cited public safety as the reason behind the holiday decision.

Banks and financial institutions will remain closed during the holiday period, said a top official of the Bangladesh Bank yesterday.

Meanwhile, operations of the courts across the country, including the Supreme Court's Appellate Division and High Court Division, and their offices will remain closed until further notice.

However, one or more magistrates will work round the clock at every court under the chief judicial magistrates and the chief metropolitan magistrates for hearing and disposing of urgent cases.

Besides, Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan will take necessary measures for urgent matters during the closure.

The SC administration issued three separate notifications yesterday to this effect.

restrictions and assist the police.

He added that their actions were not directed against students but against miscreants, saboteurs, arsonists, and those responsible for killing police officers.

The DMP chief said the quota protests that initially started under the banner of "Students Against Discrimination", had later been hijacked by criminals who caused unprecedented chaos across the country.

"BNP-Jamaat-Shibir has resumed vandalism and arson attacks over the last two days nationwide. In the capital, they attacked police and civilians with local weapons, crude bombs, and firearms. They even attacked BSMMU and CMM court, and vandalised police boxes and vehicles.

"At least 11 policemen, including three with bullet wounds, were injured in these attacks today [yesterday]. Their actions prove that they are not students but saboteurs and terrorists," he said.

The DMP has shown considerable restraint since the beginning of the movement. The commissioner asserted that the aim of these miscreants was to demoralise the police. "We want to clearly state that no miscreant can stand in the capital."

Asked about people with sharp weapons and firearms seen with police in the Karwan Bazar area, the DMP chief claimed that they had not yet seen this.

Djokovic beats Alcaraz

Open and Wimbledon titles he has already pocketed this summer.

An emotional Djokovic celebrated by holding aloft the Serbian flag on court before clambering into the players' box to embrace his wife and children.

"We almost played three hours, the final shot was the only moment when I was sure I could win the match," said Djokovic, who had lost heavily to Alcaraz in the Wimbledon final last month.

"I put my body, my family on the line to win gold and finally I did it."

Alcaraz was distraught and wept as he attempted to conduct a TV interview.

"Three hours, a big battle with tough moments," said the 21-year-old after a final in which neither player dropped serve. "It's very painful to lose."

Djokovic carved out a break point in the second game of the opener and three more in the fourth, all saved by the Spaniard.

Then it was the Serb's turn to demonstrate his famed powers of resilience, fighting off three break points in the fifth game and another five in a marathon ninth game.

In a rollercoaster duel, Alcaraz saved a set point in the 12th game but his veteran opponent dominated the tiebreak to claim the opener after a breathless 93 minutes on Court Philippe Chatrier.

There was no let-up in the second set, scintillating shot-making alongside rousing defence with Alcaraz fighting off the final's 14th break point in the third game.

Again the set was decided by a tie-break and it was Djokovic with history on the line again sweeping through to take victory after two hours and 50 minutes.

Lorenzo Musetti defeated Felix Auger-Aliassime in three sets on Saturday to claim the bronze medal, giving Italy its first men's tennis medal in 100 years.

environment for a democratic election is ensured in the country," he said, adding that such a shadow government can continue even in an elected democratic system.

"The important responsibilities that the interim government will perform after assuming office are: establishing an inquiry committee and a special tribunal with the support of the United Nations to try those responsible for the July killings and oppression of the people, withdrawing the recent false cases, and releasing all those detained in these cases," according to Prof Anu.

The proposal includes that the interim government will also hold elections to constitute a Constituent Assembly within six months of its formation. The elected Constituent Assembly will propose a democratic constitution free of autocracy, communal, anti-people, and discriminatory clauses.

Based on that constitution, the interim government will immediately organise the next general election. A declaration should be finalised based on dialogue between the students and citizens, guiding the progress of Bangladesh through a combination of diversity." The Bangladesh University Teachers' Network is ready to play any role in the formation of the proposed interim government and the list of key stakeholders and shadow government," he added.

He also said this outline is only a preliminary proposal, and they are willing to work in the future to expand it if necessary.

Earlier, Dhaka University teacher Prof Samina Lutfa delivered a welcome speech, where DU teachers Prof Mohammad Tanzimuddin Khan, Prof Gitiara Nasreen, Prof Moshahida Sultana Ritu, and BUET teacher Prof Abdul Hasib Chowdhury read out the written statement in the press conference.

associated with these untimely demises of hundreds of children, teens, and young brave souls."

He noted, "The Bangladeshi armed forces have never faced off with the masses or trained their guns at the chests of their fellow citizens."

Bangladesh's armed forces have worked tirelessly and made many sacrifices towards establishing global peace over the last three decades. "But that respect, status, and pride are being questioned today," he said.

Addressing the army, he said, "You must stand beside the people of the country ensuring full adherence to universal human rights. We cannot let our motherland be destroyed in front of our eyes."

"Our border is unprotected at the moment. BGB members have been withdrawn in significant numbers from the border belt to quell the student movement. Not surprisingly the border is now open to parties who wish to exploit the internal turmoil the country is going through."

"Time is ripe to immediately take the soldiers to barracks to prepare themselves for any eventuality as the time taken to transition from internal security mode to operational mode takes quite some time. On the same note, we also urge the government to undertake political initiatives aiming at resolving the ongoing crisis. Do not destroy the good standing of our armed forces by keeping them engaged in a disgraceful campaign," he said.

He further urged for an investigation of all the killings, injuries, shootings, attacks, vandalisms, abductions, arrests, and acts of violence that have to be carried out by the United Nations under its full authority.

Iqbal Karim, who served as the chief of army staff from 2012 to 2015, said those who are responsible for pushing the people to a state of such extreme misery will have to be brought to justice.

The briefing was attended by the former Chief of Army Staff Lt Gen M Nuruddin Khan, former Maj Gen M Azizur Rahman, Maj Gen Abu Kaiser Fazlul Kabir, Maj Gen Jamil D Ahsan, Bir Protik, Maj Gen Rezzaqul Haider, Maj Gen Muhammad Abdul Matin, Maj Gen Mujahid Uddin, Maj Gen Abul Kalam Humayun Kabir, Maj Gen Mahbubul Alam, Maj Gen Ruhul Amin, Maj Gen ATM Shahidul Islam, Brig Gen M Sakhawat Hossain and Brig Gen Shahedul Anam Khan among 48 retired officers.

centring the protests.

A large number of students and citizens were killed during the nonpolitical movement while thousands of others were injured or detained, he said, expressing deep concern over a "mass detention" campaign by the law enforcement agencies.

He also expressed solidarity with the peaceful movement of students.

However, he said, state properties were damaged in violent activities centring the movement, which is not supportable.

He called for punishment for culprits of subversive activities.

He also called upon the government to end harassment of students and mass detention, release all the detainees including students, and resume educational activities across the country to bring back respite in people's mind.

police, ruling party men, and protesters in Shahbagh. At one point, AL men chased protesters, and both groups entered Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University, where they hurled brickbats at each other. Several hospital vehicles and private cars of doctors were set ablaze.

Around 2:00pm, five injured protesters received treatment at BIRDEM hospital, two of them with bullet wounds. At 4:15pm, an armored police vehicle emerged from Shahbagh Police Station but had to return inside as protesters blocked the area. Around 6:40pm, hundreds of protesters carried the four bodies of the deceased to Shahbagh intersection from Central Shaheed Minar. They later threw brickbats at Shahbagh Police Station, and policemen opened fire to retaliate and disperse the protesters.

SCIENCE LAB

At least 41 people were shot in the Science Lab area during a clash between AL men and protesters that ensued around 12:30pm and continued till 4:30pm. Of them, three were bullet-hit while the others were injured by pellets, according to sources at LabAid Hospital. Sounds of gunshots and stun grenades were reported from the scene.

Meanwhile, a showroom of the clothing brand "Yellow" in Dhanmondi was set ablaze at around 3:30pm. According to eyewitnesses, firefighters tried to reach the spot to extinguish the blaze but failed in the face of protesters. However, they later went again and were trying to douse the fire till last reported at 8:30pm.

AZAMPUR

In Azampur, AL leaders and activists gathered in Azampur area around 11:00am, and opened fire at protesters in presence of police when the students went there around 11:30am.

The two groups engaged in chases and counter-chases till 5:30pm.

Anwarul Islam, president of Uttara Ward-1 unit of AL, was killed during the violence, said his cousin and former AL lawmaker Habib Hasan.

RAMPURA

Several thousand students of different private universities, colleges and schools blocked the road in Merul, Badda, Rampura bridge and Banasree area at around 10:15am, chanting slogans demanding Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to step down, and justice for the deaths of their fellow students.

Some parents were also seen accompanying their children.

Around 3:30pm, the students left the spot and marched towards Shahbagh.

MIRPUR-10

Clashes, chases and counter-chases took place at Mirpur-10 between protesters and activists of ruling AL and its affiliates.

The AL men started gathering at Mirpur-10 crossing at 10:30am, armed with canes and firearms, and chased away protesters when they started gathering at Kazipara bus stand later.

The AL men left the scene as Army personnel took position there with several vehicles at around 3:00pm.

DHAKA-CTG HIGHWAY

The Dhaka-Chattogram Highway was left largely deserted as almost no vehicles carrying passengers or export-import goods used the road yesterday.

"No trucks, covered vans, or prime movers are operating on the Dhaka-Chattogram highway as the vehicle owners are afraid of violence," said Chowdhury Zafar Ahmed, general secretary of Bangladesh Covered Van-Truck-Prime Mover Goods Transport Owners Association.

Only one-fourth of the goods-laden vehicles dedicated to the route operated in the previous night, he added.

Around 90 percent of Bangladesh's over US $100 billion worth international trade uses the highway as main route.

No inter-district passenger-buses operated yesterday either.

Md Abdus Sattar, general manager of Green Line Paribahan, said, "No passenger bought tickets today [yesterday], even though we were ready to run our buses."

Yesterday was a great day for Caribbean people as they saw two of their athletes bring in glory for their nations in the Paris Olympics. Just 10 minutes after Julien Alfred stunned American world champion Sha'Carri Richardson to win the women's 100 metres final and claim Saint Lucia's first-ever Olympic medal, [bottom middle] Thea LaFond made history for Dominica by winning gold in the triple jump to earn the country's first-ever Olympic medal. Alfred leads double Caribbean delight

AFP, Paris

Julien Alfred and Thea LaFond led their two tiny Caribbean island nations to first-ever Olympic medals when they won golds in the women's 100m and triple jump at the Paris Games on Saturday.

In the 100m, St. Lucia's Alfred upstaged the much-hyped American world champion Sha'Carri Richardson, storming to a gun-to-tape victory in 10.72sec.

"It means a lot to my country. I'm sure they're celebrating right now," said Alfred.

It was a stunning success in pouring rain at the Stade de France, aided by world champion Richardson's terrible start and the withdrawal before the final of the injured Jamaican veteran Shelly-Ann Fraser-Pryce.

Richardson did fight back to claim silver in 10.87sec, but Fraser-Pryce missed out completely on her bid to become the first Olympian to medal in the same athletics event in five consecutive Games dating back to her gold in Beijing in 2008.

In any case, the evening belonged to 23-year-old Alfred, overcome with joy after realising she had bagged St. Lucia their first-ever medal of any colour at an Olympics.

"Growing up I used to be on the field struggling with no shoes running barefoot, running in my school uniform, running all over the place," said Alfred.

"I'm really hoping this gold medal will also help the youth and help St Lucia build a new stadium and really help the sport grow." In a remarkable turn of events, there was -- just 10 minutes later -- another gold for a second island nation in the West Indies which also began competing at the Games in 1996.

LaFond sailed out to a national record of 15.02 metres on her second effort in the triple jump. The world indoor champion held her nerve as Jamaica's Shanieka Ricketts went out to 14.87m to claim silver.

"It is absolutely beyond my wildest dreams," said LaFond. "The rain was kind of in my favour, it came down as soon as I was done with that second jump – thank you God for working with me!"

Lafond added: "Here we are, Olympic champ. Dominica's first medal, it's gold. Indoor was the first medal, it was gold. What a year, what a life, oh my God, wow!

"Every time I step on the track is an honour, bearing the flag is an honour, being Dominican is an honour. Representing a country with only 70,000 people and being out here and getting their first medal, a gold, is an honour."

McIntosh makes Canadian history

REUTERS, Paris

Summer McIntosh became the first Canadian athlete to take three golds from a single Olympics when she won the 200 metres individual medley at the Paris Games on Saturday.

The 17-year-old swimmer did it in an Olympic record time of two minutes 06.56 seconds, taking down the 2016 record of 2:06.58 set by Hungary's Katinka Hosszu, to complete a medley double after winning the 400 last Monday.

Kate Douglass of the United States won the silver and Australian Kaylee McKeown was awarded the bronze after U.S. swimmer Alex Walsh, the 2021 silver medallist, was disqualified for an illegal turn at the end of the backstroke leg.

McIntosh now has four medals from Paris after also winning the 200 butterfly on Thursday and taking silver in the 400 freestyle on the opening Saturday.

"It's pretty surreal," she said. "I'm just so proud of myself for how I've been able to recover and manage these events, because it is a lot."

Morocco fancy chances against Spain

AFP, LYON

Thierry Henry's France have their sights set on a place in the gold medal match in the Olympic men's football as they face Egypt in the semifinals on Monday, while Spain take on an impressive Morocco in the other last four game.

France are dreaming of a second men's football gold -- 40 years after their first -- on home soil and will be overwhelming favourites against the Egyptians in Lyon.

Henry's team have not conceded a goal on their way to the semis, having eased through the group stage with three wins from three before edging out two-time Olympic champions Argentina 1-0 on Friday.

"I call my players the crazy guys, in a good way," said Henry, an all-time France great who won the World Cup and a European Championship as a player.

"I have had the opportunity to play in a lot of competitions. I am not saying I haven't enjoyed what I have done, but the Olympics are different."

Meanwhile, the winner of men's football gold will come from outside Latin America for the first time since 2000, and there is the possibility of an all North African final.

Morocco have been outstanding in reaching the semis, topping their group ahead of Argentina and hammering the United States 4-0.

They may fancy their chances in Marseille against Spain, who are hoping to follow their senior national team's triumph at Euro 2024 by winning football gold for the second time, 32 years on from victory at the Barcelona Games.

IBA gender tests flawed and illegitimate: IOC

REUTERS, PARIS

The gender tests conducted by the International Boxing Association (IBA) on two female fighters at last year's world championships that led to their disqualification were illegitimate and lacked credibility, the International Olympic Committee (IOC) said on Sunday.

Algerian boxer Imane Khelif and Taiwan's double world champion Lin Yu-ting were cleared to compete at the Paris Olympics despite having been disqualified during the 2023 World Championships after the IBA said they had failed a gender eligibility test.

The IOC said the testing process at that event, which only came towards the end of the competition after the boxers had already fought several bouts, was completely arbitrary. "Those tests are not legitimate tests," IOC spokesperson Mark Adams told a press conference. "The testing, the method of the testing, the idea of the testing which happened kind of overnight. None of it is legitimate and this does not deserve any response."

The IOC last year stripped the IBA of its status as boxing's governing body over governance and finance issues, taking charge of the Paris Games boxing competition.

Tigers' preparation plans for Pak Tests remain uncertain

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh's preparations for the upcoming two-match Test series in Pakistan has taken a hit with practice schedules having to be postponed due to the ongoing unrest in the country.

The team for the Pakistan series is yet to be announced but a probable contingent of players were set to begin skill training under head coach Chandika Hathurusingha and other coaching staff on Sunday. But practice had to be cancelled due to the ongoing unrest.

The government yesterday imposed a curfew for an indefinite period, leading to uncertainty over practice schedules. "Everything depends on the situation in terms of practice sessions taking place. If the situation does not permit, practice won't take place," a BCB source told The Daily Star. Bangladesh are scheduled to depart for Pakistan on August 17 with the first Test in Rawalpindi slated to begin on August 21 and the second Test in Karachi scheduled to start on August 30.

On Saturday, a scheduled physical assessment test of the players at the Bangabandhu National Stadium had to be cancelled due to poor weather. However, the Tigers did take part in strength and conditioning tests at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium the same day.

Bangladesh 'A' team are also slated to leave for Pakistan on August 6 to play two four-day games and three one-day matches. Many national team stars have been named in the 15-member squad for the first four-day match, slated to begin on August 10.

BCB sources have informed that the board is still sticking to their initial schedule regarding A team's departure but everything will depend on the circumstances at the time.

Biles looks to join 'great' Ledecky

REUTERS, PARIS

Simone Biles could join an elite club of greatest female Olympians as she goes for titles eight and nine in the balance beam and floor exercise finals on the last day of artistic gymnastics competition at the Paris Games on Monday.

The American phenom, who won team, all-around and vault golds in Paris, is the favourite on floor but not a shoe-in on beam, the apparatus where a mere centimetre of misjudgment can separate a medallist from last place.

If Biles wins both beam and floor, her nine Olympic golds will tie her with U.S. swimmer Katie Ledecky and Soviet gymnast Larisa Latynina for the most ever won by a female athlete.

Her beam challengers, teammate Sunisa Lee and Zhou Yaqin of China, are two of only three women who so far this year have performed a more difficult routine than Biles. Biles won beam bronze in the last two Olympics, including in Tokyo. She enjoys a difficulty advantage on the floor exercise with her signature tumbling, including a stratospheric double backflip with three twists, meaning the true race on the apparatus will most likely be for silver and bronze.

LEDECKY CONFIRMS GREATNESS

Already rated one of swimming's all-time greats coming into the Paris Olympics, Katie Ledecky made it official yesterday by storming to victory in her signature event, the 800 metres freestyle to end her work in the French capital in grand style with record-equalling ninth gold.

"I knew I just had to focus on the races, don't focus on times, just focus on getting the job done," said Ledecky, whose Paris haul also included gold in the 1,500, silver in the 4x200 freestyle relay and bronze in the 400m free.

In sharp contrast to Ledecky's runaway win in the 1,500m, the 800m freestyle was a thriller from start to finish, with Ariarne Titmus matching her stroke-for-stroke for almost the entire distance.

But with the American setting a relentless, grinding pace her great Australian rival would never get her nose in front, settling for silver, with Ledecky getting to the wall first in a time of 8 minutes, 11.04 seconds.

It marked the fourth consecutive Games Ledecky has won the 800m free, and she joins compatriot Michael Phelps as the only swimmers to win gold in four different Olympics. "Given that Michael's the only one that's ever done that, I think that just shows how difficult that is," said Ledecky. "Especially in the 800. It's just a lot of miles."

The 800m was the final event on Ledecky's Paris card and she returns home having added two golds, a silver and a bronze, bringing her Olympic stockpile to 14 medals in all - with more possible.

In the wake of a sharp escalation of violence across the country, the government yesterday decided to extend the ongoing curfew for an indefinite period in the capital and all other divisional cities, city corporations, district and upazila headquarters.

The government also announced a three-day general holiday starting today.

The home ministry, in a statement released in the afternoon, said the curfew would be effective from 6:00pm yesterday.

At least 90 people, including 14 policemen, were killed and several hundreds injured yesterday as fierce clashes took

Mobile internet, social media blocked again

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Mobile internet, along with popular social media and messaging platforms like Facebook and WhatsApp, are once again blocked in Bangladesh amid escalating violence that has cost dozens of lives.

A government agency under the home ministry instructed mobile operators to shut down 4G services, which facilitate mobile internet, around 12:40 pm yesterday, according to officials of the telecom operators.

"The authorities have shut down the mobile internet. We are in continuous communication with the relevant authorities regarding this issue," said Grameenphone regarding the government's instruction. Banglalink gave out a similar statement.

The telecom regulator ordered the international internet gateway (IIG) companies to block Meta Platforms --Facebook, Messenger, WhatsApp, and Instagram -- from broadband internet, around 1:45 pm, according to officials of IIG operators.

IIG operators supply wholesale internet to broadband internet providers.

Six AL activists beaten to death in Narsingdi

STAR REPORT

Six Awami League leaders and activists were beaten to death yesterday after they opened fire at protesters in Madhabdi upazila of Narsingdi, locals said.

The incident took place at a mosque near Madhabdi Municipal Building around 1:00pm, reports our correspondent, quoting Additional Superintendent of Police KM Shahidul Islam Shohag.

Police said the deceased are Delwar Hossain Shaheen, 37, chairman of Chardighaldi Union Parishad and former general secretary of Madhabdi Chhatra League; Babul Hossain, 47, councillor of Ward-12; Moniruzzaman Bhuiyan, 48, organising secretary of Madhabdi Swechchhasebok League and member of Zilla Parishad; Delwar Hossain Delu, 48, former Chhatra League activist; Kamal Mia, 45, who had no post in the ruling AL, but was known in the area as a supporter; and Anisur Rahman Sohel, 43, leader of Madhabdi Swechchhasebok League.

Witnesses said hundreds of protesters blocked the Dhaka-Sylhet highway around 12:00pm.

Around an hour later, hundreds of AL leaders and activists first asked the protesters to leave and then opened fire at them, injuring several protesters, locals said.

As the protesters chased the AL men away with sticks, some of them went inside Boro Masjid.

The protesters then caught and beat up at least 10 people inside the mosque, leaving six of them dead, locals said.

The bodies were lying there for hours.

Around 8:00pm, the dead bodies were sent to Narsinghdi Sadar Hospital for autopsy.

Upazila Parishad Chairman Anwar Hossain's younger brother Jakaria Hossain said the AL men were attacked by BNP leaders and protesters without any provocation.

Of those who got shot, Alamin, 25, and Suman, 30, were admitted to Narsingdi Sadar Hospital, and two others were taken to a private facility.

Israel presses on with deadly raids in Gaza

33 Palestinians killed; Hezbollah, Israel trade projectiles along Lebanon border

AGENCIES

An Israeli airstrike hit a tent inside a hospital compound in central Gaza, killing at least five people, bringing the total number of Palestinians killed yesterday to 33, Gaza health officials said, after another round of talks ended without result.

The airstrike hit a tent area inside the Al-Aqsa Hospital compound, starting a fire, wounding at least 18 people in addition to the five killed, medical authorities said.

The attack came hours after a strike on two Gaza City schools-turned-shelters. At least 25 Palestinians were killed and several others were injured in the strike.

The Israeli military said it struck a Hamas member who "conducted terror activities" and that secondary explosions were identified, indicating the presence of weaponry in the hospital compound.

Its statement added it struck 50 military targets across the enclave in the last 24 hours, including Hamas cells.

The hospital compound is in the Deir Al-Balah area, which is crowded with thousands of people displaced by fighting in other parts of the enclave have sought shelter, reports Reuters.

Sirens went off in the area of Ashdod, further north than seen in recent weeks, and the Israeli military said five rockets were launched from southern Gaza. No injuries were reported.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said yesterday at least 39,583 Palestinians have been killed in the Israeli offensive. The toll includes 33 deaths in 24 hours, according to ministry figures.

Israeli forces have continued strikes and shelling in the Gaza Strip after diplomatic efforts in Cairo on Saturday ended without progress, and as Israel braces for a serious escalation in the north.

Chances of a breakthrough appear low as regional tension has soared following the assassination of Hamas' leader Ismail Haniyeh in Tehran on Wednesday, a day after an Israeli strike in Beirut killed Fuad Shukr, a top military commander from Lebanese armed group Hezbollah.

Meanwhile, urgent calls for foreign nationals to leave Lebanon grew yesterday with France warning of "a highly volatile" situation, reports AFP.

France, Canada and Jordan were among the latest governments to call for their citizens to leave Lebanon. The United States and Britain have issued similar warnings.

- Foreign nationals told to leave Lebanon
- Gaza talks in Cairo failed to deliver progress
- Death toll in enclave rises to 39,583

The Bangladesh Army has urged all to comply with the rules of the curfew that was extended for an indefinite period yesterday. It also sought everyone's cooperation in this regard.

The government took the decision which will apply to the capital and all other divisional cities, city corporations, district and upazila headquarters.

The curfew came into effect at 6:00pm yesterday.

According to a statement signed by Inter-Services Public Relation Director Lt Col Sami Ud Dowla Chowdhury, the army will play its role as mandated by the constitution and laws in ensuring the security of the people and protection of the important state infrastructures

"The curfew has been imposed for an indefinite period considering the deterioration of the country's overall law and order," said the ISPR statement yesterday.

Hasina falls, flees

Army chief meets politicians, civil society members to discuss formation of interim govt

Bangladesh's iron lady of 15 years bowed out to a people's uprising yesterday. Serving as the prime minister since 2009, Sheikh Hasina was forced to resign and flee the country as hundreds of thousands marched towards Dhaka defying a curfew amid a continual morning drizzle.

The streets of the capital that had convulsed with violence and death over the last three weeks, reverberated with wild celebrations as soon as the Bangladesh army chief, General Waker-Uz-Zaman, confirmed the rumours of Hasina's resignation. He went on to say that a new interim government will be formed soon.

Millions took to the streets gridlocking the entire capital well into the evening while many found it hard to believe that Hasina's absolute hold on authority and Awami League's fabled political fortress could crumble, faced with a three-week campaign initiated by students.

Revellers stormed the prime minister's residence, office and the parliament. They also ransacked Awami League offices and residences of high-ranking ministers across the country.

Even while thousands converged on Shahbagh from early afternoon, there were reports of violence between demonstrators and police officials on the fringes of Dhaka and from around Bangladesh amid the vacuum that was left in the wake of Hasina's hasty departure without so much as a statement or press release.

A fledgling student protest against reserved quotas for government jobs that began on July 1 started to gain momentum as the government dealt with them harshly. Despite reassurances of no harassment, the AL government employed excessive force to subdue a campaign leading to over 300 deaths. That protest transformed into a strong anti-government campaign over the last week and culminated in a people's uprising yesterday as the student campaigners called for their compatriots to "march to Dhaka". This was particularly in reply to AL's show of political force on Sunday, which left at least 93 dead in a single day's violence. Another 66 were killed yesterday in Dhaka alone.

Droves of people began gathering in neighbourhoods of Dhaka and its outskirts ready to converge in the capital's Shahbagh from early morning. There were also thousands gathering outside the capital and marching towards it, braving all obstacles. The strong tide turned on the back of university students.

About 43 years after Hasina had flown into Dhaka as the newly elected AL president for the first time, she took off on a military helicopter with her younger sister Sheikh Rehana to India.

The five-time prime minister landed in Agartala, the capital of India's northeastern state of Tripura. Thereafter, the 77-year-old premier was flown to Hindon Air Force Base in Ghaziabad, about 30km from the Indian capital of New Delhi, according to Indian news outlets India Today and NDTV.

Hasina was reported to have met with the Indian national security adviser, Ajit Doval, in the evening at Hindon. It is widely reported that Hasina will seek asylum in London. Later in the evening Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi chaired a high-level meeting with key ministers and intelligence chiefs who briefed him about the unfolding situation in Bangladesh, according to reports in Indian media.

Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy, the former PM's ICT affairs adviser, told BBC that his mother would not "come back" to politics.

Back in Dhaka, before he took the podium at the army headquarters to address the nation, flanked by the air chief and naval chief, General Waker-Uz-Zaman met with several politicians and members of the civil society including representatives of BNP, Jatiya Party, Jamaat-e-Islami, other politicians and teachers. The AL was not represented. The student campaigners were not present there either. Leaders of the student protest campaign have announced that they will present an outline for the interim government soon.

In the context of hundreds of violent deaths, the army chief reassured everyone that justice would be ensured for each. He said it was now everyone's responsibility to remain calm.

"Together, we hope to go towards a better situation," he said addressing the media. "I am taking full responsibility."

"The country has suffered a lot, the economy has been hit, many people have been killed. It is time to stop the violence."

On his way to the presidential palace, Bangabhaban, the army chief was greeted by jubilant crowd. Hundreds thronged around

Jubilation as freedom in the air

STAR REPORT

Hundreds of thousands of jubilant people poured out into the streets of the capital, celebrating Sheikh Hasina's resignation and departure.

The crowds chanted slogans and waved the national flag as complete strangers shook hands and hugged each other.

Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, Mirpur Road and Rokeya Sarani were filled with people of all ages. Large groups of people walked through Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue from 2:30pm to 7:00pm. Many said they would go to the Gono Bhaban.

Coordinators of the quota-reform movement, which spearheaded the movement that led to the fall of the government, Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud said in a joint statement, "Power must be transferred to the proposed interim national government of the students. No other government will be accepted. A new Bangladesh and political settlement will be established. No one will leave the streets until the ultimate victory is achieved.

Dhaka University student Rafat Alam said, "I have goosebumps. We waited for this day for a long time. I was not able to talk freely, I was not allowed to cast the vote."

Hasina had been the prime minister for 14 and a half years. In the 2008 national election, her party, the Awami League, won two-thirds of the seats in parliament.

She took power again in 2014, when 153 MPs, out of 300, were "elected" without any competition. The election was boycotted by the main opposition.

Hasina moved to a safe house in India

Reports PTI

AGENCY

Former prime minister Sheikh Hasina has been moved to a safe but undisclosed location in India, PTI reported quoting unnamed sources.

It was unlikely that she would leave India last night, it added.

The sources said Hasina's plan was to leave for London. However, certain issues have made that plan uncertain.

India decided to provide a safe passage through the Indian airspace to Hasina's aircraft following a request from Bangladesh, the sources said.

Bangladesh's military aircraft carrying Hasina landed at Hindon Air Base near Delhi last evening.

Indian government sources said New Delhi is closely following the fast-paced developments in Dhaka.

There is no official word in India on Hasina's arrival in Delhi.

Hours after Hasina landed at the airbase near Delhi in a C-130J military transport aircraft of the Bangladesh Air Force, Indian National Security Adviser Ajit Doval met her, the sources said.

Separately, External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar briefed Prime Minister Narendra Modi about the rapidly unfolding situation in Bangladesh.

Jaishankar also separately apprised the Leader of the Opposition in Lok Sabha Rahul Gandhi of the developments.

Modi later chaired a meeting of his cabinet committee and discussed the developments in Bangladesh.

the general's convoy and some even rode on his car as the convoy slowly glided through the teeming millions who hailed the army chief like a triumphant hero.

Aside from his announcement of an interim government, there were no statements about the nature of the government or the transition process till later in the evening when the president met with the military chiefs, political parties and civil society representatives.

A Bangabhaban press release said that the meeting had unanimously decided to immediately free BNP chief and former prime minister Khaleda Zia.

The meeting also decided to form an interim government immediately and urged everyone to show patience and tolerance. The military will strictly maintain law and order and prevent lawlessness. Parliament will be dissolved and all those arrested during the anti-quota protests will be released.

The delegation included BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir; BNP leaders Mirza Abbas and Major General (Retired) Fazle Elahi Akbar; Jatiya Party (JP) chairman GM Quader; JP Secretary General Mujibul Haque Chunnu; JP Senior Co-chairman Anisul Islam Mahmud; Nagorik Oikkya Convener Mahmudur Rahman Manna; Hefajat-e Islam leaders Mamunul Haque, Monir Kasemi and Mahabubur Rahman; Jamaat chief Shafiqur Rahman; Jamaat leader Sheikh Md Masood; Jaker Party Secretary General Shamim Haider; Bangladesh Khilafat Majlis leader Maulana Jalal Uddin Ahmad; Zonayed Saki of Gonosonghoti Andolon; Gono Odhikar Parishad leader Golam Sarwar Jewel; Dhaka University teacher Asif Nazrul and Firoz Ahmad; and student protest leaders Abdullah Al Hossain, Arif Talukder, Omar Faruq and Mobashwera Karim Mimi and Engineer Md Anisur Rahman.

She won the 2018 election amid widespread allegations of voter fraud. There were reports of Awami League men stuffing ballot boxes the night before the voting day.

The latest election held in January, in which she won a landslide victory, was boycotted by the major opposition parties.

Hasina's government was facing a financial crisis as high inflation eroded the value of taka and foreign currency reserves fell. People were angered by corruption and rising costs of living.

The student protest started on July 1 with a demand for reformation of quotas in public service. It turned into an anti-government movement on Saturday.

From July 16 to August 3, at least 208 people were killed amid widespread violence. Most of the deaths were caused by indiscriminate firing by law enforcers, members of Border Guard Bangladesh and ruling party activists.

At least 93 people were killed on Sunday in a fresh wave of violence as ruling party activists and police clashed with anti-government protesters on the first day of the student-led non-cooperation movement.

The day started yesterday amid tension as the protesting students were set to defy the curfew and enforce the Dhaka March programme, demanding the government's resignation and justice for the killings.

Students started to gather in Uttara, Jatrabari, Mirpur, Shahbagh and other places. Before noon, thousands of them were marching towards Central Shaheed Minar.

Protesters and law forcers chased each other on Badda-Rampura road. As the news of Hasina's resignation spread, the protesters rejoiced. A big portion started to march towards the Shaheed Minar while some went towards the Gono Bhaban, the official residence of the country's PM.

People started to gather at Shahbagh at noon. The intersection was filled with people by 2:00pm. The crowd cheered at the news of Hasina's resignation, chanting slogans that literally translates as "People are free as the dictator has fallen".

Many of the protestors then left for the Gono Bhaban.

Thousands of people took to the streets at Motijheel, Paltan, Press Club, Malibgah, Mogbazar, Mirpur and other places.

members, he said, "Please cooperate with me. We will not be able to achieve anything through confrontation. So, please refrain from all kinds of destruction, anarchy and conflict. If Allah wills, together we will move towards a beautiful future."

The army chief was addressing the nation following a meeting with the leaders of some key political parties at the Army Headquarters in the afternoon.

"You should not take the path of confrontation anymore. Return to the path of peace and discipline."

He said the country has suffered a lot, the economy has been hit, and many people have been killed.

"We will ensure justice for all killings and injustice. Please keep faith in the army and the armed forces. I am taking all the responsibilities and vowing to protect the people's lives and properties. I am giving you a word, you will not be disappointed."

Waker-Uz-Zaman said all the demands will be met and peace and discipline will be restored. "Have patience. Give us some time. Together, we will be able to solve all the problems."

He said much damage has been done, properties have been damaged and people are dying. "Refrain from such activities and help me."

Regarding his discussion with the leaders of different political parties, the army chief said, "We had a nice discussion. We have decided that we will run the country after forming an interim government."

He said Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has resigned.

The army chief said Prof Asif Nazrul of Dhaka University has conveyed a message to the students. He hoped that the students will bring the situation under control after hearing his message.

Waker-Uz-Zaman said the army will continue working to maintain peace and discipline in the country.

Replying to a question, the army chief said if the situation improves, there would be no need for imposing curfew and an emergency rule.

"I have ordered the army and police not to open fire. I hope the situation will improve after my speech. We are moving towards a beautiful environment."

Top leaders from the BNP, Jatiya Party, Jamaat-e-Islami, Hefajat-e Islam, Gonosonghoti Andolon, Islami Andolon Bangladesh, and civil society leaders, including Prof Asif Nazrul, were present.

However, no Awami League leader attended the meeting.

senior joint general secretary of the Oikya Parishad, said they never thought they would see such attacks on their community.

"There are no areas or districts left where communal attacks have not taken place. We're continuously getting reports from different parts of the country about attacks on houses and business establishments ...

"They're crying, saying they are being beaten up, and their houses and businesses are being looted. What is our fault? Is it our fault that we are citizens of the country?"

Mentioning that the Hindus in the country are fearing more attacks, Monindra asked, "Where would we go if such attacks continue here? How can we console the members of the Hindu community?"

In Dinajpur town and other upazilas, at least 10 Hindu houses came under attack.

The attackers also tried to vandalise a temple at Railbazarhat in the town, but locals obstructed it.

Sources said the houses of late Koilash Chandra Roy of Barabandar area; Nitya Gopal of Barabandar; Bunu Biswas of Gunjabari area; and Roma Kanta Roy of Biral upazila, in Dinajpur came under attack.

In Khansama upazila, three Hindu homes were attacked, said Uttam Kumar Roy, general secretary of Bangladesh Hindu-Buddha Christian Oikya Parishad.

Goutam Mazumder, assistant organising secretary of the Oikya Parishad in Laxmipur, said over 200-300 attackers torched his two-storey building around 7:30pm.

In Khulna, the houses of the Oikya Parishad President, Biman Bihari Amit, and Jubo Oikya Parishad President Animesh Sarker Rintu were ransacked around 5:00pm, our district correspondent reports.

The homes of Shyamal Kumar Das and Swajan Kumar Das of Haisgati village under Rupsha Police Station were also attacked and looted.

N Korea deploys 250 missile launchers to southern border

AFP, Seoul

North Korea has deployed 250 ballistic missile launchers to its southern border, with leader Kim Jong Un describing the weapons as a "powerful treasured sword" to defend its sovereignty, state media said yesterday.

The olive green mobile launchers were displayed during a special "transferring" ceremony in the capital Pyongyang on Sunday, the official Korean Central News Agency reported.

The missile launchers were an "up-to-date tactical attack weapon", Kim was quoted as saying in a speech.

It was the first time North Korea had publicised the scale of an arms transfer to its border units, Han Kwon-hee of the Korea Association of Defence Industry Studies told AFP.

Each launcher was designed to hold four missiles, Han said, adding that Pyongyang's supply of arms to Moscow might have "interfered with the North's capacity to actually produce 1,000 missiles".

Tarique urges calm, calls for election at the soonest

STAR REPORT

BNP acting chairperson Tarique Rahman yesterday issued a statement from London, England, where he is currently residing.

He commended those involved in the quota reform protests and the general public for toppling the Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government that was in power till yesterday afternoon.

"Bangladesh has been freed from the grasp of evil forces. In the past 15 years of this fascist regime, many children lost their beloved fathers, many wives lost their husbands. Numerous mothers lost their children to killings and forced abductions. After many years, Bangladesh saw victory on August 5."

"Numerous people were arrested and thrown into jail on false and politically motivated charges brought by the Hasina administration. I demand their immediate release and cancellation of the cases against them. Along with this, I expect quick steps to ensure that students be allowed to return to classes and take exams normally," the statement added.

"After this, 125 million voters will be able to cast their votes in a free and fair election and establish a government with accountability."

"So, to take the revolution to the final point of Obaidul quickly rushed to the hospital to save his son, but it was too late. The on-duty doctor declared Amin dead on the spot.

"When the doctor said that my son had died, it seemed like the sky fell on my head. He was my only child. For whom shall I live now?" he said.

Foyez hailed from Char Ababil union under Raipur upazila of Laxmipur. He left his family after his parents, Ala Uddin Bepari and Safura Begum, did not approve of his marriage to Nahar.

"Foyez was a very hard-working, honest and cheerful person. On the afternoon of July 21, Foyez and his two coworkers were returning home after work through a lane adjacent to Chandni Hotel, when law enforcers were firing at agitating protesters. Two bullets hit Foyez in his head and neck, leaving him critically injured," said his employer Md Abul Kashem, a contractor.

"His coworkers and some locals rushed him to a nearby hospital. He was later shifted to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, where he succumbed to the injuries around 9:30pm," he also said.

"Foyez's body was taken to his village home of Laxmipur by his uncle and relatives, where he was buried at the family graveyard on July 22," Kashem added.

His wife Noor Nahar Begum said, "My in-laws did not accept our marriage, so initially I remained at my father's house in Tongi. We started living in Narayanganj for the last seven months after Foyez found a job in the Signboard area. Foyez used to earn a daily wage of Tk 700. "He was rushed to a nearby hospital and later referred to Dhaka Medical College Hospital, where he remained on life support until doctors declared him dead on July 20," he added.

Shahriar, who lived with his parents and sister in Dhaka's Kuril area, was appearing for HSC exams from Ishwarganj Ideal College in Mymensingh, his hometown.

His father informed The Daily Star that Shahriar had returned to Dhaka after attending five exams, as the educational institutions were closed and HSC exams were postponed amid the students' protests.

"On July 18, he went to his cousin's home in Mirpur. I was at our village home in Kumra Shashon, Iswarganj. On the day, I received a call in the evening and came to learn that he had been shot. I somehow managed to return to Dhaka facing numerous obstacles on the way, only to find my son in a coma, before he eventually left us," Matin said.

Shahriar's mother, Momtaz Begum, has been overwhelmed by grief since his death, while his 70-year-old grandmother has fallen ill. The family is currently living in their village home and it is uncertain when they would return to Dhaka.

Matin also said it was traumatic to recount the demise of his son every time a journalist would call him over the phone.

"They did not let my son grow up. His photos and videos are our only keepsakes now. I want justice, but I don't know who we will ask to deliver it," Matin added.

UK PM vows punishment to quell protests

REUTERS, London

British Prime Minister Keir Starmer said violent protesters who had targeted Muslim communities would swiftly face the "full force of the law" as he sought to quell days of anti-immigration rioting.

The stabbing to death of three young girls in the northwest English town of Southport last week has been seized on by anti-immigrant and anti-Muslim groups, with disinformation spread online and amplified by high-profile far-right figures to spark disorder in towns and cities.

"Whatever the apparent motivation, this is not protest, it is pure violence and we will not tolerate attacks on mosques or our Muslim communities," Starmer said yesterday after an emergency meeting with police and prison chiefs.

Israel returns more than 80 Palestinian bodies to Gaza

Keeps up military pressure in the enclave

REUTERS, Cairo

Israel returned the bodies of more than 80 Palestinians killed in its military offensive in the Gaza Strip, as Israeli airstrikes killed at least 18 more people yesterday, the Palestinian Ministry of Health said.

Yamen Abu Suleiman, the director of the Palestinian Civil Emergency Service in Khan Younis in southern Gaza, said it was unclear whether the bodies had been dug up from cemeteries by the army during the ground offensive, or whether they were "detainees who had been tortured and killed."

"The occupation provided us with no information about the names, or ages, or anything. This is a war crime, a crime against humanity," Abu Suleiman said.

The bodies will be screened and examined in an attempt to determine the causes of death and in an attempt to identify them. They will later be buried in a mass grave at a cemetery near Nasser Hospital in Khan Younis.

The 84 bodies arrived in more than 15 bags, each containing several bodies, Abu Suleiman added. There was no immediate comment from the Israeli military on the return of the bodies. In the past, Israel has said it returned bodies after checks they were not Israeli hostages.

In Jerusalem, the Israeli Hostages Families Forum asked why Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu would allow the handover of Palestinian bodies without a ceasefire deal with Hamas.

"Why are bodies being returned outside the framework of a comprehensive deal? Such an agreement could bring back living hostages for rehabilitation and the deceased for proper burial," they said in a statement.

In southeast Khan Younis, residents said Israeli aerial and tank shelling continued overnight, including in areas for which Israel had issued evacuation orders, saying Hamas members had been waging attacks from there.

An Israeli air strike killed eight Palestinians in a vehicle on the road near Khan Younis yesterday. The Israeli military said it had killed Abdel-Fattah Al-Zriei, whom it said was involved in the weapons manufacturing department in Hamas.

In India, Prime Minister Narendra Modi yesterday chaired a meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Security (CCS) that briefed him on the situation unfolding in Bangladesh, reports the Hindustan Times.

Home Minister Amit Shah, Defence Minister Rajnath Singh, External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar, Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman, Cabinet Secretary Rajiv Gauba, Principal Secretary to PM PK Mishra, Research and Analysis Wing chief Ravi Sinha and Intelligence Bureau Director Tapan Deka were present.

Jaishankar briefed Modi, and Rahul Gandhi, the leader of the opposition in the Lok Sabha, on the emerging situation in Bangladesh.

Quoting diplomatic sources, a PTI report said Hasina landed at the Hindon airbase near Delhi in a C-130J military transport aircraft of the Bangladesh Air Force and met National Security Adviser Ajit Doval.

Hasina, who plans to head to London to seek asylum, has been moved to a safe location but she was unlikely to leave India last night, the report said.

She is likely to meet her daughter Saima Wazed, who is based in Delhi. Saima is working as the World Health Organisation's regional director for South-East Asia.

REACTIONS FROM RUSSIA, UN, EU

The Russian foreign ministry yesterday said Moscow operates on the premise that changes in the Bangladesh government constitute an "internal affair" of that country.

"However, we look forward to the internal political processes in that friendly country returning to the constitutional norms as soon as possible," said the Russian embassy in Dhaka quoting its foreign ministry, reports UNB.

United Nations spokesman Farhan Haq yesterday said, "We continue to call for calm and restraint and to urge all parties to respect the right to peaceful assembly and expression."

The UN official urged the security forces to protect those out on the streets.

The European Union has called for an orderly and peaceful transition towards a democratically elected government in Bangladesh, in full respect of human rights and democratic principles.

In a statement after the resignation of Hasina, EU High Representative for Foreign Affairs Joseph Borrell yesterday called for calm and restraint.

He said the EU is closely monitoring the events unfolding in Bangladesh that witnessed over 300 deaths amid the anti-quota protests since early July.

"The EU is saddened by the tragic loss of life during the protests in recent days."

Borrell said the EU takes note of the assurances given by General Waker-Uz-Zaman that the situation will be handled in a peaceful manner, and that all unlawful killings will be impartially investigated.

"Accountability for human rights violations is crucial. Those who have been arbitrarily detained should be released immediately," he said.

UK Prime Minister Keir Starmer's spokesperson said they are deeply concerned by the recent violence in Bangladesh, which escalated in recent days, reports Reuters.

The very significant loss of life, including of students, children and law enforcement officers, is completely unacceptable, he said, adding that the right to peaceful protest must be protected and never subject to violence.

"We call on the authorities to release all peaceful protesters and ensure due process is followed for those charged and prosecuted."

fire to Jabir Hotel which is owned by Shahin Chakladar, general secretary of Jashore Awami League, Civil Surgeon Mahmudul Hasan said.

He said the bodies were identified and families had taken some of the bodies.

Harun-or-Rashid, an employee of Jashore General Hospital, said most of the victims were students.

Thousands of people were celebrating Hasina's departure across the town. At one point, some people set the hotel at Chittarmore on fire.

In Kushtia, at least eight people, including a child, were killed and over a hundred others were injured in clashes with police, reports UNB.

The incident occurred following an attack on the Kushtia Model Police Station and the Police Superintendent's Office. The police opened fire after being attacked, resulting in the casualties.

In Gazipur, six people were killed and 40 others injured as Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) and protesters clashed in the Mulaid area of Sreepur.

Four of the deceased were identified as Sifatullah, 22, Sikhur Ahmed, 20, Kawsar, 28, and Jewel Mridha, 30, said Obaidul Islam. Obaidul was the manager of Al Hera Hospital in Mauna Chowrasta.

In Habiganj, six people were killed in police firing in Baniachang upazila and 55 others were injured, said Shamima Akhter, upazila health and welfare officer.

Locals said students marched from LR High School to Habiganj Police Station. As police stopped the procession, a clash broke out and police opened fire, leaving three dead on the spot.

The angry mob then set fire to the police station.

In Chandpur, Selim Khan, chairman of Lakshmipur Union Parishad, and his son Shanto Khan, an actor, were beaten to death.

As the news of Hasina's resignation spread, Selim and his son fled his village and went to Farakkabad Bazar of Balia Union. When people tried to stop them, they managed to flee by opening fire.

When they reached the nearby Bagarabazar area, an angry mob caught and killed them.

Chandpur Sadar Police Station Officer-in-Charge Sheikh Mohsin Alam confirmed the matter.

Locals said Selim and his men used to run an illegal sand business in Char Hogla village under Shambhupura union of Narayanganj by encroaching upon a portion of the Meghna.

Two other victims in the district are Shahadat, 20, a student who was shot, and Harun-ar Rashid, a sub inspector of Kachua Police Station.

In Satkhira, at least four, including two AL leaders, were killed in clashes between demonstrators and AL men in Ashashuni.

The AL leaders are Zakir Hossain, former chairman of Pratapnagar Union Parishad and the president of Pratapnagar Union AL, and Jahangir Hossain, a local AL leader.

The two others, Adami Ali and Anas Billah, were shot dead as Zakir Hossain opened fire when a mob attacked his house.

In Jhenaidah, Porahati Union Parishad Chairman Hiron and his driver Asad were beaten to death. The bodies were hung from a sculpture at Paira Chattar, said Mir Abidur Rahman, an assistant superintendent of police of Jhenidah.

Besides, two others, Manzur Hossain and Rabbi Hossain, were burned to death as miscreants set fire to a house of local AL leader Jewel Hossain, said Abu Azif, officer-in-charge of Kaliganj Police Station.

At least three persons were killed in separate clashes in Chattogram.

A physician of the Chattogram Medical College Hospital (CMCH) emergency department said they died of gunshot wounds. The two deceased were identified as Jamal Uddin, 50, Nizam Uddin, 18.

"They were brought dead to hospital between 6:00pm and 11:00pm," confirmed Kamruzzaman, additional ward master of the CMCH. He could not immediately say the identities of other deceased and the location of the clash.

In Khulna, Koyra upazila chairman and upazila AL president GM Mohsin Reza, his driver Alamgir, and bodyguard Yakub were beaten to death around 4:00pm.

OC Mizanur Rahman of Koyra Police Station said the protesters set fire to Mohsin's house and they were beaten to death.

In Barishal, fire fighters recovered three burnt bodies from former mayor Serniabat Sadik Abdullah's residence on Kalibari road in the city yesterday evening.

Sadik Abdullah was not present at his home at that time.

The bodies were sent to a hospital, said Belal Uddin, assistant director of fire service.

Identities could not be known immediately.

In Patuakhali, a Jubo League activist named Monirul Islam Shaheen was beaten to death in the Baufal area.

One person was killed in a clash in Titas area of Brahmanbaria, civil surgeon office sources said.

Nahid urged all to ensure that no one gets the opportunity to provoke religious tensions in the country after the ouster of the Sheikh Hasina-led government.

"We, the protesters, have united against the fascist government. There is no grouping or division among us. We are against any kind of religious incitement, sabotage or division. We will prevent any such attempts."

Earlier, seven coordinators of the movement, including Nahid and Asif, through a private television channel, said nothing will be accepted beyond the proposed interim national government, adding that fascists and murderers will be tried and will not be given a chance to escape.

"No collaborators or supporters of fascists will be allowed in the national interim government," said Nahid.

He said they (the student leaders) want to bring change in the overall system of Bangladesh, in which fascism, authoritarianism or "another leader like Sheikh Hasina" can never emerge again.

Responding to a question, Asif Mahmud said they believed they had achieved victory the day the one-point demand was announced, adding that they will remain on the streets until all their demands are met.

About the demands, he said that on the first day the interim government takes office, all political leaders and activists imprisoned over the past 16 years must be released, and all political murders must get justice.

The coordinators said they want to ensure fair and impartial elections for a democratic government.

Another coordinator Sarjis Alam credited the success of the movement to the ordinary people of Bangladesh.

Nahid urged the students and people to ensure that no one takes advantage of the current situation to vandalise or loot state establishments.

Addressing the public, he said they must remain peacefully on the streets until the final announcement is made. "State assets belong to the people, and they must be protected. No one should be able to loot."

wounds. There were two exceptions; one person appeared to have been hacked, and another person presumably died from shotgun pellet injuries.

At least two of those killed were minors. One of them was identified as Shaon. The other could not be identified immediately.

In most cases, people who brought the bodies in told our correspondent that police shot them. Some said they brought in the bodies of onlookers who were shot.

Azmot Miah, a fish trader, had locked his store in Jatrabari and was inside during the clashes. A bullet hit him in the neck, said the people who brought him in.

Journalist Abdur Noor, 27, who worked for Ajker Goyenda Sangbad, was among those brought in dead from Jatrabari, his older brother Ziaul Haque said.

Bodies of people killed in Bangshal, North Badda, and Narayanganj's Kajla were also taken to DMCH.

The bodies were checked, booked, and carted away to the morgue and before the blood on the floor could be cleaned, another body would be brought in and placed on the same spot on the floor.

By the end of the day, the entire floor of the emergency ward was covered with red footprints.

Many relatives of those who lost their loved ones raged against the now-fallen government.

The DMCH was allowing families to take away the bodies without conducting an autopsy.

At the hospital, over 350 people received treatment.

Earlier in the day, a group of policemen went to the DMCH and fired at the emergency department at 12:47pm. Immediately afterwards, two bodies were taken to the emergency department.

Meanwhile, 21 people including a policeman were killed and over 100 injured in the capital's Uttara in the afternoon when men in plain clothes opened fire on protesters from Uttara East Police Station.

Thirteen bodies were taken to Uttara Crescent Hospital while eight others to Kuwait Bangladesh Friendship Govt Hospital, sources said.

The Daily Star correspondent on the spot saw partially charred body of policeman AH Rony being taken out of the station by a mob.

Our correspondent from the spot said hundreds of people surrounded the police station around 4:50pm, stormed it around 8:00pm, and then set it on fire.

Witnesses said a clash ensued after a mob threw brick chunks at an armoured personnel carrier (APC) near the police station around 4:45pm. Two men in plain clothes then opened fire on the mob.

They fired bullets, rubber bullets, and teargas indiscriminately, they said.

The group then set fire to the APC, our correspondent observed.

At one stage, several people broke the wall of the armoury at the police station and took away firearms and ammunition. Some were seen firing the looted firearms at the police station.

The policemen were firing from the roof of the three-storey building until 9:30pm.

A group of people also attacked the Badda Police Station around 3:00pm. Police responded with gunfire, teargas and stun grenades. An officer at the police station, requesting anonymity, said that the station was burnt to the ground.

Mobs also attacked and torched the Jatrabari, Mohammadpur, and Adabar police stations.

Around 4:00pm, mobs torched the Awami League headquarters on Bangabandhu Avenue, the district AL office in Tejgaon, and the political office of the Awami League president in Dhanmondi.

The Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi-32 was vandalised and set on fire around 4:00pm. Many were seen taking away valuables from the building.

Around 2:15pm, thousands of protesters were marching towards Shahbagh. As they passed TSC, some of them threw brick chunks at the police, leading to clashes. During that time, police fired rubber bullets and teargas at the protesters.

Mobs also vandalised and torched Ekattor TV, Channel 24, and ATN Bangla in the afternoon, around the same time Somoy TV was ransacked.

The attackers also took away equipment. Channel 24, ATN Bangla, ATN News went off the air.

Bangla daily Amader Natun Shomay office was attacked by a mob late last night. Saleh Biplob, executive editor of the paper, said their office was vandalised.

Thousands of people stormed the Dhanmondi home of former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan around 3:30pm yesterday and vandalised it.

In the afternoon, a mob also vandalised the residence of the Dhaka University vice chancellor.

The residence of the superintendent of police of Dhaka was also attacked. The attackers were seen looting valuables.

Fire service late last night said there were reports of at least 200 fire incidents in the capital yesterday.

Harris set to name VP pick ahead of swing state tour

AFP, Washington

Kamala Harris will name her running mate as she prepares for a tour of US battleground states aimed at turning excitement over her presidential bid into durable support that can power her to victory.

All paths to the White House run through a handful of swing states, and Harris will kick off her five-day run today in the largest -- Pennsylvania -- as she builds momentum for her showdown with Republican Donald Trump on November 5.

"At this moment, we face a choice between two visions for our nation: one focused on the future and the other on the past... This campaign is about people coming together, fueled by love of country, to fight for the best of who we are," she posted on X.

Fresh from winning enough delegate votes to secure the Democratic nomination, the country's first female, Black and South Asian vice president heads into the national convention in Chicago in two weeks in total control of her party.

over the last two weeks .... Over the years, Hasina turned herself into an autocrat. What we are witnessing here today is the ultimate consequence of that," said Sohel Jahangir Alam, a development worker, who went there from Nakhalpara with his daughter, a class VI student.

As tens of thousands of people occupied the neatly manicured lawns, some got down into the pools and to take a bath, while others were catching fish. They collected woods and other things and set those on fire, as the crowd grew thicker by the minute.

Many were seen taking anything and everything they could get hold of – chicken, duck, pigeon, cow, goat, live fish from the pond, jackfruit, coconut, TV, printer, monitor, air conditioner, fridge, chair, table, sofa, steel and wooden cabinets, fitness equipment, flower vase, doll, pillow, mattress, spoon, fork, plastic bucket, wall clock, fan, garments and even flower plants, with or without tubs.

One mother who came with her daughter simply uprooted some decorative plants as memorabilia.

"I want this plant to remind me and my children that I was a witness to Sheikh Hasina's fall," the mother said.

Tazrimin Mily, a software engineer, plucked some white flowers from the garden and adorned her bun (khopa) with them.

"This is a big victory. The government we had was not the government of the people. It was an unelected government; it had no accountability.... That government has fallen today. Maybe I will never be able to come here again. So I plucked the flowers and adorned my bun with them in joy," said Mily, who was accompanied by her husband.

Mahmudul Hasan is among those first to storm Gono Bhaban.

"When we entered through the main gate, some army personnel were standing there. They said 'you could enter the residence but do not vandalise anything,'" he told The Daily Star.

PROTESTERS STORM PMO, JS

Thousands of protesters carrying national flag also descended on the Prime Minister's Office around 3:00pm.

No personnel of the Armed Police Battalion, who are tasked with providing security of the office, were seen there. No police members were in sight either.

They were cheering, chanting slogans, and shouting as they described the PM's resignation as a victory.

The slogans include: "Ke Palaise? Sheikh Hasina" (who fled? Sheikh Hasina); Hoi Hoi Roi Roi, Sheikh Hasina geli koi, (Tell me, tell me, Sheikh Hasina, where have you gone?).

Many went inside the office and took away many valuables.

Around the same time, another group of agitators, hundreds of thousands of them, ran into the Jatiya Sangsad.

They broke through the barricade put on different roads leading to the parliament building and marched towards it. No police officials were seen at the time. Some army officials were there, but they did not prevent anyone from entering.

Within minutes, the staircase in front of parliament was filled with thousands of protesters.

Some entered through the main entrance while others climbed through the boundary fence. Many went inside the chamber hall of the House where lawmakers deliberate, and they sat on the seats and took photos.

They stood on the podium of the House and cheered.

In Kakrail, a group of people vandalised the official residence of Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan. They stormed the CJ's house around 4:45pm and took away many valuables, including cars and furniture, a source close to the chief justice told The Daily Star.

On accusations that the government had dealt with protesters in a heavy-handed manner, he denied it, saying: "You've had policemen beaten to death -- 13 just yesterday. So, what do you expect the police to do when mobs are beating people to death?"

Hundreds of people have died in the protests so far, with the vast majority protesters.

Trade thru Ctg port disrupted for second day

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Export and import activities through the Chattogram port were significantly disrupted for a second straight day yesterday due to the students' countrywide non-cooperation movement, which led to Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation.

Assessment activities of imported and exported goods continued as normal, but clearance of imported goods was slow, a customs and port official said.

In the last 24 hours to 9am yesterday, approximately 1,175 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of containers were cleared from the port, down from the daily average of around 7,000-8,000 TEUs.

The transport of cargo containers bound for the Kamalapur inland container depot was also halted due to the closure of railway wagons for a second straight day, according to the port officials.

All officials are working as usual, but only a few importers and agents came to release their goods, said Mohammad Fyzur Rahman, commissioner of Chattogram Custom House.

Garment factories not reopening today

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

The Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) yesterday decided not to reopen factories from today as their management wants to observe the situation further for the change in the political situation.

The BGMEA took the decision at an emergency meeting held at its office in Dhaka.

In a statement, the BGMEA said considering the current situation, the trade body instructed factory owners not to reopen their units until further notice.

Earlier on Sunday, the BGMEA in a statement instructed factory owners to announce the closure of their factories for an indefinite period because of the political crisis.

They announced the factory closure as the immediate past government announced general public holidays for three days following the student movement across the country.

In the first round of the crisis, the garment factory and textile millers announced closure of their units for four days. The exporters could not ship goods from the ports and could not continue production at the factories because of the violence.

A solitary truck exits the Chattogram port around 1:00pm yesterday. Although the gates are usually jam-packed around noon, very few vehicles dared to venture out given the tense atmosphere yesterday.

No time to spare in stabilising economy: experts

AHSAN HABIB

Bangladesh has no time to spare when it comes to ensuring the stability of the economy, which has fallen into a crisis mainly due to the absence of democracy for over a decade.

Following Sheikh Hasina's resignation as prime minister and the announcement that an interim government would be formed, economists yesterday said reforms should be taken immediately to address economic challenges.

The challenges include high inflation, falling foreign exchange reserves, the high burden of default loans, poor governance in the banking sector and, above all, corruption.

The government must also stem further destruction before taking steps to revive the economy.

It is unclear what type of government is going to be formed now, but there is no time to spare when it comes to reviving the economy, said Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office.

The economy was already in crisis and the recent political turmoil, which included internet blackouts and supply chain disruptions, only rubbed salt in its wounds.

So, the priority now should be the economy, he said.

To bring back normality, social equity and justice need to be ensured, which also aligns with the students' demands.

Internet connection and other communications should not be disrupted further while education should be resumed with full priority, Hussain said, adding that such measures would provide confidence to people and normalise economic activity.

Due to the turmoil over the recent weeks, which included the deaths of over 300 people including students, there was supply chain disruption.

Now, everything should be operational. The metro rail and elevated expressway in Dhaka as well as railways and all other connections should be operational as soon as possible, he said.

In order to rein in inflation, the supply chain disruption should be addressed and money should not be printed, the economist added.

Budgetary reforms are also necessary, according to Hussain. The interim government must examine areas where it can save as well as where it needs to increase expenditure.

As poor people are suffering, the government should take measures to increase support for them.

He also said all barriers in making the foreign exchange market transparent and market-based will have to be removed.

Eradication of corruption should be prioritised and all the regulatory bodies should be reformed, he added.

According to Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, if the political system is inadequate, the economy cannot perform well. So, he said, a participatory and democratic political system is necessary.

Democracy and accountability should be ensured as well.

He added that the country is facing several short-term challenges as well as structural problems.

Due to stubbornly high inflation, low-income individuals have been suffering.

Annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in 2023-24, which was the highest rate in the past 12 years. The inflation rate has remained above 9 percent since March of 2023, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics (BBS).

Alongside attempting to stabilise exchange rates, the interim government will also have to focus on reducing expenditure in order to tame inflation, Mansur said.

To solve structural problems in the financial sector, a committee of analysts must be tasked with unearthing problems in the banking sector and finding out exactly how big the hole is.

If a proper diagnosis is not conducted, the problem cannot be solved, he added.

Other areas like the stock market, bond market and insurance industry should also be analysed by a separate committee and restructured if necessary, he recommended.

The International Monetary Fund and World Bank can provide support in these areas if necessary.

He also said the existing revenue management system has been a silent killer, adding: "It is destroying the whole economy."

An economy cannot develop with a low tax-GDP ratio and Bangladesh has one of the lowest in the world.

In FY23, Bangladesh's tax-to-GDP ratio stood at 7.3 percent despite rising per capita income, according to the Ministry of Finance.

So, the whole system should be reformed to raise tax revenues, he said.

Along with financial support, empowering local government agencies is also necessary as it will help decentralise the economy and development, Mansur added.

Fahmida Khatun, executive director of the Centre for Policy Dialogue (CPD), said the economy needs huge reforms, adding that it had been weakened by a lack of political will.

Bangladesh has been following the wrong political system of non-democracy for more than a decade. When a political system is devoid of democracy, one group benefits and rent-seeking prevails.

So, the country's people suffer despite higher GDP growth because proper distribution is absent, she said.

RMG exporters expect new vigour in business

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Garment exporters are expecting a strong recovery in exports and business as normalcy is being gradually restored with the changing political scenario.

The business environment was facing an impasse because of the latest spells of violence and frequent shutdown of factories, for which they were unable to manufacture goods for export.

Exporters also said, though July, August and September comprise the peak season for shipping goods meant for Christmas and for booking work orders for the coming summer and spring seasons, they were facing challenges in sending goods to retailers through Chattogram port amid violence.

They were also unable to communicate with their business partners both at home and abroad because of the recent internet blackout across the country and for the violence.

The apparel manufacturers are now planning to reopen their production units and to restart with a new vigour as they have been facing shutdowns, difficulties in transportation and shipment of goods over more than one month because of the political crisis.

The Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) called a meeting yesterday at 7:30pm to discuss the next course of action as the prime minister resigned, said a director.

They decided that the garment factories and textile mills will stay shut for now considering the current situation. The owners may take a decision on factory reopening today.

They had earlier shut down their units two weeks ago for four days amidst violence and curfew. During the first round of shutdown, they could not even communicate with their international clothing retailers and brands because of an internet blackout across the country.

Because of the latest spell of student movement and political impasse, the BGMEA has already said they have lost Tk 6,400 crore while the textile millers said the amount of their loss is more than $58.8 million.

The garment and textile millers have shut down their production units across the country fearing labour unrest and vandalism, which will cause a massive loss for the sector.

Garment exporters have lost Tk 6,400 crore due to the recent unrest and shutdown of factories, said Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association.

During the first round of violence and curfew, the international clothing retailers and brands expressed concern over the situation as they were facing difficulties in placing work orders with factories and receiving shipments of goods from Chattogram port.

"We mainly discussed the issue of reopening the factories. However, we may take more time to reopen the factories considering the change in the political situation," said BGMEA Vice-President Arshad Jamal Dipu over the phone.

"We want to restart production in the factories very soon. But we need help from the administration for the smooth running of the units as their instructions are important for us," Dipu added.

Also, it recently became difficult to do business and international trade because this is the time to renew bond licences but many, especially the Chattogram-based exporters, are complaining that the customs department is not renewing the bond licences.

Many have been forced to adopt expensive air shipments because of delays in production and transportation of goods to the factories.

Also, many have been forced to provide discounts and accept cancellation of work orders from international retailers and brands because of the latest spells of violence and curfew.

Banks are charging a higher interest rate on loans, he said, adding that all these things are affecting business and all those issues need to be broadly discussed with the trade bodies and administration soon for resolving the issues.

"We have to work seriously now," Dipu also said.

"I hope everything will change now and business will soon be restored," said a garment exporter asking not to be named.

The work orders from international retailers and brands will also be restored soon as normalcy has also started to return, the exporter added.

"We are getting ready to reopen our factories as soon as possible," said a director of the BGMEA asking not to be named.

Supply chain disruption hits commodity traders and farmers

SUKANTA HALDER

The risk of violence amidst a political crisis that culminated in the resignation of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday disrupted supply chains of essential food commodities, hitting consumers, traders and farmers.

Traders said many vehicles with fresh vegetables such as spine gourds and pointed gourds could not reach Dhaka from different districts.

As a result, prices of essential food commodities have already increased at the wholesale and retail levels.

For example, the price of onion rose to Tk 120 per kilogramme (kg) yesterday from Tk 116 a week ago. The price of pointed gourd rose to Tk 80 per kg from Tk 60 earlier at different kitchen markets in Dhaka.

Mostafa Kamal, a wholesaler of Karwan Bazar, one of the largest kitchen markets in Dhaka, said three goods-laden trucks were supposed to come to Dhaka from Dinajpur and Ishwardi at midnight of Sunday.

The trucks, carrying goods worth Tk 6 lakh, got stuck in Bogura for violence on the roads. Of those goods, there were gourds, cauliflowers, pointed gourds and sponge gourds in the truck.

"If it does not enter Dhaka within a day, there is every possibility of the vegetable rotting. If that happens, it will be a big loss," he said early yesterday.

Tensions ran high amidst a curfew and a "March to Dhaka" programme called by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement over the recent killings of people.

Over 300 people were killed in just three weeks since July 16, making it the bloodiest period in the history of Bangladesh's civil movement.

The government on Sunday reimposed a curfew for an indefinite period from 6:00pm and announced a three-day general holiday starting yesterday, which brought transports to a standstill.

Mohammad Sohel, a wholesaler of Karwan Bazar, said two trucks with 30 tonnes of potatoes were supposed to come from Bogura and Rajshahi early yesterday. Only one could enter Dhaka while another was stuck in Sirajganj's Ullapara.

Salam Sheikh, an onion wholesaler of the same market, said a total of 20 sacks of onions were supposed to come from Pabna and Rajshahi. But they could not even decide on loading them onto a truck, he said.

Mohammad Jashim Uddin, a rice wholesaler of Mohammadpur Krishi Market in the capital, said amidst the current situation, no order for rice has not been placed over the last two days despite there being a lot of demand.

The price of rice per kg has increased by Tk 2 to Tk 3 on average since Sunday, he said.

Goods cannot be sent to other big cities of the country, including Dhaka, due to a lack of transport, said Rahidul Islam, a vegetable stockist and wholesaler in Bogura's Mahasthan Bazar, one of the main wholesale vegetable depots of the northern region.

However, the prices of almost all products there have come down. Farmers are facing huge losses, he said, adding that gourds are being sold at Tk 20 per kg, brinjal at Tk 5 to Tk 15 and green chilies at Tk 100.

High inflation, banking crisis are key hurdles for new govt: analysts

JAGARAN CHAKMA and MEHDI HASSAN

The interim government's immediate duty will be to address inflation and repair weak financial institutions as it seeks to rebuild the economy, according to experts.

They added that weak governance in financial institutions and the central bank's lack of autonomy have been seriously affecting the economy.

"The interim government's immediate task should be addressing inflation. The economy has been suffering from high inflationary pressure for years," said Fahmida Khatun, executive director at the Centre for Policy Dialogue.

Annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in 2023-24, the highest since 2011-12, when it was 10.62 percent, according to the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics.

She also said financial institutions had weakened immensely due to corruption and a lack of good governance.

The CPD executive director said the nation has witnessed a change and the need now is to rebuild the economy.

According to her, overcoming the destruction of public and private property is not the major challenge. Rather, repairing the country's image is the major challenge.

Sumon Chowdhury, secretary general of the Bangladesh Steel Manufacturing Association (BSMA), said the interim government needs time to ensure discipline in business.

Although it is unclear what steps the interim government will take, any decision should be made after consulting with all stakeholders, he added.

Chowdhury said businessmen faced huge financial and non-financial losses during the movement, adding that they had already been suffering for a long time due to a gas crisis.

In such circumstances, the interim government should provide incentives or other benefits, he said.

He also condemned attacks by miscreants on businesses, which particularly targeted establishments owned by pro-Awami League (AL) businessmen.

"It is true that pro-AL businessmen got plenty of benefits. But practically all businessmen became pro-AL as the party has ruled the country for the past 15 years."

Zaved Akthar, president of the Foreign Investors' Chamber of Commerce and Industry (FICCI), refused to comment in advance.

But he said that the nation sustained a lot of damage, both literally and metaphorically.

"We have to rebuild our nation," he said.

Syed Mahbubur Rahman, a former chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh, said: "Whoever comes to power, we are looking for good governance in the banking sector."

Rahman, also managing director of Mutual Trust Bank, told The Daily Star that companies and banks owned by people close to former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina will have to tread carefully.

He also fears bad loans will rise further as companies owned by political leaders may face trouble.

The economy of Bangladesh has been suffering from high inflationary pressure for years, as annual inflation rose to 9.73 percent in 2023-24, the highest since 2011-12.

Banks see lower offshore lending amid forex crisis

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Lending from offshore units of banks in Bangladesh has declined amid the ongoing foreign exchange crisis, leaving the segment in a fragile situation.

By the end of March this year, the total disbursed loans of offshore banking units (OBU) stood at about Tk 72,437 crore, down 7.68 percent year-on-year, as per the latest central bank data.

OBUs were a lucrative business for banks when the forex flow was good. But now their operations have practically come to a standstill as foreign funds are unavailable, industry people said.

Bangladesh has been facing a foreign exchange crisis for more than two years now, which adversely impacted their OBUs, as per industry insiders.

The country's forex reserves have by fallen more than $24 billion since August 2021 following the Covid-19 pandemic.

The forex reserves stood at $21.78 billion (BPM6) on June 30 this year, as per the latest central bank data.

Besides, Bangladesh Bank found proof that some banks laundered money through their OBUs, prompting the banking regulator to strengthen monitoring of the segment.

An OBU is a specialised unit within a licensed bank that offers financial services, such as loans, in foreign currencies to non-resident customers.

Generally, the unit borrows from foreign banks as well as the central bank to lend funds to various organisations for import payments, export bill discounting, refinance, and mid and long-term loans.

Loans from OBUs started to fall after the central bank instructed banks not to take funds from their domestic unit to finance OBUs, said Mati Ul Hasan, additional managing director of Mercantile Bank.

In January, the Bangladesh Bank barred banks from transferring foreign currency to their OBUs to tackle local forex shortages and reduce the dependency of units abroad on those back home.

Mati Ul Hasan said most banks used to take funds from domestic units to OBUs but they have had to adjust as per the central bank's instruction.

"That is why lending from OBUs has declined," he added.

From 2020, banks were allowed to transfer up to a maximum of 30 percent of their regulatory capital in foreign currency from domestic units to OBUs.

There was no prior limit on transferring or mobilising funds for OBUs.

OFFSHORE BANKING: KEY POINTS
(As of March 2024)

- Loans stood at Tk 72,437.17cr
- Loans at state banks were Tk 676.64cr
- Private commercial banks' loans were Tk 57,983.72cr
- Defaulted loans stood at Tk 1,876.91cr
- Offshore banking was allowed in the country in 1985
- Govt introduced Offshore Banking Act 2024 in May

A senior Bangladesh Bank official said they observed that many banks were excessively transferring foreign currency to OBUs, creating an imbalance in the demand and supply of foreign currency in the local market.

Till March this year, loan disbursement from offshore units of state-run banks fell by Tk 802 crore to Tk 677 crore. Meanwhile, loan disbursement from OBUs of private commercial banks fell by Tk 2,482 crore to Tk 57,984 crore.

Likewise, loans from the OBUs of foreign banks fell by Tk 2743 crore to Tk 13,776 crore.

Amid the forex shortage, foreign lenders are very cautious about providing funds to local banks, which is another reason lending through OBUs declined, said Shaheen Iqbal, deputy managing director and head of treasury at BRAC Bank.

However, Iqbal said lending through BRAC Bank's OBUs has increased.

DEFAULTED LOANS OF OBUs

Defaulted loans at OBUs stood at about Tk 1,877 crore at the end of March this year, up from Tk roughly 1,402 crore in the same period of 2023, central bank data showed.

Bad loans at the OBUs of private commercial banks stood at Tk 1,198 crore while bad loans at foreign banks stood at around Tk 679 crore till March this year.

Life cannot go on like this "Brother, please take at least four bananas. If not, my family will have to go without food. They are already starving," said Shukkur Ali while pleading with this reporter to make a purchase.

Ali, a roaming vendor who sells fruits in Dhaka's Farmgate, said that he has had next to no sales for the past several weeks due to the unrest and curfew.

"Risking my life, the amount I could sell and profit I made would not cover my own expenses. So, how can I bear the expenses of my six-member family in such a situation?" he asked.

Ali, who hails from Rajbari, said he has been selling bananas in the Farmgate area for the past 10 years.

By selling bananas, he has been bearing the expenses of his son, who is studying at Government Rajendra College in Faridpur, and daughter, who studies at a school near his village in Bahadurpur of Pangsha upazila.

"I have no savings. The money I had has already been spent on family expenses. At present, I am unable to afford the living expenses of my family. Life cannot go on like this," Ali said.

While pointing out that his son passed SSC with a golden GPA-5 while his daughter is also an outstanding student, Ali said people think the two could enjoy great success in the future.

"I don't want my son's future to be like mine. That's why I am doing my best to pay for their education," he added.

Ali, the lone breadwinner for this family, said he spends at least Tk 10,000 every month on his son's education apart from the regular expenditures of his family who live in his village home.

"But right now, I am very helpless. Owing to the adverse situation, the condition of my business is horrible. In the last few weeks, I made sales of a maximum of Tk 400 per day," he added.

On a normal day, Ali can sell bananas worth about Tk 8,000.

When this reporter was talking to Ali, a vegetable vendor named Badal Mia also approached, requesting to write about his hard times during the widespread violence.

Mia shared a similar story about his hardships as the sales of his business significantly reduced owing to recent unrest centring the students' movement.

This reporter also spoke with other hawkers and street vendors, who all claimed that they are suffering huge losses due to clashes between law enforcement agencies and demonstrating students.

This is hampering economic activities and affecting peoples' daily lives, they said.

The clashes have left several hundred dead and thousands injured since it began on July 15-16 for the quota reform movement declared by the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement.

A vegetable vendor named Badal Mia was waiting for customers on a deserted sidewalk between Khamarbari intersection and Farmgate yesterday noon. Hardships of street vendors like him deepened in recent days as sales dropped significantly amid the unrest and curfew.

A new dawn rises on Bangladesh

After Hasina's fall, we must strive to build a pro-people, inclusive society

This is a day that will be remembered for generations to come. A day when a 15-year-long authoritarian rule has finally come to an end. A day when people truly rose to power, putting aside their differences and uniting in their desire for freedom and a better tomorrow. It will not be an exaggeration to say that the extraordinary showing of the student-mass movement that has led to the downfall of Sheikh Hasina—who came to power for a fourth consecutive term only this January—will henceforth be the new reference point in our history of mass uprisings.

The anticipation was building up even before the day began, with the planned "March to Dhaka" preponed by a day because of the urgency created by the events of the previous day. In what many called the second wave of violence, about a hundred people perished that day as ruling party activists and police clashed with anti-government protesters. During the first wave on July 18-21, over 200 people had died. So desperate protesters, seeing their demand for justice frequently trivialised, wanted an end to all the farce and violence with a final push. And at 3PM on Monday, with crowds from across the country heading to Dhaka to siege Gono Bhaban, disregarding a curfew, the army chief announced the resignation of Sheikh Hasina. An interim government will likely be formed soon to run the country.

In the coming days, we will know more about the interim government which we hope will swiftly deliver on the promises of justice for each of the killings and a peaceful democratic transition. But right now, let's recognise this moment in our history. Perhaps nothing describes the events of the past few weeks better than what the Russian revolutionary Vladimir Ilyich Lenin once said: that there are decades where nothing happens, and then there are weeks where decades happen. We have seen such eventful weeks in 1952, in 1969, and in 1990. But none of those uprisings claimed so many lives. None of them were against a democratically elected government, however questionable those elections were. This makes it all the more crucial that we remember the background in which this latest uprising was set, and ensure that our future actions align with it, otherwise the huge sacrifices that went into making it successful will have been for nothing.

The first goal of this movement was establishing justice for those who perished during protests marked by brutal crackdowns by security forces, aided by ruling party cadres. But then, because of the constant refusal of the government to recognise the gravity of the tragedy and conduct fair investigations, it transformed into a bigger fight against the very seat of power that favours the interests of a few over that of the vast majority of the people. It is this fight that has galvanised the whole nation, bringing together foes and friends alike. On Monday, people claimed their first victory in this fight. But the destination is far ahead. So, the fight must be on.

The extraordinary scenes that unfolded after the fall of the Awami League government underscored both long-awaited joy and long-suppressed anger. Soon after the announcement, millions of people poured into the streets all over the country. Despite the lingering grief over the loss of over 300 lives during the brutal crackdowns, the atmosphere was electric and filled with hope and possibility. Families with children, elders, students—everyone was out on the streets. It was a kaleidoscope of colours and sounds. Marching down the streets, many were waving flags or chanting slogans, their voices rising in unison, a powerful testament to their shared struggle and newfound liberty.

These upbeat scenes on streets, however, starkly contrasted the scenes of devastation in other places. It was painful to see a repeat of the vandalism that once stained the movement so soon after its victory. Some observers called it a total anarchy, as mobs went about destroying and pillaging houses of ruling party leaders, ruling party offices, public buildings and properties, and key symbols of power including Gono Bhaban, Prime Minister's Office, police stations, etc. Even the parliament and the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum at Dhanmondi 32 came under attack. Equally alarmingly, many houses, businesses and places of worship of minority communities were destroyed. A number of lives were also lost. The breakdown of law in the aftermath of the government's fall is a reminder of how important it is to ensure calm and peace so that we don't end up ruining this special moment in our history.

As we enter a new era, we must do so with optimism but also caution. While it is vital to stay watchful so that no untoward incident like what happened yesterday happens again, we also must start thinking about the kind of future we want. To truly honour the sacrifices of our fallen heroes, we must strive to build a future where democratic and egalitarian values trump narrow political interests. The time to rebuild our nation is now.

The cheapening of life, the cracks in the system, and the fall of Hasina

We have reached a point of no return. The era of Sheikh Hasina has come to an end, although we do not yet know exactly what comes after. While many are celebrating, now more than ever it is necessary to take stock. How did we get here, and what do we do so that we never get here again? The quota reform movement and its aftermath have served as a prism, casting light on the tremendous inequalities that have been produced in Bangladesh over the past decade. From the beginning, this regime staked its existence on the power of accumulation and patronage—opening Bangladesh up for business to all in exchange for loyalty. In the process, this once proud party became a violent, extractive club that anyone could join by saying the right words. State, government, and party have become one, through a process that Gramsci called "passive revolution": an elite, state-led effort to catalyse economic development while absorbing competition and neutralising enemies (that is why this is different from fascism).

That is what "being like Singapore" really means. This development has been real, despite what many like to claim. Bangladesh has transformed beyond recognition, a transformation concretised in the new national monuments (like the Padma Bridge). Enormous fortunes have been made, making this once "basket case" the home of countless millionaires. Certainly, some of that wealth has "trickled down." But our exports bring in billions because we can squeeze down wages by any means. We have rented out vast swathes of the land as EZs and EPZs, where the "normal" rules don't apply. Scandal after scandal have revealed the fortunes made using connections, or by directly using the state apparatus, funneling their wealth to tax havens, businesses in Dubai, or homes in Canada. We boast of remittance income, while the people who make and send that money—often in terrible conditions—receive nothing but neglect. These are not accidents; accumulation needs disposability. Wealth grows at the cost of someone else's life.

Those who could find patrons, who could "buy in" their fealty, could claim a share of the pie, which is precisely what the 30 percent freedom fighter quota came to represent: a loyalty card. The quota reform movement was reborn when the frustrations of primarily middle-class students—facing jobless growth and a lifetime of precarity—combined with increasing resentment at blatant corruption, state violence, and clear disdain for the public. The official reaction to the carnage on July 19—the obsession with vandalism and indifference to the human cost of repression—only reinforced the sense that this was a government for itself. After that point, nobody was really interested in talk about "third parties," real or otherwise. Why was it that the first to join the students on the streets were those who will neither pay tax nor ride on expressways? Why did Dhaka's rickshaw-pullers bring out solidarity processions? Just as these students recognised their dispensability—which is what turned government jobs into lifelines worth fighting for—they found natural allies in those the nation leaves behind, who have no other means of laying claims on the state. As the crackdown unfolded, however, many of us who do pay taxes and ride the metro remembered that we are punished with higher tax rates than money launderers, that our wallets are worth less and less while some build resorts, and that our students, our children, are being killed. Strange bedfellows have been brought together out of this sense of disposability. This regime has made some lives far too valuable, while making others so cheap that they have nothing more to lose.

This regime believed that as long as they could keep the money flowing and enroll enough investors into their gamble, they could ignore the land and river-grabbing, the broken roads, the waterlogging, the unemployment, the inflation, the energy crisis, the money-laundering and corruption, and the brewing resentment; the last could be dispelled by the might of the ever-ready foot soldiers and police, seemingly given a limitless "right to violence." Perhaps they truly believed that they had a permanent, historical mandate to rule. But the true fragility of this project has now been laid bare. This movement has many troubling dimensions, and we have written about some of them. But what it has done is provide a conduit, through which students and others have learned to transform their frustrations into structural questions to put to the state, questions that it has failed to answer with a consistency that almost begs belief. The scale of death and destruction—and the license to kill—defies anything that our predecessors faced in the 50s and 60s, or during the anti-Ershad movement. They have crossed the "red line," making any more talk of negotiations suspect.

VISUAL: DEBASHISH CHAKRABARTY

There is much to learn from these repeated comparisons to the past. In the 1960s, a group of Bengali economists put forth the famous "two economies" thesis, an articulation of internal colonialism based on extractive development: channeling the resources of the East to furnish the development of the West, leaving some scraps for the "peripheral" elite and keeping the rest in line by force. The struggle for Bangladesh was born when those scraps were no longer enough, when middle-class frustrations aligned with the dispossessed. But what happens when the "two economies" are not separated by geography and language? When we cannot distinguish "the enemy" from ourselves?

We have been trapped in this cycle of "peacetime war" ever since the end of the war itself, toppling regime after regime with little to show for it. Our state has remained a colonial apparatus, designed for extraction and middleman-rule. Since the transition to democracy, each regime has busied itself with enrichment, patronage, and (mutual) annihilation. The institutions we built have either fallen to partisanship or have had to insulate themselves for survival. The absence of any civil society interventions in the quota reform debate while there was still time is no less a failure than the state's. For years, we academics have made no real attempt to address the misalignment between graduation and employment rates. The media's role in engineering the "rajakar" fiasco should not be forgotten either, nor the unwillingness of so many university administrations to protect their students. We all have much to answer for.

It really did not have to come to this. Elite club politics, the counsel of sycophants, and the passion for vengeance have squandered all of the potential the last 15 years had held. The 2008 elections had carried many hopes: a thriving economy and a mature political system amongst them. If only we had learned to respect human life and make the state-civil society-people triad function. Instead of fulfilling her father's dreams, Sheikh Hasina has repeated his mistakes, and has walked straight into the same trap. And while this is a new horizon in many ways (especially for this generation), we have also been here too many times before. No hero, technocrat, or general will deliver us, nor will the death of party politics. Either we finally build a people's republic—which requires a lot more than elections—or we condemn ourselves to repeat this "legacy of blood" until there is nothing left to fight over.

People in Bangladesh went to sleep on Sunday night, August 4, shaken by the horror of the death of around 100 people throughout the day. The days leading up to it were no less horrific. What started as an anti-discrimination movement became a nine-point movement for government accountability and eventually morphed into a one-point demand for the government's resignation. The death of hundreds in the span of just under three weeks over these reasonable demands had kept the nation suspended in dread.

The morning of August 5 was no different. The Anti-Discrimination Student Movement had called for a "Long March to Dhaka" the day before. As people were expected to pour into Dhaka from across the country, first the prospect, and then the news of more needless deaths consolidated the dread we had carried over from the month of July into August.

But then the tide turned.

The first sign of the shifting winds came with the Chief of Army Staff's announcement to make a rare address to the nation at 2:00pm. In different parts of Dhaka, news of clashes between protesters and law enforcement turned into news of law enforcement standing aside as people flooded the streets.

We dared to join the tide as well. From inside Bashundhara R/A, where people famously keep to themselves, processions of 20, 40, or even more came out of each block. The chants of Palaise re palaise, Hasina palaise (Fled, fled! Hasina has fled!) rang out through the usually quaint streets, all the way to the raucous intersection in front of Jamuna Future Park at Nadda. Groups gathered in circles, dancing, clapping, and chanting. Their faces betrayed unbound happiness, relief, and the outpouring of anger and dissent that had been repressed for years. To us, it seemed that many were at a loss as to what they wanted to say. Most of them could only muster one immensely strong word: "Bhua."

The expressions of happiness, although simple, felt raw. People randomly handed out food and water for free, to our surprise—surprise because we don't remember in our collective memory what these little acts of kindness and camaraderie in this country looked like. Rickshaw-pullers and CNG auto-rickshaw drivers joined in the celebrations. The first rickshaw-puller we asked to take us towards Dhaka South apologetically refused, saying he wanted to go the opposite direction and celebrate with the crowd, understandably so. The rest of the way, no rickshaw-puller or CNG auto-rickshaw driver refused to go the mile towards any direction, nor did they try to negotiate the fare. One of them said, "Joto khushi den bhara" (Pay however much you want to).

In Gulshan, we saw people chant slogans from inside their Land Rovers. On foot, people were louder. On the streets, there were children dressed in red in the arms of their parents, there were elderly citizens with energy beyond their years, and there were groups of young people whose beaming faces reflected their sense of achievement. We could see it on their faces—the unfettered show of joy and the proud show of freedom in their gait. The collective sigh in the air was almost audible.

It was not all rosy. As expected, a deluge of people angry at law enforcement after weeks of face offs, when left to their devices on the streets, lashed out at any symbol of perceived government power. Police boxes, political offices of the Awami League, and a number of unidentifiable streetside structures were set on fire in Tejgaon Industrial Area. Smoke hung thick in the air and it was hard to breathe, and while people everywhere were armed with sticks and pieces of wood, in some areas, the weapons were of a more sinister nature. In Karwan Bazar, buses in front of government offices lay burnt and broken. On Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue, which served as the main artery for people moving from Shahbagh towards Ganabhaban, the crowd hurled brickbats towards the building that houses the office of ATN News, disregarding the safety of parts of the same crowd who were walking on the road right under it.

By 4:30pm, some were using the same road to return after having played their part in the breach of the Ganabhaban and the Prime Minister's Office in Bijoy Sarani. People displayed their loot, which included everything from expensive looking china to useless looking sofa cushions. The expressions on their faces, that would have otherwise looked brave, seemed unnerving. In the same procession where a police car was being flattened by a score of angry citizens, a hundred yards behind, a boy plucked a yellow flower from a roadside garden inside a building for the girl who was with him, making vivid the fact that it is a day for the chaotic expression of emotions—both good and bad.

Bangladesh has gone through a day of historical proportions, and the people on the streets seem to know this. While the struggles, sacrifices, and sentiments that led to this moment make us hopeful that history will look favourably upon August 5, 2024, the people of Bangladesh need to learn how to pull together and build the country back up for that to happen.

The collective spirit must not be lost

Dr Mohammad Tanzimuddin Khan is professor at the Department of International Relations in Dhaka University.

MOHAMMAD TANZIMUDDIN AHMED

Beginning with Abu Sayed, a great amount of sacrifice was made to reach this point. Our students and children were martyred, while many more were injured after being attacked by tear gas and rubber bullets. Many were arrested, some of whom were minors. Though this is a kind of victory, we are still mourning the lives lost. Even today, we lost people. We will always remember and respect the people in the protests of bloody July.

Occasions such as this has repeatedly arisen in Bangladesh's history, whether 1971 or 1990. In truth, we missed the opportunity each time. The expectations people had from different political parties in the past were dashed many times, and our politicians have only acted in their own interests without keeping in mind the best interests of the people.

The most significant factor of this protest has been that this has not been carried out under the banner of a specific political party; its success lies in the participation of all people. Those who failed to understand history, and weaponised the spirit of the Liberation War to create an environment of corruption and suffering—we have been able to bid them farewell. If we consider the atrocities over the past 15 years, we want justice for all of these actions. Those who used anything and everything, from shotguns to assault rifles and sniper rifles, to take lives during the movement in July, must be brought to book, as per national and international laws. In addition, people's sufferings must be addressed, particularly the increase of the prices of essentials and the burden of taxes being placed on the people.

In the past, we have faced disappointment; we don't want to return to a state where politicians work for their own benefit. We want to build a better nation in the memory of the martyrs of 1971, the martyrs of July and August 2024. We want an inclusive governance system where all people are recognised as equal citizens of Bangladesh, regardless of their gender, religion or any other factor. We want to see this initiative from the state and we want it to be institutionalised. Let Bangladesh begin anew, and let this new Bangladesh reflect the dreams of all those who lost their lives.

Much work remains to be done, however. We must determine a list of all those who passed away, provide treatment to the injured, and ensure safer means of livelihood for families that are in great distress due to this situation. These matters must be resolved at the earliest.

To reiterate, the success we have attained now cannot be attributed to any party, it belongs to the students, particularly the six coordinators along with various others who organised this at great risks to their lives.

We know that military rule never bodes well for any nation. Hence, the creation of an inclusive government is vital. This national solidarity that has arisen must be utilised to create a healthy and peaceful Bangladesh—different from what we have seen in the last 53 years. We must remain united and integrated, and we cannot let the collective spirit and unity that has emerged from this movement dissipate in any manner. We cannot fall into the trap of a cult of personality again. We are all the same, we are all equal and we are all Bangladeshi people, regardless of how we identify or what class or segment of the population we belong to. The nation must be able to retain this collective identity.

How will the interim government shape up?

Mujahidul Islam Selim
is former president of the Communist Party of Bangladesh (CPB).

MUJAHIDUL ISLAM SELIM

It is too early to react to the speech by the army chief because he has said we will get more information on the interim government after he discusses it with the president. But one thing to note here is that he mentioned the name of a banned political party—Jamaat-e-Islami—when he said a discussion had been held with the main political parties of the country. Also, he said that he had discussed the current situation with all the big political parties of the country, which is not true.For instance, the Communist Party of Bangladesh (CPB) was not contacted.

Moreover, they did not contact the coordinators of the protesting students' platform (the Students' Movement against Discrimination). He said Prof Asif Nazrul had taken the responsibility of informing the students. These are vague comments. He said things would be clear tomorrow. As long as the demands of the quota reform movement are not fully implemented, the protesters should remain alert.

The enthusiasm seen during the current movement is unprecedented. Such enthusiasm was not even present during the 1969 Mass Uprising, which was led by an organised leadership. Although the quota reform movement does not have the same format, I have not seen any mistakes made by its leadership so far. Rather, the movement gained more public support and there does not seem to be any loss of momentum. We are witnessing the determination of very ordinary students ready to sacrifice their lives to establish their rights.

The Awami League government lost public support. To stay in power, they applied brutal force. We heard the party's general secretary's comment about Chhatra League and saw how armed ruling party goons attacked the protesters. That made the protesters angrier. Then the (former) prime minister added salt to the injury with her comments. Then six to seven people died in state-sponsored violence. Even that did not frighten the protesters. Then the indiscriminate firing started. That too could not quell the protest, rather the number of students doubled. On August 4, around 100 people died. We have not seen so many deaths of unarmed people during any movement in post-liberation Bangladesh.

The government should have called a cabinet meeting and announced their resignation. Several weeks ago, the prime minister said she would hand the responsibility of trying the perpetrators of the violence to the citizens. If the citizens do take the responsibility for justice, it can only be delivered through the verdict of an election. It was not difficult for the government to do this. This happened before, after the fall of Ershad's regime. He said he would transfer power, but there was no clear-cut process to do that. We offered to create it, and I had drafted the design of that process. So, it could have been done again this time.

VOICES FROM SHAHBAGH

We can't celebrate yet. Not until there is justice for our brothers who have been killed. Sheikh Hasina's resignation was, of course, a must. But for all the deaths that happened, there must be thorough investigations into the role of the administration, party activists, Chhatra League and others. Once that has been achieved, then we can finally celebrate.

We do not know who will come to power next, but the army is likely to take over in the immediate future. We hope whoever it is, they will take prompt and proper actions to deliver justice for the killings. Those who have been unjustly detained must be unconditionally released.

I don't think there is any country in the world where the government has tried to stay in power by raising its hand on its own students so many times like this. Students are a nation's assets. Students have a special place in peoples' hearts. This regime didn't just kill one or two students. According to newspaper reports, it killed more than 300—even though we believe the number is higher. Many ordinary citizens have also been killed. It is because this regime killed so many students that people have come out flooding the streets to lend their support. If you look around, you will see thousands and thousands of ordinary people around you—there are no political parties here. Why is that? They are here to support those who have been killed, the students, who are our brothers and sisters.

No government in the world, I believe, can stay in power by killing its own students. And we have proved that here in Bangladesh.

A university student

The prime minister had no other alternative but to resign. After creating the situation that she and her party did, how could she speak of finding a compromise? Everything had gone out of control by the time she was willing to listen to the students. So, resigning was the best decision for her.

All these people have gathered together for independence. A government that shoots at its own people is not wanted by anyone.

A BRAC university student

We are very happy right now for achieving this independence. We achieved this victory in return for our blood. Now, we want to celebrate it fully and with everyone.

Now, we need to ensure that the perpetrators of the killings are held to account, alongside those who gave the orders. Even if they manage to flee the country, they should be brought back and tried properly, so that no one ever dares to commit such crimes again.

A university student

We want thorough investigations into all the killings. Even if any of them were committed by the army, it has to investigate them also. My point is, no one who fired at students and ordinary people should be spared. As a student of Dhaka University, what some law enforcers did in our university over the past weeks is unacceptable. What the vice-chancellor and other responsible persons did must be looked into as well.

Even today, when we went to the campus, people fired at us. Who were involved in these shootings? Do we not deserve to know as students of that university, who were shooting at us in our own campus? Whoever comes to power next, they should know by now the power of Bangladesh's students and its people. So, if they do not investigate these incidents, we will once again unite.

A Dhaka University student

The students' initial one-point demand of quota reform turned into a one-point demand for Sheikh Hasina's resignation. It turned into a movement to bring back democracy. How could she get away with carrying out mass murders so she could stay in Gono Bhaban? I held back my child from joining the protests before, but not today. We've been here since the morning and we won't leave till she resigns. We've seen a lot of bloodshed; we will not accept any more of it.

Nipa

I am here observing the mob. I am really happy. The students have achieved a lot, they have done the hard work of bringing us here. We love our country and we want to save it. The students should work towards establishing peace in the country where no one is suppressed.

Syed Afzalul Karim

Whatever happens, it has to be done through a peaceful, amicable way and we do not want any military intervention in this whole process. The transition has to be done with the leadership of the students, and with constructive consultation with political parties, civil society, and other actors in the movement.

Transitioning to remote work amidst an ongoing crisis

Transitioning to remote work during a crisis can be challenging, but with the right strategies and mindset, it can also be an opportunity for growth and increased flexibility.

As the national landscape continues to be mired with unforeseen crises and unpredictable lockdowns, many workplaces have found themselves transitioning to remote work. This shift, while providing flexibility and safety, can also bring about challenges in productivity, communication, and maintaining work-life balance for employees. If you are having difficulties transitioning back to remote work, here is a brief guide to help you navigate this change as smoothly as possible.

Setting up the workplace

Before jumping into your remote work, make sure you have a dedicated space in your home to actually work from. Choose a quiet and comfortable area that can serve as the workspace. Ensure the space is ergonomically set up so you don't face physical strain when sitting for a long time. Since you will be working on your laptop or home desktop, make sure you have a good chair, desk, and proper lighting so there are no sudden difficulties during work.

Since you will need uninterrupted internet during your work to stay connected with coworkers, choose a place where your home router's WiFi signals are the strongest - which is usually close to the router itself. Aside from your computer, make sure you have other essential tools or software required for your job. If you haven't used collaborative apps in a while, take some to refamiliarise yourself with Zoom, Slack, Discord, Microsoft Teams, etc.

Maintaining a routine

One of the main problems employees face when suddenly transitioning from on-site work to remote work is inconsistency in their work schedule. Chances are, you will have different work hours when working from home - as there are different requirements and break hours needed. However, to keep your work going at a steady rate, stick to a consistent schedule, preferably one you have made for yourself.

Begin and end your workday at the same time each day. Take regular breaks in between work to avoid burnout. The Pomodoro technique can be effective here. Basically, after deciding on a specific task to be completed first, set a timer for 25 minutes and work on that task only. Once the timer ends, take a break for 5 to 10 minutes. After which, set a timer for 25 minutes again until you either complete the task or finish these 'pomodoro' loops at least four times - which would equate to at least two hours of productive work-break balance.

Stay connected, even remotely

Working from home means that you won't be physically present in front of your colleagues, which might hamper in-person communication, especially for teams during group assignments. As such, even when working remotely, make sure you are sufficiently connected with your coworkers through messaging or communication apps. If you are a team supervisor, constantly check in with your team to see how they are doing, including asking for regular progress updates and asking how they are doing mentally and physically. A small gesture of goodwill can go a long way in driving employee motivation during trying times.

A key method of staying connected during remote work is hosting regular video meetings or group audio calls. This will help maintain a sense of connection and collaboration; similar to how it would be in a physical workplace. If you're in charge of workplace communications, be clear and precise, and give specific instructions, so that no misunderstandings may occur among coworkers.

Maintain boundaries

Whether you are working from home or somewhere else, committing to remote work means that as an employee, you are still respecting your company's time and your contribution to the workplace. As such, clearly communicate your working hours to your household members, and be sure to state your exact available hours to your colleagues so they know when they can reach you. When working at home, avoid personal commitments unless emergencies occur. Similarly, avoid work-related communications outside your designated working hours. Doing so will help you maintain the crucial work-life balance many struggle to uphold when working remotely.

Transitioning to remote work during a crisis can be challenging, but with the right strategies and mindset, it can also be an opportunity for growth and increased flexibility. Remember, it's a continuous process of adaptation and learning, and with time, you will find what works best for you.

How to approach the tricky topic of workplace mental health

Mental health is increasingly being recognised as a critical aspect of overall well-being, especially in the workplace where many of us spend a significant portion of our lives. During the ongoing national crisis, many employees being forced to resume work either at home or at the office will have severe mental hurdles to overcome to get back to the flow of things.

As an employee, understanding and implementing innovative approaches to mental health can not only enhance your personal well-being but also contribute to a healthier, more productive work environment. Here are some practical guidelines to help you navigate this important aspect of your professional life, especially during times of uncertainty.

Embrace flexible work arrangements

Ask your supervisor or employer if flexible work arrangements can be made, such as shifting to remote work, integrating flexible work hours, or compressing workweeks to reduce workload. Such arrangements will allow both employers and employees to have better control of their work-life balance.

If you're looking for flexible work arrangements, communicate with your higher-ups about your specific needs and preferences. Be specific, and mention the general interest in mind over looking selfish or conceited. If you're working remotely, create a structured routine that you can follow to divide your work and tackle tasks at your own pace. If your employer asks why you need more flexible work arrangements, tell them that these will increase your job satisfaction and reduce burnout, which in turn will produce higher quality and quantity of work.

Promote a healthy work culture

Many modern workplaces offer mental health programs and training sessions which can provide insights into managing stress and building resilience.

IMAGE: UNSPLASH

Be sure to attend any workshops or webinars on mental health topics, and especially engage in company-sponsored wellness programs. Have your close colleagues join these sessions with you; in turn, you will be contributing to a more positive work environment.

Many companies also offer Employee Assistance Programs (EAPs) that provide confidential counselling and support for a range of issues, including mental health. Familiarise yourself with the EAP services available through your employer, if any. Don't hesitate to use these resources when needed and provide feedback to your employer on how these programs can be improved.

Promoting a healthy work culture is an obvious yet often overlooked aspect of maintaining mental health during work. Whenever you can, try to create an open conversation about peer support and inclusion; and if needed, request your supervisor or employer to do the same. If you know a colleague who is particularly struggling, do not hesitate to offer a lending hand. If you take the first step in encouraging a culture of empathy and understanding, others will slowly follow your step.

Prioritise self-care

At the end of the day, nothing you do may help improve your mental health during work. That is when you should set clear boundaries between your work and your personal life. Your jobs may come and go, but you have just one life to live. As such, prioritise your self-care, and take a break from work if absolutely needed. At a time when uncertainty abounds, you can't be shamed for asking for some time off.

Whether you take a break or continue working, you should regularly communicate with your supervisor or employer about your mental health needs. If you feel your workplace isn't offering its employees enough support, advocate for mental health initiatives and policies that benefit the entire workforce. You can do this via employee surveys or feedback sessions.

Maintaining mental health in the workplace is always a tricky task. Doing so becomes even more difficult during a national or global crisis. However, as long as you are embracing flexibility and taking breaks at your own pace, you are already taking your first steps in embracing an improved outlook. Remember, taking care of your mental health is not only beneficial for you but also contributes to a more productive and positive workplace for everyone.

'World's fastest anime fan'

AFP, Tokyo

Japanese media hailed Olympic 100m gold medallist Noah Lyles as the world's fastest anime fan after the American celebrated his win by miming an attack from "Dragon Ball".

Wrapped in a US flag after the race, an over-the-moon Lyles thrust his hands forward, fingers splayed, imitating the "kamehamaha" attack used to unleash a powerful burst of energy in the Japanese manga and anime franchise.

The 27-year-old Lyles has made no secret of his love for Japanese pop culture, including comics and cartoons such as the global 1990s megahit "Dragon Ball".

At the Olympic trials in June, he delighted fellow anime enthusiasts by whipping out his "Yu-Gi-Oh" cards and showing them off to the cameras.

"Yu-Gi-Oh!" ran in the Japanese weekly comic magazine Shonen Jump between 1996 and 2004 and gave rise to a media franchise including a trading card game.

"Mankind's fastest otaku", blared a headline in Japan's Daily Sports using the term for hardcore superfans in a new nickname.

World champion Noah Lyles celebrates after clinching the victory in 9.79sec to claim gold in a dramatic men's Olympic 100m final in Paris on Sunday. Lyles won in the closest Olympic 100m finish in modern history as just five-thousandths of a second separated him from Jamaica's Kishane Thompson. Lyles' victory was only confirmed after a photo-finish and it made the 27-year-old the first American, male or female, to win the event since Justin Gatlin took gold in the 2004 Athens Games. 'Wolf' Lyles claims 100m glory in thriller

AFP, Paris

World champion Noah Lyles roared to victory in 9.79sec to claim gold in a dramatic men's Olympic 100m final in Paris on Sunday.

Lyles won in the closest Olympic 100m finish in modern history as just five thousandths of a second separated him from Jamaica's Kishane Thompson.

Both were given the rounded-up time of 9.79sec but the American's name carried the all-important (.784) to Thompson's (.789).

It made Lyles the first American, male or female, to win the event since Justin Gatlin took gold in the 2004 Athens Games.

"It's the one I wanted... to prove that I'm the man amongst all of them. I'm the wolf amongst wolves," said Lyles, whose winning time was a personal best.

Lyles' victory was only confirmed after a photo-finish.

The American said of the wait for the final results: "And I was fully prepared to see his [Thompson] name pop up and to see my name pop up, I'm like goodness gracious. I'm incredible."

Lyles added: "It's been a rollercoaster, ups and downs.

"I'm usually a guy who likes to come out blazing in all my rounds, especially in the 200m. But the 100m, it's my first time here on the Olympic stage."

The relatively unknown Thompson, the fastest man this year with a best of 9.77sec, said he hadn't been "fresh enough" over the final 30 metres.

"I couldn't really see Lyles, I wasn't sure," 23-year-old Thompson said of the photo-finish. "It was that close.

Lyles' US teammate Fred Kerley took bronze in 9.81sec, just one-hundredth ahead of South African Akani Simbine, who timed 9.82sec.

"Whoever came off the best is the best. It's my second time around and I'm going off with a medal," Kerley said.

In an astonishing race, defending champion Marcell Jacobs of Italy was fifth in 9.85sec, Botswana's Letsile Tebogo sixth in 9.86sec, American Kenny Bednarek seventh in 9.88sec and Jamaican Oblique Seville eighth in 9.91sec.

Starting in lane seven, outside Seville and inside Tebogo, Lyles got off to an average start but was soon into his stride pattern.

Head tucked down through to the 40-metre mark, the American opened up, but the whole field pushed him all the way.

As Lyles dipped for the line with Thompson charging alongside him, the crowd erupted and a photo-finish was called before Lyles was confirmed as gold medallist.

There was an electric pre-race atmosphere in a 69,000-capacity Stade de France, a light show and booming music keeping the crowd entertained as the sprinters adjusted their starting blocks.

The lights then went off and the sprinters leaving the track to remake their entrance like prize fighters in a colosseum, with each sprinter individually introduced behind an image of their name above their flag.

Thompson roared, hands clenched in fists as his head rolled back. Kerley patted his heart.

Lyles bounded out like a kangaroo, bouncing 20 metres down the track. Jacobs was the definition of cool, raising both arms and calmly walking to his blocks.

Then came the moment where the sprinters set, at the starter's beck and call. The shot was fired and the field moved as if one up the purple track to the dramatic denouement.

The photo-finish officials examined the evidence and Lyles walked away with gold to bury the demons of the Tokyo Olympics three years ago where he harvested a mere 200m bronze.

Asked whether he was confident of doubling up in the 200m, an event in which he is a three-time world champion, Lyles said "That's my better event and now that I've got a new PR in the 100, I'm ready to take it to the 200."

USA women bag swim medley gold with world record

REUTERS, Paris

The United States smashed their own world record in the women's 4x100 medley on Sunday to close the Paris Olympics swimming meet with one last gold that lifted them clear of Australia at the top of the medals table.

Australia, who finished with seven swimming golds to the United States' eight, took the silver at the La Defense Arena and China the bronze.

The U.S quartet of Regan Smith, Lilly King, Gretchen Walsh and Torri Huske touched out with a final time of three minutes 49.63 seconds at the La Defense Arena to avenge their defeat to Australia by 0.13 in Tokyo three years ago.

"We've brought it (the record) down a lot, so it's really cool to continue to be a part of that relay and watching it faster and faster and faster, but pretty much the same people," said King.

The U.S. team led all the way, with Smith leading off and King increasing the advantage with her breaststroke leg before Walsh finished her stint 1.33 seconds inside the record and handed over to Huske.

The gold was a third of the Games for Huske, second each for Smith and Walsh and first since 2016 for King who was a double champion in Rio de Janeiro.

Refugee team's Ngamba makes history

REUTERS, Paris

Cindy Ngamba became the first representative of the refugee team to win a medal at the Olympics after making it to the boxing semi-finals of the Paris Games on Sunday, guaranteeing her at least a bronze although she is gunning for more.

Ngamba beat France's Davina Michel by a unanimous decision in front of a crowd who were heavily behind their countrywoman at the North Paris Arena to progress to the last four of the women's middleweight category.

The 25-year-old who was born in Cameroon has lived in England for 15 years but is still awaiting citizenship, and is competing for the refugee Olympic team, which was established at the Rio Games in 2016.

"It means the world to me, to be the first ever refugee to win a medal. I'm just a human, just like any other refugee, athlete and refugee all around the world. But I hope I can change the medal on my next fight," Ngamba said.

Graham Thorpe: A shining light for England

AFP, London

It is a measure of Graham Thorpe's class that despite emerging during one of English cricket's most difficult periods, he still managed to win exactly 100 Test caps.

Left-handed batsmen are often described as either "stylish" or "gritty" yet Thorpe, whose death aged 55 was announced on Monday, somehow managed to be both in an often struggling England team.

He enjoyed a spectacular start to his Test career with an Ashes hundred on debut in 1993 and retired 12 years later having won 99 more caps -- no mean feat in an era of inconsistent England selection.

England went through the whole of the 1990s without winning a single Ashes series yet Thorpe averaged more against Australia than he did in his career overall (45.74 against 44.66).

But the collapse of his first marriage, which took place in the full glare of media publicity, led to a bout of depression and separation from his children, with Thorpe taking an indefinite break from cricket in 2002.

As he movingly wrote in his autobiography, Rising from the Ashes: "There came a time when I would have given back all my Test runs and Test caps just to be happy again."

Thorpe, who enjoyed a happy second marriage, did manage a successful return to the Test arena.

Born on August 1, 1969 in the market town of Farnham, Surrey, Thorpe was both a promising schoolboy cricketer and footballer.

But it was cricket that claimed him and his first-class debut against Leicestershire saw the best England left-handed batsman of his time dismiss the one of the previous generation when Thorpe took the wicket of David Gower with his rarely-used medium-pace bowling.

His Test debut in the 1993 Ashes against Australia at Trent Bridge, saw Thorpe score a second-innings 114 as he became England's first debutant century-maker since Frank Hayes 20 years earlier.

One criticism levelled at Thorpe was that a man who got past fifty on 55 occasions in Test cricket, should have ended up with more than 16 hundreds.

But many of those centuries were memorable, be it his first overseas hundred for England on the notoriously quick WACA pitch in Perth against a formidable Australia attack in 1995 or an unbeaten 119 when facing West Indies greats Curtly Ambrose and Courtney Walsh in Barbados in 2004.

Thorpe returned to England duty for the final Test of the following home season against South Africa, where his 124 at the Oval helped England to an unlikely series draw with the Proteas.

Thorpe's last Test was against Bangladesh two years later, with Kevin Pietersen effectively taking his place for England's celebrated 2005 Ashes triumph.

Overwhelmed with joy, An Seyoungof South Korea collapses in celebration after beating Bing Jiao He of China 21-13 21-16 in the women's badminton singles gold medal match at the Paris Olympics yesterday. 'Will come up with outline of interim govt in 24 hours'

Say organisers of quota protest movement

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Key organisers of the anti-discrimination student movement last night said the outline of the interim national government will be formulated within the next 24 hours.

Addressing a press conference in the capital's Tejgaon, they said the power must be handed over to the interim government proposed by the students and citizens who protested.

"I'm dedicating this victory to the martyred students who were killed during the movement," said Nahid Islam, a key organisers.

He said they will hold discussions about the outline with all the coordination committees, the civil society, and political and state stakeholders, and will later inform who else they will meet in this regard.

"But within the next 24 hours, a complete outline of the interim government will be provided."

66 dead as city convulsed with violence

More than a thousand hurt in clashes between agitators and law enforcers

STAR REPORT

Clashes between mobs and law enforcers at different parts of the capital left at least 66 people dead and over a thousand wounded yesterday.

In the morning, clashes began in some areas of the capital when law enforcers opened fire on protesters who were trying to take part in the march to Dhaka, announced the day before, defying the curfew.

Around afternoon, when hundreds of thousands of people took to the streets celebrating Sheikh Hasina's resignation, angry mobs attacked several police stations and key structures.

Police opened fire which caused most of the deaths.

Columns of thick smoke covered parts of the Dhaka sky as the mobs set fire to three Awami League offices, the police headquarters, several police stations, the residence of Dhaka superintendent of police, three TV stations and the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi-32.

The inspector general of police and several other top police officials were air lifted from the police headquarters while other officials managed to flee, said an official who escaped the attack unscathed.

"Many vehicles parked on the PHQ premise were burning when I managed to flee," said the officer.

Among the 66 dead, 41 were taken to Dhaka Medical College Hospital while 21 to a hospital in Uttara. Among the bodies taken to DMCH, 21 came from the Jatrabari area. At least four bodies were lying in front of Jatrabari Police Station.

Protesters storm Gono Bhaban, PMO, parliament building

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Gono Bhaban never hosted so many people in its lifetime before yesterday.

Minutes after Sheikh Hasina fled the country, a never-ending stream of people defied the curfew and marched towards the official residence of the prime minister. It seemed every city street and alley led to Gono Bhaban, the Bangla for house of the people, as people of all ages descended upon it from almost every part of capital Dhaka.

The main entrance was left ajar, and for hours since about 2:30pm tens and thousands of men, women, and children occupied the premises. Hundreds were seen climbing the thick brick walls – which is otherwise heavily guarded and inaccessible to members of the public – to enter the red brick palace.

Inside, the mood was of celebrations. Some were dancing, some clapping, some singing, some hugging, and some chanting slogans against Hasina. Some called her a killer; others called her an autocrat who has blood in her hand. Some were seen offering prayers.

Within minutes, some of the crowd scaled the roof and hoisted the national flag, while others entered the main residential building and started vandalising and smashing things.

Some photos taken by The Daily Star and social media videos show many went inside some of the bedrooms and lay on them, as they took selfies.

The scene resembled the occupying of Sri Lankan presidential palace in July 2022.

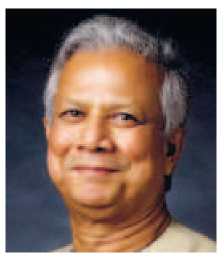
Yunus to helm interim govt

Protest organisers meet president, chiefs of three services at Bangabhaban to discuss outline for a govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



Nobel Laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus is set to become the head of interim government.

President Mohammad Shahabuddin agreed to appoint Yunus as head of an interim government that is yet to materialise as the country continues to stagger in a power vacuum for the second day.

Organisers of the student protests met the president and chiefs of the army, navy, and air force yesterday to discuss their proposed outline for the interim government that will steward Bangladesh until the next election, key protest organiser Nahid Islam told reporters in front of the Bangabhaban early today.

The president suggested finalising the other members of the interim government in consultation with political parties, noting the country's precarious situation warranted quick appointment of an interim government.

Emerging from a four-hour meeting at the Bangabhaban that continued well past Tuesday midnight, Nahid said they made a list of 10 to 15 people to help Yunus run the interim government. "But the list will be finalised after discussions with political parties."

A Bangabhaban press release sent to media outlets early today said the president requested that a freedom fighter be included among those to help Yunus.

Former Bangladesh prime minister Sheikh Hasina apparently made the decision to step down after a meeting with the leaders of the security establishment, India's External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar said yesterday.

"At very short notice, she requested approval to come for the moment to India," the minister said in a suo motu statement in the Rajya Sabha on the situation in Bangladesh.

India simultaneously received a request for flight clearance from the Bangladesh authorities, he said, adding that Hasina arrived in Delhi on Monday evening.

At least 92 bodies recovered

STAR REPORT

At least 92 bodies, including those of students and cops, were recovered in different parts of the country yesterday following Monday's violent clashes between protesters and police and attacks on various establishments, including police stations.

In some areas, mobs vandalised and set fire to the homes and offices of Awami League leaders and government establishments over the last two days.

In the capital, at least 63 bodies were brought to different hospitals yesterday following clashes between the protesters and police the previous day.

Among them, 20 bodies, including two of cops, were taken to Dhaka Medical College Hospital (DMCH), and 10 to Shaheed Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital.

According to hospital sources, most of the bodies bore marks of bullet wounds.

The DMCH allowed the families of the deceased to take away the bodies without autopsies.

Twelve more bullet-hit bodies were taken to Sir Salimullah Medical College Hospital, said Abdul Ahad, Ansar commander at the hospital.

They were killed after police opened fire on the protesters in Jatrabari and Bangshal areas, witnesses said.

Five bodies were taken to Uttara Adhunik Medical College Hospital.

Four charred bodies were found at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi-32, which was vandalised and set on fire on Monday afternoon.

Around 10:15am yesterday, a correspondent of The Daily Star found that the bodies were lying on the footpath in front of the museum.

Clashes broke out in some areas of the capital on Monday morning as law enforcers opened fire on the protesters who were trying to take part in the "March to Dhaka" programme defying curfew.

AL stares at a 'political death'

Some leaders now say they're victims of Hasina's whim

PARTHA PRATIM BHATTACHARJEE and ASHIK ABDULLAH APU

Trumpeted as a champion of democracy over the last 15 years by her party colleagues and followers, Sheikh Hasina, 77, has become a pariah overnight.

The five-time prime minister, who is also Awami League president since 1981, is now trying to secure refuge in the UK after fleeing to India on Monday in the face of an unprecedented anti-government movement in Bangladesh's history.

Party insiders say Hasina's "undignified exit" was unbecoming of her, and a damning indictment of the bankruptcy of a party that led the Liberation War against Pakistan in 1971.

This self-seeking decision, they point out, to leave everyone to fend for themselves not only reflected badly on her, but also set back Awami League for years, if not decades, before it can recover from this situation where it faces "political death".

Hasina's fleeing the country essentially sealed the fate of Awami League, which led all most all democratic movements before and after the birth of Bangladesh, they add.

The Daily Star yesterday randomly tried to speak to top party leaders by phone, but their phones were found switched off in most cases. A several others did not pick up the call. Only two leaders agreed to talk off the record.

They said Hasina's last moment's decision to leave the country placed them in terrific situation and that they did not get enough time to secure their own safety.

"We are victims of her whim," said a central committee member.

Another leader alleged Hasina never listened to party leaders and made decisions on her own, isolating herself from the party colleagues.

"In the January 7 election, many Awami League activists did not vote for the party-nominated candidates. And

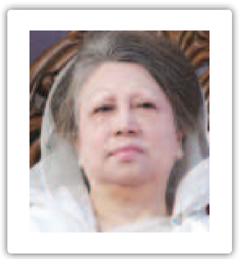
Khaleda Zia freed after presidential pardon

SAJJAD HOSSAIN



Former prime minister and BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia, who was under house arrest for the last five years, was released yesterday after the president pardoned her punishments, a day after Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled the country in the face of a people's uprising.

Khaleda, 79, is currently receiving treatment at the Evercare Hospital, where she was admitted on July 15.

BNP leader Mirza Abbas, said: "Madam [Khaleda Zia] got very emotional after knowing that Sheikh Hasina was forced to resign and flee the country."

This is the first time since independence that the president has granted clemency to any former prime minister, according to senior Supreme Court lawyer ZI Khan Panna, who spoke with The Daily Star yesterday.

Trade bodies demand quick restoration of law and order

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Trade bodies yesterday urged for quick restoration of law and order and the resumption of economic activities at the earliest.

Economic activities are hampered due to the disruption in imports, exports and the supply chain, said the Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry in a statement yesterday, a day after Sheikh Hasina stepped down as the prime minister and fled Bangladesh.

"Businesses and entrepreneurs are losing heavily. Under the circumstances, the damage to the economy will be high unless quick steps are taken," it said, while calling for opening factories at the earliest.

The Dhaka Chamber of Commerce and Industry (DCCI) stressed bringing normalcy back as the economy suffered significantly since the beginning of the unrest centring on the students' quota reform movement that has so far claimed upwards of 300 lives.

Both the trade bodies called for forming the interim government lawfully as soon as possible.

"We request everyone to take necessary measures as we believe an interim government is a must to restore the democratic election process and hand the country back to its people and its elected representatives," the DCCI said.

The country's apex trade said it would extend its full cooperation to the interim government.

"The recent events have taken a large toll on our lives and economy, and unless effective measures are in place, supply chain disruptions will cause further damage and add to public suffering," the DCCI said.

A conducive environment must be in place to facilitate economic recovery, foster a stable political environment and rebuild businesses' confidence and activities at home and abroad, it said.

Uncertainty looms over HSC exams

Question papers kept in various locations damaged in violence

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Uncertainty has risen over holding the HSC and equivalent exams following incidents of attacks on multiple locations across the country where question papers were stored.

Confidential exam materials, including question papers, were stored in various police stations and other facilities for safekeeping. Several of those locations came under attack on Monday following the resignation and departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina.

During the attacks, question papers in many areas were burned or destroyed, according to multiple officials from the Secondary and Higher Secondary Education Board.

As a result, a new set of question papers needs to be prepared, which board officials indicate could take some time.

Meanwhile, a number of exam centres around the country were also damaged in similar attacks and are in urgent need of repair, reports UNB.

Hasina

His statement came a day after Hasina's resignation and fleeing to India.

Addressing an all-party meeting at the Parliament House, Jaishankar said India was giving Hasina some time "to recover" before talking to her as she was in a state of shock, reports our New Delhi correspondent.

The Indian government would give her the necessary assistance, he said.

Several leaders including Rahul Gandhi of Congress conveyed their full cooperation to the government in this regard.

Rahul enquired about the Indian government's short-term and long-term strategy in dealing with diplomatic ramifications of the power shift in Dhaka, reports India Today.

In response, Jaishankar said it is a developing situation and the government is analysing it closely so that it can fine-tune its next move.

Rahul also wanted to know about the state of minorities in Bangladesh and the possibility of a "foreign hand" in the unrest.

The minister said it would be too soon to talk about external interference as it is still a developing situation.

Jaishankar told the Rajya Sabha that India remains deeply concerned until law and order is visibly restored in Bangladesh.

"We are also monitoring the situation with regard to the status of minorities."

There are reports of initiatives by various groups and organisations to ensure their protection and well-being.

The minister said Indian border guards have been instructed to be exceptionally alert in view of the complex situation.

He hoped the Bangladesh government would provide the required security protection for the Indian High Commission in Dhaka and the assistant high commissions in Chattogram, Rajshahi, Khulna and Sylhet.

"We look forward to their normal functioning once the situation stabilises."

India is in close and continuous touch with its nationals in Bangladesh through its diplomatic missions. There are an estimated 19,000 Indian nationals in Bangladesh.

Jaishankar said that India-Bangladesh relations have been exceptionally close for many decades, adding that the concern about recent violence and instability there is shared across the political spectrum.

Since the national election in January this year, there have been considerable tensions, deep divides and growing polarisation in Bangladesh politics.

This underlying foundation aggravated a student agitation that started in June, he said.

There was growing violence, including attacks on public buildings and infrastructure, which continued through July.

On August 4, events took a very serious turn. Attacks on police and government installations intensified as overall levels of violence greatly escalated. Properties of individuals associated with the regime were torched across the country, Jaishankar said.

"What was particularly worrying was that minorities, their businesses and temples have also come under attack at multiple locations."

The full extent of the damage caused to minorities by vandalism is still not clear.

US ORDERS NON-EMERGENCY STAFF OUT OF BANGLADESH

The United States government yesterday said it had ordered non-emergency personnel to leave Bangladesh as a precaution after mass protests ousted Hasina, reports AFP.

The State Department said that all non-emergency diplomats and other personnel as well as their family members had been ordered to leave as of Monday, although the US embassy in Dhaka remains open at limited capacity.

The US had last month warned its citizens not to travel to Bangladesh, citing the risk of civil unrest, crime and terrorism.

According to a unanimous decision on Monday by the chiefs of the three services, politicians, and civil society representatives, the president dissolved the parliament earlier in the day without an outline for an interim government or a clear transition path.

With the dissolution of the 12th parliament, he also set off a 90-day countdown for the general elections as mandated by the constitution.

With the entire police force remaining absent and without any directives or announcements about law and order, students and volunteers took up the responsibility of directing traffic on the streets of Dhaka yesterday.

Police stations and outposts remained deserted as hundreds of them had been burnt or razed to the ground.

The power vacuum comes in the wake of Bangladesh's former prime minister Sheikh Hasina resigning on Monday and fleeing the country amid a mass uprising where hundreds of thousands began to march towards Dhaka.

Earlier in the day, Nahid, proposed Yunus as head of the interim government and said Yunus had agreed to shoulder the responsibility.

"We want to see the process rolling by the morning. We urge the president to take steps as soon as possible to form an interim government headed by Dr Yunus," said Nahid, who came under the spotlight when he was abducted by law enforcement agencies during the height of the student protests.

Nahid was found a day later by the side of a road with bruises and clear signs of torture.

Nahid reminded everyone that no government other than the one the students proposed would be acceptable. "As we have said, no military government, or one backed by the military, or a government of fascists, will be accepted."

Yunus, attending the Paris Olympics as a special guest, had initially been reluctant to accept the proposal but eventually gave in to repeated requests from the students.

"If the students can sacrifice so much, if the people of the country can sacrifice so much, then I also have some responsibility. Then I told the students that I would accept," a reliable of source quoted him as saying.

Sheikh Hasina's government had hounded the Grameen Bank founder and microcredit pioneer for almost a decade.

Nahid said they were expecting Yunus to reach Bangladesh later today or early tomorrow.

The Election Commission remains completely in the dark, as confirmed by a top official, about the next polls. And it is becoming increasingly likely that the envisioned transition to an interim government will not be in strict adherence to the constitution.

Shahdeen Malik, a Supreme Court lawyer and a noted commentator on legal issues, said it might not be possible to fully abide by the constitution in the context of such an extraordinary political upheaval in Bangladesh.

"This has happened in the past. Since it is not possible to follow the constitution to make reforms for national interest, these reforms could be legitimised by amending the constitution later," he told The Daily Star.

Asif Nazrul, a Dhaka University law professor who has been vocal against Hasina's government, was alongside the protest organisers at the briefing in front of the Bangabhaban.

He spoke along the same strain as Malik. He also indicated the possibility of bypassing the constitutional requirement in the interest of political legitimacy.

"There are different constitutional means and customs to legalise certain actions. We will do that."

The law professor said that the meeting also discussed other details of the interim regime, including its duration and the number of people and so forth. But since those were not finalised, he did not divulge them.

At least 92 bodies recovered

Hundreds of thousands of people took to the streets in the afternoon to celebrate the resignation of Sheikh Hasina as prime minister. At around the same time, mobs attacked several police stations and buildings.

Mobs also set fire to some police stations, leading to the deaths of several policemen. In some cases, cops were also beaten to death.

At least 12 bodies of police officers were taken to the Central Police Hospital in Rajarbagh as of 8:00pm yesterday, Rezaul Hyder, director of the hospital, told The Daily Star.

AKM Shahidur Rahman, additional inspector general of police, said they were still collecting information about how many cops died.

"Our teams are working to recover the bodies. We are yet to ascertain how many policemen are missing."

DEATHS OUTSIDE DHAKA

In Jashore, 11 more bodies were recovered yesterday from hotel Zabeer Jashore that was vandalised and set on fire by unidentified criminals on Monday afternoon.

With this, the death toll from the attack went up to 24, said AM Mamun, assistant director of Fire Service and Civil Defence.

The hotel, located at the district town's Chitrar Mor, is owned by Jashore district AL General Secretary Shahin Chakladar.

In Noakhali, at least seven people, including three policemen, were killed in clashes between the demonstrators and police on Monday afternoon.

The clashes broke out when the agitators attacked Sonaimuri and Chatkhil police stations, said Md Asaduzzaman, superintendent of police in Noakhali.

Of the deceased, six died during the clash at Sonairmuri Police Station between 4:30pm and 6:30pm. Three of them are policemen.

According to local journalists, at least one person was shot dead at Chatkhil.

The SP claimed that at least 15 policemen from the two police stations went missing after the clashes.

In Lalmonirhat, six bodies were recovered from the home of Suman Khan, joint secretary of the district AL, after it was set alight by unidentified criminals on Monday evening.

A fire service team recovered the bodies in presence of army, said Wadud Hossain, deputy assistant director of Lalmonirhat Fire Service and Civil Defence.

Witnesses said several hundred unidentified criminals attacked, vandalised and set fire to Suman's home in Kalibari area of the district town.

In Habiganj, three people, who sustained injuries during a clash between police and demonstrators in Baniachong upazila on Monday, died of their injuries between Monday night and early yesterday at the upazila health complex.

Besides, the body of a police sub-inspector was also recovered yesterday.

With this, the death toll from the recent violence in the upazila rose to 10, said Shamima Akhter, Baniachong upazila health and family welfare officer.

In Thakurgaon, two people, who suffered burns on Monday night, died of their injuries yesterday. They were Al Mamun, 35, and Shahan, 14, residents of Thakurgaon Road area in the district town, said locals.

A group of unruly people looted and set fire to several shops at Baliadangi intersection of the district town on Monday night. As the blaze spread, a gas cylinder caught fire and blasted, leaving six people, including Al Mamun and Shahan, injured.

Shahan died on the way to Rangpur Medical College Hospital Dhaka early yesterday while Mamun breathed his last on the way to Dhaka yesterday morning.

The rest of the injured were receiving treatment at different hospitals in Thakurgaon.

On Monday, at least 76 deaths were reported in 13 districts outside Dhaka.

In Pirojpur, agitating people vandalised and set fire to the district AL office in the district town yesterday afternoon. Houses of several AL leaders were also torched.

In Pabna, criminals yesterday attacked the houses and businesses of several AL leaders, including Md Mintu, director of Pabna Chamber of Commerce and Industry.

'SHUN VIOLENCE, LOOTING'

Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) yesterday urged the people not to get involved in violence, looting, and destruction during their victory celebrations.

The civil society platform also urged all not to take the law into their own hands, and to resist any initiative of carrying out killing and destroying state and personal properties.

Shujan called for protecting different religious centres, including temples.

The editors' body, however, said the political situation that has emerged from Sheikh Hasina's resignation has given way to a kind of anarchy.

"Everyone is anxious about the safety of lives and property, both public and private," the statement said, adding that there have been incidents of arson and vandalism at important establishments, including factories and law enforcement facilities.

"Media has reported incidents of attack on minorities, which must stop immediately," the statement reads.

Additionally, there have been incidents of looting and vandalism at multiple television and media organisations.

"To prevent these unwanted incidents, the president must immediately take necessary actions," the statement reads.

Khaleda Zia freed issued yesterday, President Mohammed Shahabuddin, exercising his power under Article 49 of the constitution, granted Khaleda Zia clemency in two cases based on the law ministry's recommendation and ordered her release.

The development came after the president and chiefs of armed forces agreed to on the decision during a meeting at the Bangabhaban on Monday, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir told reporters.

Khaleda Zia on February 8, 2018, was sent to the Old Dhaka Jail after a special court in Dhaka sentenced her to five years' imprisonment in the Zia Orphanage Trust corruption case. The High Court later doubled her five-year jail term.

In the same year, the same special court in Dhaka sentenced Khaleda to seven years in jail in the Zia Charitable Trust graft case.

Amid the coronavirus outbreak, the government temporarily freed Khaleda from jail through an executive order suspending her sentence on March 25, 2020, with the condition that she stay in her Gulshan house and not leave the country.

She has long been battling various ailments, including liver cirrhosis, arthritis, diabetes, and issues related to the kidneys, lungs, heart, and eyes.

Although the government has extended the period of her conditional release on multiple occasions, it has denied BNP's every call to take her abroad for advanced treatment.

'SHE GOT EMOTIONAL'

Khaleda Zia learnt about the news of Hasina's departure from television and her doctors. "Initially, she got very emotional but later smiled," a member of BNP's media cell said.

"It's not right to oppress the people. Sheikh Hasina is proof of the consequences of wrongdoings. Allah has judged her," Khaleda was quoted as saying by hospital staff.

Khaleda was kept informed about the country's situation when the quota reform protest started last month by her doctors.

"Khaleda Zia was aware that the country's situation was deteriorating day by day. But she was very surprised to learn that Hasina was forced to resign and flee the country," a top BNP leader said.

BNP Standing Committee Member Mirza Abbas said, "Hasina caused great harm to Madam's life."

Asked about her health condition, he said, "Madam is very ill and cannot even speak properly. If she could be sent abroad for better treatment, it would be very good for her health. We are now considering it."

"We are hoping that Madam will return to the political field again."

Another BNP leader Selima Rahman told The Daily Star that Khaleda Zia was imprisoned "in false cases and out of vindictiveness."

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir told reporters, "Whenever she [Khaleda] feels fit and healthy, she will appear in public."

Following her release, BNP supporters celebrated outside the Nayapaltan party office, chanting slogans in her name.

Khaleda might address the public the day she returns to her residence from the hospital, said two standing committee members.

and journalists.

It specifically mentioned attacks on Hindu temples and the failure of law enforcement agencies, fire service, and civil defense to provide adequate assistance.

They demanded vigilance to prevent such incidents and appropriate compensation for victims.

Transparency International Bangladesh expressed profound disappointment and strongly condemned incidents of violence across districts, including attacks on homes, temples, and business establishments belonging to religious minorities.

Condemning the arson and looting of important state establishments and vehicles, TIB in a statement called on all responsible authorities to take immediate steps to ensure the security of religious minorities and state assets.

Such self-interest and criminal activities can derail and cast doubts on the opportunity to rebuild the nation with equality, justice, and good governance, which was achieved through the unprecedented loss of lives and sacrifice of students and citizens, it said.

TIB Executive Director Iftekharuzzaman said, "It is extremely disheartening and disappointing that we have to demand protection of religious minorities and state assets."

"We sincerely urge all the responsible groups to fulfill their essential responsibilities in ensuring that the opportunity to rebuild our country brought by the sacrifice of students and citizens don't go to the hands of communal forces and narrow interests."

Mentioning the recent violence and attacks on various establishments, including the parliament building, Iftekharuzzaman said, "All state assets are built on the hard-earned money and taxes of people."

"To avert such self-destructive activities, it is imperative that all responsible people, in addition to the general public, take an active role."

TIB urged the army chief and other responsible stakeholders to uphold their commitment to maintain law and order.

Shushashoner Jonno Nagorik (Shujan) also condemned the incidents and called for the protection of state and private properties, as well as religious institutions.

Shujan Secretary Badiul Alam Majumdar, said, "Yesterday [Monday], we achieved an unprecedented and unimaginable victory, considered by many as our second independence. This victory opens new possibilities to rebuild the state and construct a democratic, non-communal, developed, and livable nation."

"However, if we fail to act responsibly, this potential may be lost. We observed some undesirable incidents during the celebrations. We condemn the attacks and vandalism and urge everyone to refrain from such activities."

Rights body, Ain o Salish Kendra, condemned the incidents of vandalism, particularly targeting religious minority communities.

Bangladesh Mahila Parishad also urged authorities to take immediate action to prevent attacks, arson, looting, and vandalism.

Meanwhile, the Left Democratic Alliance, Anti-Fascist Left Front, and Bangladesh Jatiya Samajtantrik Dal urged citizens to ensure the safety of life and property, particularly of those from religious and ethnic minorities.

At a rally in Paltan, they warned that during this time, corrupt individuals and looters might take advantage to burn their corruption files at offices. The public must stay vigilant and stand against them.

Students step up to ensure order

Help manage Dhaka traffic, clean JS premises, collect and return Gono Bhaban items

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chaos engulfed the streets of Dhaka in the immediate aftermath of Sheikh Hasina's resignation as mobs vandalised and looted many establishments in the absence of police.

Law enforcers, including traffic police, were largely absent on the streets of Dhaka yesterday. Many feared anarchy and repetition of widespread violence.

So, students decided to take matters into their own hands. School and college goers took to the streets again, equipped with sticks and megaphones.

This time, they were not protesters but volunteers striving to maintain law and order and ensure the smooth flow of traffic.

Although the number of vehicles on Dhaka roads was fewer than usual, they were moving in a noticeably disciplined manner.

Some students were seen requesting pedestrians to use footpaths and footbridges with their megaphones. They told drivers to obey traffic rules. Others signaled to vehicles using their hands and sticks, directing the flow of traffic.

This brought back memories of August 2018, when students took to the streets demanding road safety.

Abdullah Al Wasee, a student of BRAC University, was seen controlling traffic with his friends at the Panthapath intersection.

He said, "There is no police anywhere in the city. Law and order must be restored. This is why we are doing this voluntarily. This was our movement. So, we felt obliged to help restore law and order."

Shahriar Emon, a student of Tejgaon College, was controlling traffic at the Farmgate intersection, one of the busiest and most crowded road junctions in the city.

He said, "We also participated in the road safety movement in 2018. Back then, we were school students, and we learned practically about the importance of road safety. So, I am doing this voluntarily to help restore normalcy."

"We hope that an interim government will soon be formed by the proposal of our coordinators and the administration will be restored. We want to go back to our educational institutions as soon as possible," he added.

Around 2:00pm, while crossing the Agargaon intersection this newspaper found a group of students controlling the traffic situation. Similar scenes were found at the Bijoy Sarani intersection.

Besides, no traffic officers were present at key locations including Mirpur-2, Mirpur-10 intersection, Bangla Motor, Asad Gate, Shyamoli, Dhanmondi-32,

Adding to the chaos, police have reportedly expressed their inability to ensure security within the secretariat.

Employees from various government departments, including the Electricity Board, Food Department, Education Department, and Registration Department, located on Dhaka's Paltan and Goni roads, also left their workplaces amid the situation.

Torching an integral part of country's history

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

After Sheikh Hasina resigned amid nationwide protests on Monday, the mob decided to take their rage out by vandalising various structures.

Even the historic residence of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, an infrastructure that symbolised the country's independence struggle, on Road 32 in Dhanmondi, was not spared.

The mob set ablaze the residence, which was later turned into a museum.

"When the news of Hasina's resignation circulated, police and officials guarding the residence quickly fled. Thousands of people broke into the house, took everything, and celebrated on the adjacent street," said an eyewitness.

"The fire service did not arrive to control the blaze, so the fire quickly spread to nearby buildings, causing severe damage," he added.

The modern extension of the museum complex, which housed a library, auditorium, and photo gallery, was also completely destroyed. An adjacent restaurant was burned as well.

When this correspondent got inside the historic building, he saw many burnt books lying on the floor, many of the furniture and household items were either stolen or torched. The doors and windows were damaged.

Yesterday, numerous people also visited the residence, took photos and painted protest graffiti on the wall.

Army personnel were seen at the spot trying to control the situation. They were also joined by students.

Fishing trawlers stay anchored for rough sea

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Patuakhali

Following a ban on catching hilsa in the Bay of Bengal for 65 days, fishermen resumed their activities from July 23.

However, for around two weeks since then, the sea has been remaining rough, leaving them with a meagre catch.

Many fishermen, who went to the sea on trawlers from Patuakhali and Barguna, have been returning empty handed during this time.

Fish traders at Patuakhali's Alipur and Mahipur, and Barguna's Patharghata fish landing stations are largely disappointed.

Visiting the fish landing stations recently, this correspondent saw numerous trawlers were anchored at the ghats (docks). Some of those had returned from the sea after days while others were unable to leave due to turbulent sea.

"Our trawler FB Mayer Doa left Patuakhali two days back with 14 fishermen, but had to return empty handed as the sea has been very rough while there hardly any hilsa in the waters," said a fisherman Anisur Rahman.

Rasul Mia, owner of the trawler, said he had to take a loan on high interest from moneylenders to send the fishermen to the sea for fishing.

"As they could not manage to catch any fish, I am now concerned how I am going to pay back the loan," he added.

Another fisherman, Nasir Uddin, echoed him, saying he wanted to stay longer in the sea but had to return as the sea has been becoming rough and unsafe.

"If the weather turns favourable soon, we might leave for the sea again and try our luck," he added.

Many trawler owners and fishermen said they will become destitute if such adverse weather conditions continue to persist longer and affect their livelihoods.

Poor sales leave traders worried in Sylhet

MINTU DESHWARA, Moulvibazar

Even after curfew was lifted from 6:00am yesterday, very few shops and businesses opened in Moulvibazar, Habiganj, Sunamganj and Sylhet district towns following a prolonged period of unrest and uncertainty.

Visiting different areas including Central Road-Paschimbazar, a major shopping hub in Moulvibazar town, this correspondent observed that many shops remained shuttered between 10:00am and 5:00pm yesterday, as shop owners feared vandalism and arson attacks by mobs.

The few shops that did open, witnessed a poor presence of customers and significantly low volume of sales, raising concerns.

Local traders said people are still hesitant to come out of their homes despite the curfew being lifted. People have been hardly venturing out unless it is absolutely necessary. The lack of public transport on the roads also contributed to this poor turnout.

Since the end of July, many traders have been struggling to pay rent, utility bills, and salaries to their employees.

"After Sheikh Hasina resigned on Monday, a festive atmosphere sparked celebratory processions. However, things soon took a dark turn as numerous properties, businesses, and shops, including some owned by people from minority communities, were vandalised and looted in the town," said Sumesh Das Jisu, a shop owner at Manager Stall.

"Our traditional 76-year-old sweet shop at Manager Stall, as well as Radhika Stall on M Saifur Rahman Road in Moulvibazar town, were left severely damaged," he added.

Locals said the police outpost at Chaumohana Chatwar (Circle) was attacked, and Mamar Bari Restaurant on Court Road also suffered vandalism. The wave of destruction caused widespread panic among the town's residents.

Atikur Rahman Akhoi, general secretary of Kulaura Traders Association, said, "Our businesses were already struggling due to recent flood. We were yet to recover before the student movement demanding quota reform turned violent and led to a curfew being imposed. This overall lack of business over the past month has left us in dire straits. People are still fearful, and most avoid leaving their homes, which is why there are so few customers."

Kamal Hossain, general secretary of Sreemangal Traders Association, said, "I personally appeal to all traders to remain steadfast and open their shops without succumbing to panic. We must all have the courage to continue our operations," he said.

No reservation over interim govt

Says Fakhrul

MOHAMMAD AL-MASUM MOLLA

BNP will not show any reservation over the formation of the interim government.

It is seeing the process of formation of the interim government positively, said party leaders.

They said they would not have any differences of options with the coordinators of the student movement over the positions of chief adviser and other advisers.

But if the tenure of the interim government is longer then they will show their reservation as they want parliamentary elections at the earliest to keep the continuation of the constitution.

"If a new government is not formed dissolving the parliament, then there will be a political void," said Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir, the party's secretary general, at a press conference.

Within hours of his statement, the parliament was dissolved. The issues were discussed at the party's standing committee meeting with acting chairman Tarique Rahman.

At the meeting, the party decided to stage a huge showdown as the Awami League government had fallen.

The party will hold a rally in front of its Nayapaltan headquarters at 2:00pm today where Tarique will be the chief guest and will be connected virtually.

Meeting sources said they will not make any negative comments on the position of advisers, whoever it is.

If there is a proposal on who can be recommended for the position of chief adviser, the party will hold a meeting with the leaders of the anti-quota student movement and the parties involved in the simultaneous movement, including Jamaat and then give their opinion.

When informed that the quota reform students want Muhammad Yunus as chief of the interim government, Fakhrul said, "If the president wants a name from us, we will propose our nomination. It is the jurisdiction of the president but we have full confidence in the students. We expressed our solidarity with the students' movement."

Regarding the return of Tarique Rahman, the party leaders have already requested him to return to Bangladesh soon. "We have requested him to come back and he will soon," Fakhrul said.

Students step up to ensure order

Science Lab, and New Market areas. In their absence, students were seen managing traffic flow.

In Shyamoli, students organised separate lanes for different types of vehicles to ensure smooth traffic movement. They made sure that vehicles, including rickshaws and motorcycles, followed proper routes and did not block intersections.

In addition, approximately 200 students took on security duties at various police stations, churches, and temples in Mirpur.

"We've been stationed at Mirpur Police Station and all churches and temples in Mirpur since 9:00am," said a student who along with others has been guarding the police station.

The police station had been set on fire by a mob the previous night, causing significant damage.

In the aftermath, students found an abandoned firearm, damaged firearms, ammunition, a grenade, and a walkie-talkie, and have requested that the army take custody of these items.

In response to the situation, the Ansar headquarters announced that members of Bangladesh Ansar and VDP will now oversee traffic management in and around the capital.

Meanwhile, a group of students were seen cleaning the premises of the Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban, which was ransacked a mob on Monday following Hasina's resignation.

Several photos of students voluntarily cleaning the iconic building were doing rounds on social media. They were seen sweeping the ground and cleaning open spaces of the important structure.

A number of volunteers were also seen collecting valuables that had been looted from Gono Bhaban and the parliament. Some people, who looted the valuables, were seen handing over those to the volunteers, who then returned them to the authorities.

Maj Gen AKM Aminul Haque, director general of Bangladesh Ansar & VDP, said, "There are no police personnel at any police stations across the country, nor any Armed Police Battalion (APBn) at the airports. Following directions from the army chief and the air force chief, we have been tasked with deploying forces to ensure the security of police stations and airports."

He said forces are being deployed in phases across the country, with an initial focus on securing police stations and other critical establishments.

vandalism occurs here or in nearby buildings. We will close the site after 5:00pm and will not allow any visitors."

"We have rescued many books from the library, and the Bangladesh Army has brought a truck to send the books to the public library," he added.

Students and troops blocked several attempts to steal or loot from the site. At 5:00pm, while controlling the crowd, some people were caught loading construction materials onto a truck from an under-construction building.

When visitors reported this, soldiers and students quickly intervened.

The looters, identifying themselves as "contractors," were detained and taken inside the camp.

A student said, "We are protecting the site now. We will not allow any more looting or vandalism."

Students and troops blocked several attempts to steal or loot from the site.

PMO AND JS

Like on Monday, a huge number of people gathered in front of the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) yesterday, but they could not enter as army personnel had taken complete control.

Soldiers guarded the main gate.

Samiul Ahsan, along with his wife Lutfa Sahana and their two children, came to the PMO. "I saw people enter the PMO yesterday, so I came, but I could not enter today [yesterday]," Samiul said.

Some people stood at the gate, asking the army personnel to take pictures. Various goods, including sofa sets, were seen lying scattered on the PMO lawn.

A similar crowd was spotted at the parliament building. Many people entered the premises by rickshaws, auto-rickshaws, and motorcycles via the VIP road to the Sangsad Bhaban from the side of Gono Bhaban.

However, the main parliament building was guarded by Army personnel who were not allowing anyone inside. People walked in the open courtyard outside the building and by the lake.

Parul Akhtar, who arrived by rickshaw with her two children, said, "Yesterday, I saw on TV people inside the parliament building without any fear or obstruction. That's why I came today."

No end to UK protests

Govt expands jail capacity

REUTERS, Liverpool

The British government has increased its prison capacity to help tackle violent, week-long anti-immigrant riots that have prompted a growing number of countries to warn their citizens about the dangers of travelling in Britain.

Riots across a number of towns and cities have erupted following the murder of three girls at a Taylor Swift-themed event in Southport, a seaside town in northern England, after false messaging on social media wrongly identified the suspected killer as an Islamist migrant.

The Justice department, which is being forced to release some prisoners early as it battles a jail overcrowding crisis, said nearly 600 prison places had been secured to accommodate those engaged in violence.

Representatives lay flowers at the Peace Memorial Ceremony held at the Peace Memorial Park in Hiroshima, Japan yesterday, during ceremonies to mark the 79th anniversary of the world's first atomic bomb attack.

US ELECTION

Harris picks Walz as her running mate

REUTERS

Democratic presidential candidate Kamala Harris selected Minnesota Governor Tim Walz to be her running mate yesterday, choosing a progressive policy champion and a plain speaker from America's heartland to help win over rural, white voters, according to sources familiar with the matter.

Walz, a 60-year-old US Army National Guard veteran and former teacher, was elected to a Republican-leaning district in the US House of Representatives in 2006 and served 12 years before being elected governor of Minnesota in 2018.

As governor, Walz has pushed a progressive agenda that includes free school meals, goals for tackling climate change, tax cuts for the middle class and expanded paid leave for Minnesota workers.

Walz has long advocated for women's reproductive rights but also displayed a conservative bent while representing a rural district in the US House, defending agricultural interests and backing gun rights.

Harris, the daughter of immigrants from Jamaica and India, is adding a popular Midwestern politician whose home state votes reliably for Democrats in presidential elections but is close to Wisconsin and Michigan, two crucial battlegrounds.

Such states are seen as crucial in deciding the November 5 election, and Walz is widely seen as skilled at connecting with white, rural voters who in recent years have voted broadly for the Republican Donald Trump, Harris' rival for the White House.

Harris chose Walz over Josh Shapiro, the governor of Pennsylvania, who had been seen as essential to delivering his crucial battleground state.

Haniyeh's killing aims to prolong Gaza offensive

Says Palestinian President Abbas before Moscow visit

REUTERS

The killing of Hamas leader Ismail Haniyeh was intended to prolong the Gaza conflict, Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas told Russia's state news agency, adding that he will discuss the regional crisis with President Vladimir Putin in Moscow.

RIA, citing a diplomatic source, said Abbas will come on a long-expected visit to Moscow on August 12-14.

Haniyeh, the political leader of Palestinian group Hamas, was assassinated in the Iranian capital Tehran last week in an attack that drew threats of revenge on Israel and fuelled concern that the conflict in Gaza was turning into a wider Middle East war.

In an interview published by state news agency RIA yesterday, Abbas said he considers Haniyeh's assassination "a cowardly act and a dangerous development in Israeli politics".

"There is no doubt the purpose of Mr Haniyeh's assassination is to prolong the war and expand its scope," he said. "It will have a negative impact on the ongoing negotiations to end the aggression and withdraw Israeli troops from Gaza."

The interview was published in Russian. Haniyeh was the face of Hamas' international diplomacy since the offensive started on October 7, 2023, and had been taking part in internationally brokered efforts to reach a ceasefire in Gaza.

Iran, which backs Hamas, has blamed Israel for the killing and said it will "punish" it. Israeli officials have not claimed responsibility.

Abbas also told RIA that the Gaza Strip must be transferred to the control of the legitimate Palestinian authorities.

"We strongly oppose Israeli plans that provide for some temporary solutions," he said.

Russia, which has forged close ties both with Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei and Arab leaders including Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman, has condemned Haniyeh's killing and called on all parties to refrain from further destabilisation of Middle East.

75 migrants rescued off Greece

AFP, Athens

The Greek coastguard yesterday said it had rescued 75 migrants in an area where one of the Mediterranean's worst migrant shipwrecks occurred last year.

They were on board a sailboat southwest of the Peloponnese coastal town of Pylos and will be taken to the port of Kalamata, the coastguard said, without mentioning the nationalities or port of origin.

In June 2023, a rusty and overloaded trawler sailing out of Tobruk in Libya believed to be carrying more than 750 people sank southwest of Pylos.

There were 104 survivors, but more than 600 people are considered to have perished.

Dozens of survivors have filed a criminal complaint against the Greek coastguard, alleging that they took hours to respond despite warnings from EU border agency Frontex and the NGO Alarm Phone.

The Italian coast guard said on Sunday two migrants died and one was still missing after a boat carrying more than 30 people sank around 17 miles south-east of the Italian city of Syracuse, Sicily.

After receiving a distress call late on Saturday, a coast guard boat and an aircraft went to the area, rescued 34 people and took them to the port of Syracuse, the authority said in a statement.

AL stares at a 'political death'

during the recent protest, she failed to inspire party men to come to the streets," he said over the phone so sheepishly that it was difficult to hear.

Asked about the future of the party, he replied, "I first need to save my life. The thought of the future of the party can wait," he said, sounding frustrated.

Both leaders said Hasina's last efforts to bring partymen on the Streets to resist protesters that killed around 100 people across the country on Sunday to survive was a wrong decision. By making this decision, she set Awami League against the countrymen.

Hasina created a circle around her with some opportunists who "used" the party and the government for their personal benefits. Their advice has destroyed her own political career, a historical party like Awami League and tens of millions of party leaders and activists.

Whereabouts of the top party leaders and ministers of the immediate past cabinet are also not clear, as many have gone into hiding to save their lives amid violent attacks on ruling party men in different parts of the country.

Some of them, including Junaid Ahmad Palak and Hasan Mahmud, were reportedly caught at the airport while trying to flee the country yesterday. Several others were also beaten up.

According to the officials at the Dhaka airport, the civil aviation authority also detained general secretary of Bangladesh Chattra League's Dhaka University unit Tanbir Hasan Shaikat and the student body's Dhaka North unit president Riaz Mahmud. The detainees were handed over to the Bangladesh Army, according to officials.

Besides, the family members of two former ministers -- education minister Mohibul Hasan Chowdhury and Local Government, Rural Development and Cooperatives minister Md Tazul Islam left the country through the airport.

Former finance minister Abul Hassan Mahmood Ali, sports minister Nazmul Hassan Papon and Mayor of Dhaka South City Corporation Sheikh Fazle Noor Taposh also left the country through the airport since Sunday, sources said.

Former MP of Munshiganj-3 Mrinal Kanti Das also left the country.

Bangla daily Prothom Alo yesterday reported that Hasina was in favour of using greater force till the last moment, even as security personnel and top police officials declined to continue the bloodshed.

By Monday noon, tens of millions of people were marching towards the capital and Gono Bhaban with their one-point demand for her to leave office.

According to the Bangla daily, on Monday morning Hasina pushed top leaders of different law enforcement agencies and armed forces to take harsher actions against the protesters. She also refused to accept the briefing by the security personnel that the situation was completely out control.

Some of the party leaders and her advisers who were present at that time requested her to resign and hand over power to the armed forces, but Hasina did not pay any heed and asked them to strengthen the curfew instead, according to the report.

Hasina also expressed resentment at the top bosses of the armed forces and law enforcement agencies for their failure to tackle the situation and contain the protesters. Later, after consulting with her younger sister Sheikh Rehana, who was at Gono Bhaban with her, and her son Sajeeb Wazed, who is in the US, Hasina decided to step down.

According to Prothom Alo, Hasina at the last moment wanted to record a speech addressing the nation, but she was not given the time as there was intel that protesters would occupy Gono Bhaban in 45 minutes.

Hasina was given 45 minutes to pack up. She and her sister then left Gono Bhaban for Bangabhaban where she tendered her resignation to the president. Hasina took off in a military aircraft around 2:30pm and landed in India around 5:36pm.

'VERY SHORT NOTICE'

Indian external affairs minister S Jaishankar told an all-party meeting yesterday that Sheikh Hasina requested permission "at very short notice" to come to India following her forced resignation.

He also said Hasina, was in shock at the turn of events, reports Indian news portal NDTV.

He said the Indian government will give Hasina time to decide her next step.

There was discussion that Hasina may fly to the UK from India.

However, British immigration rules do not allow individuals to travel to that country to seek asylum or temporary refuge, the UK Home Office told NDTV yesterday, amid speculation that Hasina will seek asylum in that country.

The UK government also said individuals seeking asylum must do so "in the first safe country they reach".

"The UK has a proud record of providing protection for people who need it. However, there is no provision for someone to be allowed to travel to the UK to seek asylum or temporary refuge," a UK Home Office spokesperson stated.

Also, amid growing queries on visa status of Hasina and others, the US said visa records are confidential under the US law, reports UNB.

"Visa records are confidential under US law; therefore, we do not discuss the details of individual visa cases," a spokesperson at the US Embassy in Dhaka told reporters yesterday.

At the same time, the DS30, the index for blue-chip stocks, increased 75 points, or 4 percent, to 1,934.

The DSES, the index for Shariah-based firms, advanced 32 points, or 2.86 percent, to 1,176.

This rare change in the political situation gave hope to investors because they knew that only a change in the regulatory body cannot ensure good governance in the market, said Saiful Islam, president of DSE Brokers' Association (DBA).

Bangladesh's stock market has been languishing in the face of violence centring the quota reform movement since the second half of July. Trading was closed for four days because of general holidays following a curfew.

Between July 15 and August 5, the DSEX lost 4.64 percent.

DBA President Islam said if the banking sector does not suffer that much of a damage, the stock market will run smoothly.

On the other hand, the index and turnover had plunged to a massive extent over the last couple of days and now those had come back to that of an average day, he said.

Turnover, an important indicator of the market, soared 262 percent to Tk 750 crore.

This type of turnover is common in the market but recently it dropped below Tk 500 crore due to the instability, Islam said.

"The market is full of junk shares, and low-performing companies and the market are behaving like a casino," he said.

Most of the owners of listed companies are into the share business instead of focusing on their own business. The regulator has not taken strong steps against these activities, Islam said.

Now, people are hopeful of proper regulatory activities and good governance in the stock market under a new government, he added.

A similar trend was witnessed at Chittagong Stock Exchange. The Caspi, the broad index of the port city bourse, surged 467 points, or 3 percent, to 15,393.

Mir Ariful Islam, managing director and chief executive officer of Sandhani Asset Management, said people now have hope which was the main reason behind the rise.

During another change in government on November 1, 2007, the then broad index of the DSE had gone up around 17 percent in one month. So, a rise in the stock market during any historical regime change is expected, he added.

A mid-level official of a leading stock brokerage firm said after the resignation of Sheikh Hasina, investors were optimistic about the return of good governance in the market.

So, they were buying stocks which had remained at a low price for many years. The participation of people also rose based on that optimism, he added.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission Chairman Prof Shibli Rubayat-Ul Islam did not come to office yesterday. A commission meeting scheduled for tomorrow was also postponed.

IMF says it is 'fully committed' to Bangladesh

REUTERS, London

The International Monetary Fund said it remained "fully committed to Bangladesh and its people" after protests ousted the prime minister.

Bangladesh's president dissolved parliament on Tuesday, clearing the way for new elections a day after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled the country following student-led protests that left hundreds dead.

Long-term lending from multilaterals including the IMF, World Bank and the Asia Development Bank amounts to roughly a quarter of Bangladesh's GDP, according to emerging market experts Tellimer, making their continued backing key to the country's economy.

The IMF, which approved a $4.7 billion loan programme with the country in January 2023, said it was following developments and "deeply saddened by loss of lives and injuries."

"We remain fully committed to Bangladesh and its people and support efforts to ensure economic stability and deliver inclusive growth," IMF says

"We remain fully committed to Bangladesh and its people and support efforts to ensure economic stability and deliver inclusive growth," an IMF spokesperson said in an emailed statement.

On Monday, the World Bank, which had total commitments of $2.85 billion in the year to June 30, said it was still assessing the impact of the events on its lending, but remained committed to Bangladesh's development.

Bangladesh does not have any foreign currency bonds, and its short-term external debt is just 5 percent of GDP, limiting market reaction to the political turmoil.

But a stagnant economy contributed to the protests; nearly 32 million young people in the nation of 170 million are out of work or education in a population. Inflation hovers around 10 percent per year and dollar reserves have shrunk to just three months of import cover.

Multilateral lenders will be closely watching the next steps taken by the government and the military.

Absence of security affects banking services

AM JAHID

Although banks reopened yesterday, a day after prime minister Sheikh Hasina handed in her resignation, overall activities including financial transactions were affected due to security concerns among lenders and clients.

Many banks operated on a limited scale across the country, closing outlets and booths in areas where the risk is greater amid the absence of law enforcement agencies, according to bankers.

Due to similar concerns, banks could not deliver cash to branches or ATM booths, reducing financial transactions significantly.

The security concerns deepened in Dhaka and the rest of the country yesterday as police observed a work abstention, citing that they feared for their own safety amid reports of deadly attacks on policemen on Monday night.

Bangladesh has been in turmoil since July, with over 300 dead in clashes between protesting students, police and ruling party men.

Reports of violence and arson also flared on Monday night as an interim government was in the process of being formed.

Apart from the limited presence of army personnel, streets and important establishments in the capital were without security.

In the absence of traffic police, students were seen controlling the flow of traffic on the streets around the country.

Naser Ezaz Bijoy, chief executive officer of Standard Chartered Bangladesh, said they resumed operations on a limited scale yesterday.

AT A GLANCE

- Many banks operated on a limited scale
- Most branches and ATM booths were closed
- Presence of clients and bankers was thin
- Cash transportation was affected
- Transactions were significantly lower
- Security concerns deepen in absence of police force

"As police services are not available, we stopped operating in places where we feel there is less security or the situation is uncomfortable," he said.

Based on their security assessment, Bijoy said they provided banking services through only four of their 18 branches across the country, three in Dhaka and the other in Chattogram.

Besides, banking operations were halted in Khulna, Sylhet and Bogura.

"We have taken this decision to ensure the safety of our clients and colleagues amid security concerns due to the absence of law enforcement agencies," he said.

The doors of several banks were closed in Motijheel but some branches operated through pocket gates.

Many banks operated on a limited scale across the country, closing outlets and ATM booths in areas where the risk is greater amid the absence of law enforcement agencies, bankers said

Selim RF Hussain, chairman of the Association of Bankers Bangladesh, said banks opted for risk assessment of branches in line with the suggestion of Bangladesh Bank and opened branches accordingly.

He added that there was panic yesterday. "But this will reduce as things normalise. So, more branches will be opened," added Hussain, also managing director of BRAC Bank.

A senior official of Eastern Bank Ltd said the private lender could not open all its branches yesterday due to security concerns.

"We have kept branches shut in areas with a risk of violence and robbery. Customers' presence was also very thin," he said.

Golam Maula, a resident of Indira Road in Dhaka, said he could not withdraw money as ATM booths were closed due to violence over the last few days.

He has already run out of cash, he lamented.

"Most of the booths in the surrounding area are closed, so I could not even withdraw money yesterday," he said.

Syed Mahbubur Rahman, managing director and CEO of Mutual Trust Bank Ltd (MTB), said they also operated on a limited scale because of the prevailing situation.

"Those who felt unsafe did not come," he said.

He also mentioned that miscreants vandalised and stole an ATM from their branch in Madaripur.

However, the presence of customers was significantly low in the capital as clients did not take any services unless there was an emergency.

An official of a state-owned bank in Motijheel said fewer customers have been seeking services for the past several weeks due to the unrest centring the students' movement.

"But it was significantly lower yesterday, owing to security concerns in absence of security personnel," he said.

On the other hand, there were also fewer employees and most of them only worked a half-day.

Bijoy of Standard Chartered said many clients refrained from taking banking services yesterday as the decision to reopen banks came very late on Monday night.

Lamenting the death of an employee during the recent unrest, he said: "It is a big loss for us. So, we must ensure the safety of our clients and colleagues."

"If law enforcement agencies can ensure security and we feel that there is a safe environment through our assessment, then we will operate all the branches," Bijoy added.

Shop owners on high alert for looting, vandalism

They are counting huge losses as many stores and shopping malls are closed across the country

SUKANTA HALDER

Fearing looting and vandalism amidst the political crisis that culminated in Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation following 15 years at the helm of an iron-fisted regime, many shops and malls in the country were closed yesterday, causing huge losses for businesses.

Businessmen said many establishments and shops were looted, attacked and vandalised across different parts of the country, including the capital of Dhaka, for the past two days due to a complete collapse of law and order.

Consequently, businesspeople did not open their shops while malls remained closed. Many traders were also seen standing in front of their shops ready to protect their goods.

Soumik Das, chief executive officer of Rang Bangladesh, said all 20 of their outlets across the country were closed yesterday due to the unsafe atmosphere.

"I have seen various news reports of people's business places being looted. In this situation it is not possible to open our outlet," he said.

The glass storefront of their outlet in Netrokona was broken, he said, adding that if the situation improves, the outlet would be opened on Wednesday.

Even if the shop is reopened, buyers will not be seen anytime soon, Das lamented.

After groups of miscreants realised that the country's law and order system had collapsed in the immediate aftermath of the fall of the Awami League-led government, they started looting and causing mayhem on a massive scale.

Inspector General of Police Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun yesterday urged all members of the force to patiently perform their duties.

"I am requesting all members of the police to perform their duties with patience and strong morale while maintaining their security," he said in a video message sent by Police Headquarters.

Clashes between protestors, Awami League (AL) men and law enforcement agents on Monday left at least 66 people dead and over a thousand wounded in the capital while at least 76 people were killed and around 500 others injured outside the capital city.

Angry mobs also attacked AL leaders as well as their properties, homes and offices soon after the news of Sheikh Hasina's resignation and escape from the country spread.

AM Salimullah, sales manager of Kay Kraft, a retailer of fashion wear, accessories, home textiles, handicrafts and handloom-based products, said 14 of their 16 outlets were closed yesterday.

They only opened outlets at Jamuna Future Park and Police Plaza Shopping Mall in Dhaka, he said.

Meanwhile, most roadside shops alongside shopping complexes in Dinajpur and Rangpur have remained shut since Monday, according to the traders.

During a visit to different places in Dinajpur on Tuesday, including Gulsan Market, Begum Plaza and Maldhapatti as well as malls and showrooms of different brands, our correspondent found all of them closed.

Reza Humayun Kabir Chowdhury Shamim, president of the Dinajpur Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said shops remained closed in Dinajpur due to fear of looting, adding that most traders were guarding their shops.

Most businesses in Sylhet also remained closed yesterday for similar reasons.

Abdur Rahman Ripon, joint secretary of the Bangladesh Dokan Malik Samity's Sylhet unit, said: "Many businesses, including a megamall, were looted during the chaos on Monday. Most businessmen are in fear.

"We encouraged business owners to reopen businesses. Together, we will work to protect each other."

Malls and shops in Narayanganj were also closed. They are thinking of opening the market from Wednesday.

Atiqul Islam, owner of Samir Fashion at the Riverview Complex in the Tanbazar area, said: "Some traders went to the market in the morning. They wanted to open their shops, but the market committee decided not to reopen yesterday considering the overall situation."

Visiting five shopping malls in Narsingdi sadar upazila, it was found that all of them were closed.

However, some businessmen were sitting in front of the mall and providing security.

Mahim Islam Sajib, owner of Sajib Brothers at Narsingdi Index Plaza, said AL leaders had been in charge of the market management committee for a long time.

But now, miscreants can attack their business places as they don't have any backing, not even from law enforcement.

"The law enforcement agencies, including the police, are in no position to help us. So, shops are closed," he said.

He said it is not possible to resume business if security is not strengthened.

Kongkon Karmaker from Dinajpur, Dwoha Chowdhury from Sylhet, Saurav Hossain Siam from Narayanganj and Jahidul Islam from Narsingdi contributed to this report.

Goods transport in limbo as operators play it safe

Assessment stopped at customs houses; passenger transport resumes on a limited scale

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Intercity and long-route passenger transport providers resumed bus services on a limited scale yesterday afternoon amid a lack of passengers, but transport of goods remained largely halted, according to sector insiders, especially with assessment activities halted at three customs houses around the country.

They added that passengers would not feel comfortable travelling and transporters would not risk their vehicles and cargo until security is assured around the country following a spate of unrest.

The streets of Bangladesh convulsed with violence and death over the last three weeks, leaving over 300 dead, the vast majority of whom were student protesters.

The movement, which has been raging since July, climaxed on Monday with Sheikh Hasina handing in her resignation from the post of prime minister.

However, many reports of violence and arson were reported in the aftermath.

Due to security concerns stemming from the uncertainty clouding the nation, customs officials stopped assessment activities at several stations, including Chattogram, Dhaka and Benapole Customs House, from 1:30 pm on Tuesday.

Officials also said the clearance of goods from the port was low.

According to the Chattogram Port Authority, importers released 1,350 containers by 4:00pm on Tuesday. However, on average, the port authority releases 6,000 to 8,000 containers each day.

"There was a lack of security considering that a customs house is an important establishment. So, customs operations were stopped from 1:30pm in line with orders from senior officials," an official of the Chattogram Customs House told The Daily Star.

"The army later assured us of security from Wednesday and we hope our operations will be normal from Thursday."

Mohammed Amirul Haque, managing director of Premier Cement Mill Limited, added that businesses cannot stabilise until normality is restored.

He said that delivery of goods as well as import and export activities are yet to start, adding: "We will not start delivery of cement to dealers and retailers until the situation stabilises."

Since the political landscape changed drastically just a day prior, he said more time was needed to observe the situation.

"When the situation is favourable, we will resume business activities," he stated.

Chowdhury Zafar Ahmed, general secretary of the Bangladesh Covered Van-Truck-Prime Mover Goods Transport Owners Association, said they did not begin operations as importers are yet to start releasing imported goods due to a lack of security along the Dhaka-Chattogram highway.

According to him, until the situation becomes normal, transport owners will not operate regularly.

"There is no alternative but to wait for everything to become normal," he said.

However, some transport providers began providing bus services.

Md Abdus Sattar, general manager of air-conditioned bus service provider Green Line, said their buses began operating on seven routes yesterday noon on a test basis.

"But the number of passengers is very low and business is unviable," he said.

He added that they resumed operations to help their staff and workers, who are paid on a daily basis.

At best, 20 to 30 of their fleet of 200 buses operated yesterday, he said.

Meanwhile, Hanif Enterprise began operating buses on all routes yesterday noon, with an official remarking that the situation was gradually becoming normal.

However, he added that the number of passengers was low due to security concerns.

Garment factories to reopen today

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Garment factory owners yesterday decided to reopen their production units from today to ensure timely shipments as they are facing pressure from international clothing retailers and brands.

The decision was taken at a meeting of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA) at its office in Dhaka, confirmed a BGMEA director alongside a statement of the platform afterwards.

The reopening was decided for the fact that factory owners would have to continue to pay workers' wages, said the director, adding that if the goods are not produced and shipped timely, the buyers would not clear payments.

This will result in factory owners failing to pay workers on time, he said.

The garment factories were kept shut initially for three days and then for another four days over a student movement which led to the resignation of Sheikh Hasina from the post of prime minister.

Industry insiders, exporters and international retailers and brands have already expressed concern over the delays in production and suspension of transportation of raw materials to the factories and shipment of goods.

July, August and September comprise the peak season for both shipment of Christmas goods and for booking work orders for the next summer and spring seasons.

Mohammad Ali Khokon, president of Bangladesh Textile Mills Association, said he did not ask anybody to reopen their units but anyone could do so at their own risk as law and order was still to improve.

Mohammad Ali Khokon, president of Bangladesh Textile Mills Association, said he did not ask anybody to reopen their units but anyone could do so at their own risk as law and order was still to improve.

Mohammad Hatem, executive president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA), said they would also reopen factories from today despite the risks as there was pressure from international retailers and brands for the timely shipment of goods.

Garment exporters are expecting a strong recovery in exports and business as normalcy is being gradually restored with the changing political scenario.

Another BGMEA director who was present at the meeting said another reason behind reopening factories was to keep workers busy so that they did not get involved in any unrest.

Most factories will pay workers' salaries today or tomorrow, the director said, adding that if the factories were not reopened, it would be difficult to disburse the salaries.

However, the factory owners also decided to shut down their units whenever they sense any unrest to save their business and properties, the director also said, asking not to be named.

The apparel exporters have been facing challenges in sending goods to retailers through the Chattogram port amidst the violence.

Islami Bank staff demonstrate alleging deprivation

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Over 100 officials and staff of Islami Bank Bangladesh yesterday staged a demonstration in front of the bank's head office in Dhaka's Motijheel alleging that they were deprived of benefits and promotions.

They also took down and destroyed portraits of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina and her father Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

Some officials also vandalised the "Bangabandu Corner", located at the bank's head office in Dilkusha, said officials of the bank.

Hasina resigned and fled the country on Monday in the face of deadly protests centring a public job quota reform movement.

The demonstrators alleged that senior officials of Chattogram-based S Alam Group, which bought a majority stake in Islami Bank in 2017, hired bankers of their choice and deprived many officials who were appointed earlier of their benefits.

They also alleged that appointments were made through irregularities and did not follow due procedure since then and so such appointments should be cancelled.

They also sought the reinstatement of officials who were "illegally" sacked.

From the demonstration, Anisur Rahman, a leader of the Collective Bargaining Agent (CBA) of the bank, said executives who joined after 2017 must not be allowed to stay in the bank.

Those who have been deprived of promotions should be promoted accordingly, they demanded.

Insiders said many officials were forced to quit jobs while many junior officers were promoted to senior positions after the change in ownership.

Islami Bank officials said Managing Director Mohammed Monirul Moula met with the CBA leaders and assured that he would provide promotions gradually.

The Daily Star tried to reach Moula over the phone but he did not pick up.

'We had to save our jobs'

BB deputy governor says over irregularities in banking sector

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

A deputy governor of Bangladesh Bank yesterday said they often had to turn a blind eye towards irregularities as they have limited capacity to fight against politically influential people who bring about such malpractices.

"We have to manage various things in order to save our jobs as we too need job security," said the official, Md Khurshid Alam.

"We have to work with many limitations to save our jobs, which are contractual. This leaves the scope to terminate us at any time with three months' salary as severance pay," he added.

He also said the authorities can hire or sack people as they wish, making it very difficult to fight against influential people engaged in malpractices, especially those who are politically connected.

Alam made these comments in response to journalists' queries about the cause of widespread corruption, money laundering and other irregularities in the country's banking sector.

He was speaking at a view-exchange meeting between journalists, led by Economic Reporters Forum (ERF) President Refayet Ullah Mirdha, and Bangladesh Bank officials at the central bank headquarters in Dhaka.

Four deputy governors of the Bangladesh Bank -- Kazi Sayedur Rahman, Nurun Nahar, Md Khurshid Alam and Md Habibur Rahman -- its Executive Director and Spokesperson Md Mezbaul Haque and ERF General Secretary Abul Kashem were also present.

The ERF president said as a guardian of Bangladesh's banking sector, the central bank should look into the situation of default loans, which now stand at more than Tk 182,000 crore.

Also, money launderers and other corrupt people in the banking sector should be identified and punished accordingly, he added.

Bangladesh Bank Governor Abdur Rouf Talukder was absent from his office yesterday.

On the reason behind the absence, Bangladesh Bank Deputy Governor Kazi Sayedur Rahman said Talukder has fallen sick and was still inside the country.

However, a confidential source said the central bank governor was likely to resign from his post and to try to leave the country as soon as possible.

Rahman, whose tenure as deputy governor will end soon, told journalists that the central bank was working to restructure the banking sector and was ready to work with the new government.

In a step for improving transparency in its activities, Bangladesh Bank yesterday withdrew the restriction on journalists' entry to the central bank.

Rahman said all types of information would now be freely shared with journalists, as was the case before the restriction was imposed in April.

Bangladesh Bank had taken the decision at a time when the country's economy was facing several challenges, including growing irregularities in the financial sector, high inflation and a forex crisis.

During an emergency meeting without their governor, high-ups of the central bank instructed all its staff to keep calm amidst the changing situation to avoid conflict.

A source at Bangladesh Bank said Rahman has instructed them not to disclose any information on social media or other platforms amid the ongoing situation.

US retailers' body wants quick restoration of normalcy

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

The American Apparel & Footwear Association (AAFA) hoped the situation would improve and normalcy would be restored soon in Bangladesh, which is the third largest garment supplier to the USA.

"We are heartbroken by the ongoing tragedy in Bangladesh that has taken hundreds of lives. We continue to urge calm and urge all sides to come together peacefully so we can jointly move past this crisis," AAFA President and CEO Steve Lamar said in a statement on Monday.

"It is imperative that full democratic institutions be maintained and stability be assured. These are key steps in supporting the lives and livelihoods of Bangladeshi citizens and ensuring short-term disruptions will indeed be temporary," Lamar also said.

The AAFA released the statement in response to Sheikh Hasina handing in her resignation from the post of prime minister on Monday in line with the demands of protesting students.

Bangladesh is the third-largest supplier of garments to the US and has been a fast-growing supplier of footwear and travel goods as well, the statement also said.

The USA is Bangladesh's single-largest export destination and is considered by American clothing retailers and brands as an important sourcing destination for their end-consumers.

Injustice must not beget injustice

Attacks on minorities and lootings must stop

As we venture into a brave new world, we are alarmed to see celebrations of the fall of Sheikh Hasina spiral into vengeful violence and attacks on minority communities. At least 142 people were killed in attacks and clashes around the country, with thousands injured, and Hindu houses and businesses were looted and torched in at least 27 districts, on the day the students' movement declared "independence" from the Awami League's authoritarian regime, dampening the mood of celebration for many. We also saw major public establishments, including those of great historical importance, being desecrated or set on fire, without any consideration that these do not belong to the Awami League but to the country and its people. In short, it was anarchy in many places around the capital and all over the country, with mobs taking out their pent-up anger on those associated with the Awami League and members of law enforcement, going so far as to burn some of them alive. The latter, in many places, opened fire on the agitating mob, leading to more deaths. The army, who stated they were taking control of the country after Hasina's resignation, were conspicuously missing from the scene, even as people were killed and their houses burnt to ashes.

Such looting and vandalism are perhaps expected following the fall of any regime, yet we cannot but be disheartened that a movement that was built on the premise of anti-discrimination should descend into such ruthless intolerance. A movement which was against mindless killings cannot be allowed to conduct brutal killings of its own, no matter how grievous the accusations against the persons on whom the violence is conducted; otherwise, we become the very monsters we sought to overturn. The rule of law and justice must prevail, not revenge; and law enforcers and members of Awami League who were involved in killing, corruption and all forms of injustice must be tried under the law. In this regard, the students' movement has already condemned the attacks and called upon all to refrain from lynching, looting and attacks on minorities and to stop any such violence from taking place in their communities. In many places, it has been heartening to see students and civilians, including madrasa students, setting up committees to protect temples, churches or houses of minorities. This is the Bangladesh we want to (re)build, one where we come together to protect those vulnerable, ensure the rights guaranteed by our constitution and uphold the values of the Liberation War.

While the mob descended into madness, we were flabbergasted to see the inaction of the army in ensuring peace and people's security, and protecting key historical sites of the nation. We need not remind them that the responsibility of the deaths and destruction lies with those running the country. We urge them to restore the rule of law, identify the perpetrators of arson, vandalism and killings, and take urgent steps to ensure security of the minorities. We cannot let the sacrifices of our students go in vain—we must uphold their vision of free, just and democratic society for all.

Stabilising economy is a top priority

There are many hurdles to overcome in the coming days

It goes without saying that Bangladesh's economy stands at a critical juncture. It has been suffering immensely amidst all the political unrest of late and the prolonged crisis that preceded it. Following Sheikh Hasina's resignation as prime minister, we're now in the process of having an interim government. It is, therefore, crucial to take advantage of the normalisation of the situation to kick-start economic activities with full vigour, and bring the country on a path of recovery.

Among the main challenges we are facing are high inflation, falling foreign exchange reserves, high burden of default loans, poor governance in banking sector (and in general), and corruption. On top of that, the recent spate of violence leading to the massive destruction of public and private properties will have terrible impacts on the economy. Hence, it is urgent for order to be restored and for any further act of vandalism to stop. The air of uncertainty regarding the type of government that will be formed next needs to be addressed. It must be remembered that the system of governance has become so corrupt that people's democratic and economic aspirations cannot be met without significant structural changes.

Parallel to bringing back normalcy in the country and ensuring justice, all forms of disruption to internet connection and other communications have to be prevented. Moreover, regular educational and business activities need to be resumed with full vigour to restore confidence among people. Transportation and logistical operations received significant hits during recent weeks. These must also be resumed with utmost urgency. And the supply chain disruptions that are leading to rising inflation must be fixed.

There are a number of systemic issues that have been plaguing the banking sector, all regulatory bodies, stock market, bond market, the insurance industry, and the tax administration. So, separate committees need to be set up to identify and address the problems plaguing these sectors. While these steps are taken, it must be recognised that lower-income groups are already enduring severe financial hardship. They cannot wait for committees to be set up and for things to stabilise. Many need urgent help, for which we request the relevant departments to take special initiatives including social safety measures.

Ultimately, the political and economic quagmire that the country currently finds itself in has been the result of years of undemocratic practices. So while we focus on fixing the damage that has been done in recent weeks and over the years, we must strive to transition to a more democratic system so that rent-seeking, inequality and all other economic ills can be overcome in the long run.

AWAMI LEAGUE'S CRUSHING FALL

Does it augur true victory of the people?

Dr Iftekharuzzaman is executive director at Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB).

IFTEKHARUZZAMAN

The humiliating fall of Sheikh Hasina and her party the Awami League represents a powerful reaffirmation of the invincibility of people's power, particularly youth power. It has opened the gateway to an extraordinary political transformation catalysed by a completely non-political and peaceful quota reform protests that grew into the anti-discrimination movement. The youth and civic uprising has shattered the foundations and structures of a political regime that not only failed to learn the important lessons of youth power in our history—of which the party itself was the main beneficiary on several occasions—but also failed to realise that they were incessantly inviting disastrous consequences for themselves.

The unaccountable abuse of power and unbridled corruption with impunity in a monopolised politico-governance space, dependent on politicised and professionally bankrupt state institutions, blinded them to the extent that they developed a culture of ridiculing the writing on the wall and paid the inevitable price.

The student movement soon transformed into a people's movement, thanks to the spontaneous participation of common people protesting not only the use of force by law enforcement agencies, but also the misrule symbolised by abysmal governance failures. It represented a powerful outburst of public sentiment against the use of political, public or governmental positions as licences for corruption and self-enrichment at the expense of the vast majority of people thrust into a day-to-day survival crisis due to the failure to manage the economic situation. By then, all indicators were clear about the inevitable outcome.

The price paid in terms of hundreds of deaths and multi-dimensional violations of the fundamental rights of students, children, adolescents, and common people is enormous and must be accounted for. These tragedies and losses could have been avoided if not for the regime's intransigent ostrich syndrome and the state institutions, whose only capital was blatant lies, which distanced them further from the people. The anti-discrimination movement led by the students will forever remain a lesson for the political leaders of Bangladesh that, when politicians turn into authoritarians, they only defeat themselves, and that youth-led people's power cannot be suppressed by any form or level of force.

Sheikh Hasina's exit marks the fall of an authoritarian regime, but whether it will eventually lead to a sufficiently robust democratic transition, consistent with the true spirit and aspirations of the youth movement and the people at large, remains to be seen. This will depend on whether the transition government and its successor can deliver a genuine overhaul of the state structure, particularly the key state institutions mandated to ensure genuine public participation and representation in governance, rule of law, justice, transparency, accountability, and fundamental freedoms. Failure to ensure these may not only take us back to business as usual, but also push us from the frying pan into the fire.

On top of the challenges ahead for true victory is the issue of accountability for everyone involved, without fear or favour, who was responsible for various injustices and violations during the movement—a promise made by the new authority. Will this accountability be based on a nationally and internationally acceptable investigation conducted by a fully independent commission, possibly at the initiative of the United Nations? How robust will the scope of accountability be? Will it address only those who indiscriminately used disproportionate force and lethal weapons, or will it also include those who ordered and approved such multi-level and multi-dimensional violations of human rights? Will the accountability agenda encompass the security agencies for their systematic and blatant abuse of power? What about the vested groups that intruded into the movement space to exacerbate the chaos as part of their own agendas?

What about the vengeful violence in the name of celebrating the downfall of the ousted regime, and no less ominously, the targeted attacks against religious minorities, including killings, looting, vandalism, and the destruction of properties such as temples? What about various professionals, such as media workers, who have been victims of violent and targeted revenge, or have lost their jobs without due process? The same applies to government officials, including police officers, who have been subjected to revenge. The students have demanded accountability and justice through due process, not revenge and mob justice. Targeted attacks on minorities or others based on any marker of identity are completely contradictory to the core agenda and spirit of the anti-discrimination movement. Why, then, can these not be immediately stopped and those responsible brought to justice?

The list of aspirations of the student movement is both pertinent and challenging. Will the interim government undertake the task of creating a framework and process for overhauling the state structure, including the key institutions involved in establishing the rule of law, which the government will be required to follow? The current state of politicisation, dysfunction, and professional bankruptcy in our institutions is the result of decades of deliberately sustained governance deficits. Whether the interim government and its successor will have the courage and strength to undertake such a project remains to be seen.

No less important are the issues surrounding the politico-institutional and legal context related to fundamental rights such as freedom of expression, the right to protest, freedom of assembly, media freedom, and the right to privacy. An atmosphere of intimidation and universal sense of insecurity have been created by a series of legal and institutional measures based on surveillance and securitisation as means of suppressing dissent and freedom of opinion.

Above all, how will corruption, which is the core underlying cause of the unlimited hunger for power and the zero-sum game of politics driven by a desire for permanent control, be handled? The cost of reconciling with the possibility of losing power is synonymous with losing the licence to abuse power and accumulate illicit income and wealth, both at home and abroad, through corruption, loan defaults, swindling, and money laundering. No one should be under any illusion that these "virtues" are the monopoly of the Awami League alone, especially given the track record of potential political beneficiaries of the forthcoming transition.

The vision, aspirations, and takeaways of the student movement are crystal clear to the people of the country. Whether this will be the case for the incoming power holders or not remains to be seen.

The state of politicisation, dysfunctionality and professional bankruptcy in which our institutions are today is the creation of decades of deliberately sustained governance deficits.

We must never let such an environment of fear reign again

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

The moment the news got out that Sheikh Hasina had fled Bangladesh, the mood of the entire nation changed. The feeling of invigoration was tantamount. People felt as if they had finally been able to escape the haze of oppression that clung to the back of their necks and overseen all their hesitations to speak out. It won't be an exaggeration to say that much of the celebration that we witnessed on August 5, 2024 was due to this. The final nail in the coffin of this environment of coercion had been hammered up.

Every Macbeth has their Macduff, for whom Birnam Wood arrives sooner or later. But by the time it does, the needless loss of lives, the killings, the forced disappearances and the despotic rule of might cannot merely be mopped up as casualties under the rug. For so long, an iron hand ruled and it emanated an environment of fear. The general public, overwhelmed by this fear, had to undergo a play of amnesia just to go through their day-to-day lives.

Fear cannot ever lead to forgetting. It is an untreated wound in the nation's body, and it festers around, growing worse and worse until drastic action is needed. The escalated end of Awami League's 15-year-old regime is proof of that. What we must ensure now is that it is never repeated. Increasingly, over the past decade, we have seen how slowly and efficiently the freedom to state one's views has been destroyed. Whether it be a Facebook post or an editorial in a national newspaper, self-censorship led the way for peculiar dancing around with words on paper. We barely ever said anything against the powers that be, and when we did, we had to couch our words with such fluff that we might as well have said nothing.

Journalists must understand that this is a historic event, that they must seize the moment and bring back the voice they lost over the past several years. They must take hold of their teeth and not let go. The power of words can never be underestimated. The power of unarmed youth who weathered blackouts and butchering deserve a record of their struggle. There must be a record, too, of all the grift that went around among intellectuals during this time. The reason this environment of fear was successful was in good part because of the collusion of a section of the intelligentsia, who had long traded in their morals for pitiful brushes with power. We must ensure that no tolerance is given to these grifters who moulded words over TV screens and op-ed pages to support regimes and their atrocities. We must strengthen our institutions so that journalists cannot be picked up due to captions that may go against the state narrative, or be forced to tangle with legal harassment over words of obvious satire.

Fear cannot ever lead to forgetting. It is an untreated wound in the nation's body, and it festers around, growing worse and worse until drastic action is needed. The escalated end of Awami League's 15-year-old regime is proof of that. What we must ensure now is that it is never repeated.

Consistently providing a platform to such grifters have weakened our idea of journalistic courage, resulting in a new generation having to read between the lines by nature. Sheikh Hasina's resignation does not automatically liberate our tongue, for it will take time to settle into the new order of things. The following days will also show us how congenial the new order would be. The movement will truly end when the people are able to live under a clear sky, free of an encroaching greyness of coercion and arm-twisting. That work begins now.

The cadences of a people's victory

NO STRINGS ATTACHED

AASHA MEHREEN AMIN

The thunderous sounds in the streets were no longer of sound grenades and bullets. They were the reverberating cheers of thousands of people celebrating the culmination of an arduous, painful and, sadly, bloody journey to victory. It is, no doubt, a victory of the students and the people of Bangladesh. And it is the total defeat of a leader and government that has shown their most monstrous side by turning state machinery, along with their party goons, on their own people.

This victory has come at the cost of hundreds of lives of overwhelmingly young people, mostly students. Even small children have not been spared—basically the future of this nation. Was it possible for a government to continue to stay in power after killing the country's future, for murdering ordinary citizens in cold blood? Was it possible for a leader to keep on denying the truth about these murders by her own direction, blaming them on her political opponents when the evidence is out in the open for all to see? Could any leader and cabinet be more detached from the pulse of the people, from the hearts of the youth?

The outcome of the events of the last few weeks were inevitable. Even after killing more than 200 people in less than a week and with no let up from the protesters, Sheikh Hasina's obstinance prevailed. On August 4, the violence escalated to newer levels, leaving at least 93 dead. The former prime minister had become deaf to the cries of the people, blind to the sea of blood she had spilled with the help of the police, BGB, and the unnamed goons who fired guns right beside these forces. Thus, on August 5, despite an indefinite curfew being called, in spite of the memory of those chilling sounds of impending death, the people could not be held back. In Dhaka, the eerie calmness of the morning changed very quickly with crowds forming practically on every main thoroughfare, with the biggest one in Shahbag, where everyone seemed to congregate. As hard as it is to believe, only a little while ago, protesters had been shot near the Shaheed Minar and other areas.

When the army started to clear the way for the crowd, the mood changed even more dramatically. Even before the news of the unseemly exit of the former prime minister from Gono Bhaban by helicopter started spreading, the sounds of freedom from a repressive regime that had shown just how merciless it could get to retain power, resonated throughout the streets. The incredibly brave young people of this country have steadfastly stood up once again against the full force of an autocratic government—and won!

But volatility is a constant in our reality; all too soon, things did take an ugly turn. The pent-up anger of people was displayed in the most distasteful way with the ransacking of Gono Bhaban, seen as the seat of a hated regime, setting of fire to the Bangabandhu Bhaban at Dhanmondi 32 and to police stations all over the country, and attacks on houses and businesses belonging to the Hindu community and on their temples. The feeling of jubilation was tainted by the violence which went on without any hindrance. After watching children, students and ordinary citizens being ruthlessly murdered by the orders of the government, the fury of the public is understandable. But violence cannot bring justice for violence.

This is the message that the members of the Bangladesh Student Uprising Central Committee have voiced during their press briefing on Channel 24. They have categorically told their fellow protesters to be vigilant of those taking advantage of the situation, who have carried out arson attacks and vandalism in order to malign the movement. They asked everyone to be mindful of instigators and refrain from any kind of looting, arson, communal violence and protect all minority communities and public assets. They have insisted that their movement is peaceful and has brought about a national unity that transcends political party or religion. They promised to stand against any kind of communal violence.

The clarity and determination of these young leaders is awe-inspiring. More so because we have not heard our leaders talk like this for decades. Yes, we have claimed to be a democracy for the last 33 years. Yet, when was the last time we heard words like "justice" and "equality" from the mouth of a leader? When was the last time we heard that all cases of enforced disappearances and extrajudicial killings would be tried and those involved would be brought to book?

As of this writing, a group of representatives of the movement were set to visit Bangabhaban to meet up with the president. They have made it very clear that any government that comes without the endorsement of the members of the movement would not be acceptable and would result in the continuation of the movement.

There are, of course, misgivings that the former regime will somehow manipulate the situation, that other players including extremist forces will take over. We don't know what lies ahead for us, and the uncertainty makes us jittery and holds us back from unreservedly celebrating this victory.

But listening to the resolute voices of these young people who have a clear idea of what kind of country they want to build, one that enshrines the true values of democracy, one cannot help but feel hopeful that a real change, one that will truly free us from the suffocating clutch of fear, could actually be possible. When I see young protesters managing traffic and pictures of Muslims guarding Hindu temples on social media, the feeling gets stronger. Abu Sayed and his fellow martyrs would be proud.

The sounds of freedom from a repressive regime that had shown just how merciless it could get to retain power, resonated throughout the streets of Dhaka and the rest of the country on August 5, 2024.

This is not the Bangladesh we stood in the line of fire for Mindless violence, looting, and vandalism cannot be who we are

NAZIFA RAIDAH

At 2pm on Monday, Bangladesh was freed from an autocrat. It baffles me that I can finally use the word "autocrat" on print to describe the fallen Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina because our law made sure we couldn't since 2018.

My brother and I rushed to the streets not being able to hold our excitement. The wind was electric. I had never seen so many people on the streets, with flags in their hands. Families carried their children on their shoulders, chanting slogans of victory. Rickshaw pullers saluted students, giving speeches standing on their rickshaws on how they refuse to live life under any tyrant, goons or chandabaaj (people who use their muscles to extort money).

We could breathe a sigh of relief; as Sheikh Hasina fleeing the country meant the enforced disappearances—of students, journalists and activists, police-run raids in the houses of student protesters under the directive of the former premier and the mindless killing of students at the hands of Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) had come to a stop. Bangladesh is (for now) a country free of censorship of any kind. But the joy soon transitioned to utter horror as we walked from Motijheel to Shahbagh.

At Motijheel, crowds gathered in front of Sonali Bank and ripped off the posters of the autocrat Sheikh Hasina. We cheered till we heard someone discussing how we should tear down everything built under the Awami League regime. We brushed it off at first, thinking that after such a long time, people's sense of freedom has been awakened and there will be some extreme views coming in because of this momentary period of boundless freedom.

However, as we started walking towards Shahbagh, the smiles started to fade from our faces. People were carrying army officials on their shoulders thinking they were the ones who stepped in and brought this freedom. They got on top of their armoured vehicles, raised their flags, danced. I could see some people in the public visibly uncomfortable by the scene, but they too shrugged it off because hey, we're celebrating!

When we were crossing Suhrawardy Uddyan, we could see a thick cloud of smoke from the outside, so we walked in to see what happened. Vandals had set large stages, which were set up for commemorating mourning day by the Awami League regime, on fire. A statue replicating Bangabandhu's historical March 7 speech was set on fire. We asked people to stop the fires immediately since if it spreads to a few nearby trees, the whole park would be set ablaze. In return, we got looks of disgust from people. A student wearing his ID card ran up to us and said, "We have been trying to stop these people from setting things on fire. Don't waste your breath, apu."

Worried, we started walking past the burning pandals. The smoke was so thick that it became hard to breathe and we walked into a crowd of people beating up a BCL-affiliated student with whatever they could find. Rods, bricks, bamboo, sticks—you name it.

The angry mob said they found him with weapons. There were a few students protecting the person, shouting and requesting that we hand him over to the army and not take the law in our hands. At one point, all of us, who were trying to save this person's life were being called Chhatra League or Razakar, just because we didn't want another life being taken before our eyes. As protestors, all of us who stood in the line of fire had seen enough people, particularly students, being shot, maimed, and killed. It was ironic how we were now taking hits from a mob to save the life of someone we were supposed to hate. At one point, the mob outnumbered us, and the person was beaten to death. We couldn't retrieve his identity or cross-check if he was associated with BCL fearing we might get killed.

A few of us had strayed from the mob to ask the army officials at the barrack of the Shahbagh intersection to just show up and clear the people. They said they can't help. From then on, we knew the kind of anarchy we're seeing may be only the beginning. Being on the ground, we hadn't yet heard of the communal violence on Hindu communities, temples being torched, and the attacks on Awami League affiliated members and their families, alongside policemen and their families.

We walked towards TSC and saw microbuses being set on fire. Vandals were aggressively telling people not to take videos or photographs. Chairs were being stolen from the halls and the people who looted Gono Bhaban, the prime minister's residence, were cheered on as they brought in the chairs.

At 5pm, I started from Shahbagh towards The Daily Star building. On the way, multiple men on bikes were honking their horns, catcalling women. Mobs were targeting TV news offices in Karwan Bazar, which did not telecast the student protest coverage, as they feared pressure from the authorities. ATN Bangla's office was completely vandalised till the fifth floor, some people were seen looting the building. The same happened to a few other TV news channel offices. I could see a witch-hunt in place and, fearfully, I kept thinking, "They'll kill me if I speak up now."

I didn't know what to think and I felt numb at the horror I witnessed. What was the point of Abu Sayeed, Mir Mugdho and Farhan Faiyaz and the 200-plus people's deaths if, during the first hours of independence, this is the picture of freedom we paint throughout the country? Are we really free if we don't take into the consideration the concern of our minority communities? Many had asked the same question after witnessing the mindless vandalism on Monday. We are so vulnerable and afraid now that rational people have started to believe in the endless disinformation.

If we still find hanging Sheikh Hasina's undergarments on fans and valiantly showing them in front of the media funny, I must say we are paving a dangerous precedence for religious begets and other radical groups to use the same rhetoric and crack down on women empowerment with the logic—if you empower women, you will get a tyrant like Sheikh Hasina. The politics of the AL regime will be used as a line of defence for them to channel their hidden agendas. As a nation, we need to be far more vigilant than we have been in these dark days of no law and order.

The reason why I think I was most horrified is that the mob justified their vandalism with the argument that "they did this to us, so we will do the same to them." No. Students did not sacrifice their lives to establish an order of vigilante justice. They did it so that people, no matter from what background, have the right to speak up, claim justice and call out injustice.

The movement is called "Anti-discrimination Movement" and in no way can we let that rhetoric be politicised or diluted. Many of you can already notice how BNP has band-wagoned on the student's right to justice as a movement that they had always sided with.

I am proud that the student leaders I have put my faith in have called out this mindless violence and set up watch parties. I am proud that they are constantly distinguishing that these mindless acts of vandalism are not what we side with. I hope they continue to create this stride. Because when I saw vandals parading with their motorbikes at Manik Mia avenue on Monday, it seemed to me that we just replaced Chhatra League with Chhatra Dal, thus opening up an avenue for the historical cycle to repeat.

We are at a monumental time in Bangladesh's history to create change. We have an opportune moment to redefine the Bangladesh we want to see without being deterred by the apathetic thought of: "We will simply never see this in Bangladesh."

The civic society has the biggest role to play now, to draw a line in the sand—and that's the only thing that has been giving me hope. Amidst this mindless vandalism, civic society groups made human chains to stop vandals from destroying police stations, they helped to return stolen items from Gono Bhaban, imams from mosques along with students joined the watch parties outside temples to protect them. This is the Bangladesh I dreamt of, my grandfather dreamt of as a student politician during the Liberation War, and the countless other freedom fighters who took a bullet. This is the time to call out all sorts of injustice that hindered our society under an autocracy for so long—not just politicians, but also businessmen who licked Awami League's feet and who will now show support for our students, acting like they were supporting them all along.

It is time for us to be vigilant on all fronts, it's so much harder to protect freedom than to achieve it. If nothing else, what this protest proved is that students have the power to take down an autocrat that everyone feared, we can again take down any one who stands in the way of building a free Bangladesh for all. Our work has just begun.

This quote was widely circulated on social media during the peak of the student-led quota reform protest, which evolved into an anti-government movement. This protest became one of the most significant and largest mass uprisings the country has witnessed since its independence.

In such challenging times, when protesters and civilians were indiscriminately killed, wholesale arrests, block raids, and a nationwide internet shutdown violated citizens' fundamental rights, keeping the nation on edge for weeks– only a few had the courage to raise their voices against the oppression and injustice.

As early as July 15, violent clashes erupted between student protesters and Bangladesh Chhatra League (BCL) activists at Dhaka University, resulting in around 300 injuries. In response, a wave of support emerged from celebrities, with some courageously criticising the former AL-led government's harsh response to the protesters. The following day, six people were killed amid the clashes.

On July 16, veteran actor and freedom fighter Sohel Rana, renowned cultural figure Ramendu Majumdar, noted playwright Mamunur Rashid, Actors Equity Bangladesh General Secretary Rawnak Hasan, actor Niloy Alamgir, among others, backed quota reform. Meanwhile, director Ashfaque Nipun, filmmaker Mishuk Moni, author Mohammad Nazimuddin, director Khijir Hayat, actors Pori Moni and Sadia Ayman voiced their concern in a straightforward manner and criticised the former ruling party for hard-handling the demonstrators.

Filmmaker Mishuk Moni criticised the former government's tendency to label dissenters as traitors, saying, "In this country, speaking against the government labels you a traitor. Criticising any government official's corruption also makes you a traitor. Participating in a movement for rightful demands makes you a traitor."

On July 17, bands Artcell, Chirkutt, Shironamhin, Arbovirus, and Bangla Five joined the chorus of support. Arbovirus stated, "Quota reform is now a demand of the time." Tasrif, vocalist of Kureghar, raised questions, "Doesn't your heart tremble when you beat another human? Those who are demanding their rights, are they so unknown to you?"

Actors Shobnom Bubly and Puja Chery raised concerns about violence. Puja stated, "What kind of freedom is this? Such violence towards women in an independent country is unacceptable. I strongly condemn it."

Sina Hasan from Bangla Five was among the firsts to boycott the former government-funded Joy Bangla Concert, saying, "As an artiste, I am boycotting it. I do not want to be invited to this sycophantic concert either as an artiste or an audience member."

On July 18, as 229 platoons of Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB) were deployed nationwide and at least 29 people were killed, prominent celebrities Shakib Khan, Chanchal Chowdhury, and Afran Nisho voiced concern for the victims. Rapper and barrister Towfique Ahmed offered legal assistance to protesters, while actor Ziaul Faruq Apurba urged the former government to seek peaceful solutions.

Following a 150-hour internet blackout, services resumed on July 23, leading to increased celebrity activism. On July 30, as the Student Against Discrimination (SAD) Movement announced new programmes, social media platforms were flooded with red profile pictures in solidarity. Director Mostofa Sarwar Farooki were among those who joined this campaign and rasied voice against oppresion publicly. He wrote lengthy post on his official Facebook page, questioning the accountability of those in power.

Director Shihab Shaheen posted a photo featuring the children killed in recent violence on that same day. Referring to former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's metro rail visit, Shihab said, "I used to see leaders and public figures visiting the homes of the affected or distressed, offering comfort, inquiring about their well-being, embracing them, and sometimes even apologising. Where has that culture gone?"

Actress Sadia Ayman wrote a sarcastic post on her social media handle hinting at the artistes who visited BTV station and mourned over inanimate objects. Popular content creator Salman Mohammad Muqtadir stood with the students since the initial days of the protests and provided assistance to them on ground.

A vast array of celebrities showed support by changing their profile pictures red, including Kamar Ahmad Simon, Akram Khan, Amitabh Reza Chowdhury, Leesa Gazi, Sadia Khalid Reeti, Siam Ahmed, Azmeri Haque Badhan, Zakia Bari Mamo, Oni Hasan, Zohad, Arafat Kazi, Prince Mahmud, and many more.

On August 1, visual media artistes organised a protest rally at Farmgate intersection in Dhaka. Notable attendees included Ashfaque Nipun, Azmeri Haque Badhan, and Nazia Haque Orsha. Badhan, who had attended the Cannes Film Festival, emotionally stated, "It could have been my daughter at the protest, she could have lost her life... Any state that kills its own people to assert power, cannot be a democracy."

Following Sheikh Hasina's resignation on August 5, celebrities expressed both joy and caution. Pori Moni posted, "How my independence was taken away on this day three years ago, mother nature takes its revenge," later adding a call for peace. Ashfaque Nipun declared, "Bangladesh is now FREE from the long rule of the tyrant Sheikh Hasina!"

This unprecedented display of solidarity from Bangladesh's entertainment industry played a crucial role in amplifying the voices of the protesters and shaping public opinion during this pivotal moment in the country's history. Their courage in speaking out against injustice, even in the face of potential repercussions, set a powerful example for future generations and contributed to the eventual success of the movement.

independently, and my Office stands ready to support this. The demands for justice and reform must be heeded."

At this pivotal moment, Bangladesh's international human rights obligations can serve as a road map for the transitional authorities and all political leaders.

"This is a time for national healing, including through an immediate end to violence, as well as accountability that ensures the rights of victims to truth and reparations, and a truly inclusive process that brings the country together on the way forward," Türk added.

Meanwhile, UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres urged calm and restraint by all sides and emphasised the importance of a peaceful, orderly and democratic transition.

Guterress said he stands in full solidarity with the people of Bangladesh and calls for the full respect of their human rights and underscored the need for a full, independent, impartial and transparent investigation into all acts of violence, said Farhan Haq, his deputy spokesperson, in a briefing in New York.

The US saluted the military for forming an interim government instead of cracking down further on protesters, said Matthew Miller, spokesman for the US state department.

"If it is true in fact that the army resisted calls to crack down on lawful protesters, that would be a positive development," he said, adding that the transition to an interim government is conducted in accordance with Bangladesh's laws.

A full and transparent investigation into the rights abuses is vital to ensure accountability for the deaths, he said, while also urging all parties to refrain from further violence and maintain calm.

Meanwhile, the EU diplomats in Bangladesh said they were "very concerned" about reports of attacks on minority groups and places of worship.

On Monday, more than 100 people were killed in mob violence in the capital and other districts. Police stations and Awami League offices also came under attack and looting.

Canada strongly condemns the human rights violations, deaths, torture, arbitrary arrests and lethal force used against the people, said its Foreign Minister Mélanie Joly.

"During this transition, we urge all parties to respect and uphold democratic institutions and processes and the rule of law. It is vital that all those arrested in recent weeks be accorded due process in the justice system and that a full and impartial investigation be pursued to ensure accountability for crimes committed."

Canada calls for a quick and peaceful return to a democratic and inclusive civilian-led government in Bangladesh.

"We urge the people of Bangladesh to unite around the principles of freedom and democracy upon which their country was founded."

was also vandalised there.

Affected villagers informed the police but they did not take any action.

In Birampur upazila, the house of Dilip Kundu, a fertiliser and agrochemical trader, was attacked. He said the plan to attack was even announced on a loudspeaker to gather more people. They also attacked, vandalised and looted his shops.

Several Hindu families of Bochaganj upazila came under attack and arson, said Chakrabarty.

In Patuakhali's Kuakata, a temple was attacked and set ablaze, and the homes of two members of the Hindu community were vandalised yesterday.

Around 5:00pm, around 20-25 people attacked the home of Ananta Mukherji and razed the Radha-Krishna temple adjacent to it.

Less than an hour later, another group ransacked Kolapara municipal Mayor Bipul Haldar's house and set it on fire. They also burnt a private car of the mayor parked in front of the house.

In Barishal's Gouranadi upazila, miscreants vandalised and looted a clothing store owned by Bhola Saha on Monday night.

Meanwhile, the head teacher of Mahilara Secondary School was assaulted in her home in Mahilara union.

Attackers also set ablaze the house of Jibon Krishna Piplai, a prominent businessman in Barishal city, but residents came forward to extinguish the fire.

In the predominantly Hindu areas of the city's Katpatti, Chawkbazar and Bazar Road, miscreants were seen running around with sharp weapons, reported our correspondent.

Arichul Haque, officer-in-charge of Kotwali Police Station, said they could not get out of their station due to security concerns.

In Bogura, Tapan Kumar Chakraborty, secretary of Bogura's Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad, said, "Members of the Hindu community here are in a state of panic as their businesses, shops and homes were attacked yesterday [Monday]."

On Monday evening, attackers set ablaze some haystacks in some Hindu homes in Palpara village in Bogura's Gabtali upazila, Ashik Iqbal, OC of Gabtoli Police Station, confirmed to The Daily Star.

Similar incidents were reported in at least 27 districts during the first hours of the government's ouster.

Meanwhile, the contract of Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun as the IGP was cancelled in a separate circular on the same day.

Mamun's removal comes in the wake of a complete breakdown of law and order situation across Bangladesh.

Chowdhury was first appointed as the IGP on September 21, 2022.

He was scheduled to retire on January 11, 2023. However, on January 9, the government appointed him on a contractual basis for one and a half years.

Earlier in July, the government had extended his contract by one year.

According to the court records, over 270 cases were lodged with 39 police stations in the city between July 16 and August 4. The complainants of most cases were police personnel.

The charges of the cases include illegal gathering, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, damaging assets, and arson.

They also informed that around 200 students had been on guard at churches and temples in Mirpur since 9:00am yesterday.

Students were also seen guarding the fire-ravaged Pallabi Police Station.

Two army officers, visiting the site, said they saw firearms scattered all around.

Requesting anonymity, they said they came to know from locals that some firearms were looted.

Fire service officials said at least 29 police stations had been torched across the country. But, the fire service has not been informed of all the arson attacks.

In the capital, Uttara East, Khilgaon, Wari, Ashulia, Badda, Jatrabari, Adabor, and Lalbagh police stations and a deputy commissioner's office in Kallyanpur were ransacked and set on fire.

On the streets of Mirpur 2, Mirpur 10, Agargaon, Bijoy Sarani, Dhanmondi and Bangla Motor, both male and female students controlled traffic. Similarly,, general people were seen maintaining traffic in Bogura.

The duty officer of the fire service said they rescued 50 policemen trapped inside the burning Mirpur Police Station on Monday night.

An official of Dhaka Metropolitan Police said, "Most of the police stations were vandalised, torched, and weapons were looted. How will the police perform their duties in this situation?"

Members of Bangladesh Ansar and Village Defence Party were deployed to ensure security at all police stations and Dhaka airport, the officer said.

In another development, there was an attempt to free militants from the Kashimpur High Security Central Jail in Gazipur. Convicts inside the jail also tried to break free during the attack, officials said.

Last night, a group of at least 50 people vandalised the empty house of former DMP commissioner Asaduzzaman Mia in Nikunja, locals said.

The property is registered under the name of his younger son, Asif Mahadeen.

In his first briefing since Hasina's departure, Chowdhury Abdullah Al-Mamun, before he was replaced as inspector general of police, yesterday urged members of the force to perform their duties with patience and strong morale.

In a video message sent by the Police Headquarters, he urged the political and student leaders to request the countrymen to refrain from attacking police.

Many top police officials went into hiding after the fall of the government.

Hasina's resignation came following three weeks of clashes between police, Awami League men, and protesters that left over 200 people, including many policemen, dead.

He stated that steps will be taken to find a logical solution to the problems that the police face.

Earlier, Additional Inspector General of Police AKM Shahidur Rahman told reporters at Rajarbagh Police Lines that they were trying to establish a chain of command soon.

He urged the commanders to understand the situation and gradually return to the workplaces, and not pay any heed to rumours.

AFP reported that Bangladesh Police Association, which represents non-cadre police officers, said its members were going on strike.

"Until the safety of every police member is secured, we are declaring a strike," said the association.

At least two dozen cadre officers wrote on Facebook about abstaining from work.

Besides, Additional DIG Sohel Rana in a statement said, "The problem is in the leadership, not the police force. The guilty will be punished. Please, do not attack innocent policemen."

As they went inside, family members of the victims waited outside the headquarters.

Anisha Islam Insha, the teenage daughter of forcibly disappeared Ismail Hossain Baten, broke down in tears after having to leave without her father.

Timber trader Baten was allegedly picked up from Dhaka by members of a government security agency in 2019.

"I have been walking the streets of Dhaka holding my father's photo all these years, and I had hoped I would be able to walk back home with him today. But that did not happen," said a crying Insha.

"I have waited all these years for my husband. I am going back disappointed today, but I have faith that I will get him back tomorrow," said Shahnaz, wife of Humayun Kabir Parvez, the BNP president of Laksham pourashava unit, who was picked up on November, 27, 2017.

Yesterday's meeting followed the release of former army brigadier general Abdullahil Aman Azmi, the second son of former Jamaat ameer and war criminal late Ghulam Azam; and Mir Ahmad Bin Quasem (Arman), the younger son of executed Jamaat leader and war criminal Mir Quasem Ali.

Afroza Islam Ankhi, sister of forcibly disappeared BNP leader Sajedul Islam Sumon and one of the coordinators of Mayer Daak, a platform for the families of the victims of enforced disappearances, told The Daily Star that Azmi and Ahmad have been found.

They were handed over to their family members in Uttara's Diabari yesterday morning, she said.

Azmi had been forcibly detained since August 23, 2016, and Mir Ahmad, since August 9, 2016.

Duplantis fulfils childhood dream

AFP, Paris

Armand Duplantis says the defence of his Olympic pole vault crown in world-record style came as no surprise as he had visualised it a "million times" when practising as a child in his own backyard.

Coached by his American father Greg, a former pole vaulter, Duplantis is a product of a track and field-crazy family which had their own vaulting apparatus in the garden.

They were all present in the stadium and it was to them that Duplantis hurtled after sailing over 6.25 metres with no "pre-canned nonsense".

"That's just overflowed with emotions, freaking out," said Duplantis, the new record improving his previous best by 1cm in front of a delirious 69,000-capacity crowd at the Stade de France on Monday night.

"I've been fortunate enough to do it several times now, but every time the feeling is kind of the same. This was a more extreme version.

"When I'm going over the bar it's like AI (artificial intelligence), it doesn't feel real. That was more hysteria and freaking out."

Having started vaulting at the age of four in his backyard on a makeshift runway and landing pad, Duplantis revealed his deja vu moment.

"I've visualised this moment a million times in my life. I mean, this is every time I was in my backyard," he said of his world record vault.

"I would just imagine that the bar was at the world record mark. It was the Olympic final -- that's pretty much exactly what I visualised."

Duplantis was happy to bask in the moment and not be drawn into looking too far into the future after his success.

It was the ninth time the Swede had broken the world record, an astonishing achievement given he is still only 24 years old.

The silver medallist on the night, American Sam Kendricks, managed 5.95m, a full 30cm short of Duplantis' mark.

What next for two-time Olympic champion Duplantis, who is also twice world outdoor and indoor gold medallist, three-time European champion and a three-time Diamond League winner?

"Probably one of the moments where I cared least about the future is right now, soaking up this moment right now," said Duplantis.

"How can I care about anything else? When things align the way they did for me, you've got to enjoy those kinds of things.

"I try to enjoy as best as I can."

Duplantis could have waited until back on the circuit for a tilt at the world record, for which prize money is given, but he chose to attempt it on track and field's biggest stage.

"The biggest dream since a kid was to break the world record at the Olympics," he said.

"I've been able to do that in front of the most ridiculous crowd I've ever competed in front of.

"If I don't beat this moment in my career, then I'm pretty pretty okay with that. You know, I don't think you really can get much better than what just happened. So it's dang amazing."

Of his final vault, Duplantis said he was "just trying to control the energy rather than let it control me".

"I didn't really have anything to lose either. I'd already won and broke the Olympic record, I was already Olympic champion for a second time."

Unaccommodating Paris restaurant apologies to Serena

REUTERS, Paris

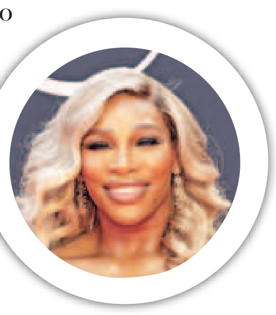
A luxury Parisian hotel has apologised to tennis great Serena Williams after she complained, in a social media post seen by millions, that she and her family were turned away from its restaurant on Monday.

"Yikes @peninsulaparis I've been denied access to rooftop to eat in a empty restaurant of nicer places but never with my kids. Always a first," Williams said on X.

Williams, a four-times Olympic gold medallist, was one of the Olympic flame's torchbearers during the Paris Games' opening ceremony. She is also among celebrities who have come out to see U.S. gymnastics star Simone Biles compete in the Games.



Her post was seen by more than 4 million viewers.

The Peninsula Paris, a five-star hotel whose gourmet restaurant offers a view of the Eiffel tower, swiftly responded: "Dear Mrs. Williams, Please accept our deepest apologies for the disappointment you encountered tonight. Unfortunately, our rooftop bar was indeed fully booked and the only unoccupied tables you saw belonged to our gourmet restaurant, L'Oiseau Blanc, which was fully reserved."

A second message followed, saying: "We have always been honored to welcome you and will always be to welcome you again."

Some of the responses to William's post were supportive, saying it was unacceptable that the restaurant didn't make room for her, others said that celebrities have no more right to a fully booked restaurant than anyone else.

Williams was much more positive after the Games' July 26 opening ceremony, claiming it to be an 'unforgettable' event on social media platform X.

Brazil's Alexandre makes historic debut

REUTERS, Paris

Brazil's Bruna Alexandre smashes and chops just like the other table tennis players at the Paris Olympics but when serving she uses the paddle in her left hand to throw the ball high.

That move, which now seems easy and natural, was what a seven-year-old Alexandre once struggled with the most as a one-armed girl who wanted to play the sport.

On Monday, she made history as the first Brazilian to compete at the Olympic and Paralympic Games.

Alexandre's first Olympic journey was cut short by an unfortunate draw, with Brazil on Monday facing the world's top South Korean team in the first round, but she managed to put up two good performances in losing her doubles and singles matches.

"It wasn't the result I was hoping for, but we're very satisfied with what we achieved," said 29-year-old Alexandre after Brazil lost 3-1.

"We didn't give up until the end. Korea is one of the best teams. I managed to score some points, which made me very happy personally, and I'm very proud of my team for fighting until the end."

At three months old, Alexandre lost her arm due to a blood clot. She picked up table tennis aged seven and went on to win several championships plus a bronze medal at the Paralympic Games in Rio 2016 and silver at Tokyo in 2021.

"Never give up on your dreams, regardless of whether you have one leg or one arm. Believe that everything is possible. After 22 years of my career today I'm here at the Olympics," she said.

Alexandre added that she was now eyeing gold in the Paralympics and plans to come back to the Olympics in Los Angeles in 2028.

"There were other athletes who managed to play in the Olympic Games as well. I think this can help not only the sport but also the inclusion of people with disabilities," she said.

The Paralympics run from Aug. 28 to Sept. 8.

Abahani tent looted, vandalised

SPORTS REPORTER

The club tent of Abahani Limited, one of the most popular sporting clubs of the country, was vandalised and looted by miscreants a few hours after the resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on Monday.

The club was founded in 1972 by Sheikh Kamal, the eldest son of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman and younger brother of former PM, who fled to India following her resignation.

Videos and photos shared by the club's press wing showed a trail of destruction at the players' dormitory and its offices, where documents were scattered and furniture were vandalised. The miscreants had also set fire to a portrait of Sheikh Kamal in front of the dormitory.

"Some miscreants entered the club premises in the evening and vandalised everything. They even took away tables, chairs, computers and documents," said a club employee seeking anonymity.

"The miscreants, who are probably from the Modhubazar, Shangkar and Rayerbazar areas, also took away approximately 500 trophies of football, cricket, hockey, table tennis, handball and volleyball," the official said, adding that no one was hurt in the incident as there was no players or officials at the dormitory during that time.t in the incident as there was no players at the dormitory at that time.

Uncertain times in BCB

SPORTS REPORTER

The Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) has fallen into uncertain times after the fall of the Awami League government, still quite a few board officials returned to work yesterday as the BCB like the rest of the country tried to return to some resemblance of normalcy.

The BCB has its hands full at the moment with many assignments lined up for various teams which includes the national team's tour of Pakistan in August.

The ICC is also reportedly monitoring the situation in Bangladesh and mulling whether or not to shift the ICC Women's T20 World Cup, set to begin in Bangladesh in October, elsewhere.

Members of the Army observed the BCB premises during a visit yesterday and assured the BCB of providing security in case of any trouble.

Although many BCB officials were absent, which includes president Nazmul Hassan Papon, those who were present yesterday said they are working according to the plans which had already been laid out.

The women's team players underwent individual training sessions in Mirpur even though their practice sessions for the T20 World Cup will officially begin on August 10, informed head of operations of BCB's women's wing Habibul Bashar.

Bashar also said that a decision on the tournament taking place in Bangladesh is likely by August 10.

The women's National Cricket League (WNCL), which will be played in the T20 format to help prepare the cricketers for the upcoming tournament, is set to begin on August 19, and Bashar saw very little scope of that getting postponed.

"I talked to the players and told them not to stop practicing. The WNCL is very important ahead of the World Cup," Bashar told The Daily Star yesterday.

"We can't postpone [NWCL] since Sri Lanka A are also touring. It's not finalised yet but it has to take place in the first week of September. So, we can't postpone the WNCL," he added.

BCB chief executive officer Nizamuddin Chowdhury was absent in the BCB offices yesterday but when contacted, he told The Daily Star that no decision has come through on the present governance of the board, "The situation is still a bit uncertain and it's still too early. It's best to observe," he said.

Plans for the men's A team's departure for Pakistan are being made, "We were set to depart today [yesterday] but that has been postponed. But in 48 hours we will make a decision," Nizamuddin added.

At around 11:00 AM, a group of organisers and club officials gathered in front of the BCB premises under the banner of 'Cricket Organisers'.

Led by former joint secretary and grounds committee chairman Rafiqul Islam Babu along with other club officials, they showed up demanding justice for prevalent irregularities and corruption in the board.

Even though the incumbent board has not been dissolved, they also talked to officials yesterday, "After coming here we saw many are absent and we didn't like that. We want the officials not to interrupt the proceedings and the tours should go on as per schedule," Rafiqul told the media yesterday.

HP lose big against Pak Shaheens

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh High Performance (HP) unit finished their campaign in the Bi-Lateral 50-over series in Australia on a losing note, suffering a crushing eight-wicket defeat to Pakistan Shaheens at the DXC Arena in Darwin on Tuesday.

Asked to bat first, the HP unit lost half of their side for just 32 runs in 9.4 overs and they hardly could recover from the early collapse, getting bundled out for just 78 runs in 24.3 overs.

For the HP unit, Parvez Hossain Emon was the highest scorer, making 19 runs.

For Pakistan, Mohammad Imran Jnr finished with 3-22.

Pacer Ripon Mondol removed Sahibzada Farhan (0) in the second over before Usman Khan and Abdul Faseeh shared a 48-run stand for the second wicket to take them close to victory.

Faseeh soon became Ripon's second scalp in the contest but Usman's unbeaten knock of 39 off 45 balls, aided by Tayyab Tahir's 17 off 36 balls not out, guided them to 79-2 in 17 overs.

This was Shaheen's back-to-back win in the series after they beat NT Strike by four wickets in their opening match. Bangladesh HP unit earlier clinched a massive 112-run win over NT Strike.

Insecurity grips city as many police stations deserted

Firearms, ammunition looted from several stations in city, elsewhere

SHARIFUL ISLAM and SHAHEEN MOLLAH

With many police stations unmanned and arms and ammunition looted, there is a sense of serious insecurity among people in the capital and elsewhere in the country.

During a wave of violent mob attacks, many police stations were vandalised and set on fire after former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation and departure on Monday.

These correspondents saw Mirpur and Pallabi police stations, from where arms and ammunition were looted, being guarded by students yesterday afternoon.

The buildings that were set on fire the night before resembled skeletal remains, completely stripped bare.

At Mirpur Police Station yesterday afternoon, this correspondent saw that the collapsable gates were bent out of shape and shards of broken glass littered the floors of the ransacked rooms of the two-storey building. A coat of soot and ash covered the charred furniture, and the air was still hot from the fire.

Around a dozen students guarding the police station put a bamboo fence at the main gate. There were several burned vehicles, motorcycles, and a riot vehicle on the premises.

The students said they found a shotgun behind the building. They also recovered a grenade, two broken firearms, ammunition, and a wireless radio, and requested that these correspondents to inform the

Attacks on Hindu houses, temples, businesses go on

STAR REPORT

Within the first day and a half since the fall of Sheikh Hasina-led government, the country witnessed a spate of violence, specifically targeting Hindu homes and places of worship across multiple districts as law and order is yet to be restored.

In the absence of law enforcers, attacks on Hindus have flared unprovoked in many communities since Monday.

In Dhaka's Dhanmondi, the home of band Joler Gaan's frontman Rahul Ananda was set on fire and burnt to the ground on Monday.

"As soon as they broke down the gate, they started ravaging the house, taking whatever they could find for themselves. They took everything -- from furniture and mirrors to valuables. After that, they torched the whole house along with Rahul da's musical instruments," a close family source of Rahul told The Daily Star.

The home was nearly 140 years old, according to an earlier report of this newspaper.

Rahul and his family managed to flee to safety.

Later that same day, the Dhanuka Manasa Bari temple in Shariatpur was ransacked by an angry mob. They crushed the idols of Radha-Krishna and razed the temple to the ground. They also damaged all 16 CCTV cameras installed inside the temple premises.

Gobindo Chakrabarty, the temple committee's general secretary, said, "After attacking the temple, they surrounded our homes and were going to attack us. The army intervened and saved us."

Also on Monday, the Dinajpur Centre Cremation yard was vandalised, said Sunil Chakraborty, president of Dinajpur Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad.

Besides, five temples, including a Kali temple, in the district's Parbatipur upazila were attacked.

The homes of some Hindu families came under attack in Chirirbandar upazila. A place designated for Harisobha

In a press statement, the Human Rights Forum Bangladesh urged the authorities to take a responsible role in protecting the lives and properties of people, especially those of minority communities.

They highlighted heinous incidents such as vandalism of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's mural, arson at the Bangabandhu Memorial Museum, and attacks on the residences of the chief justice and other judges.

US working 'round the clock' to avert Middle East war

Says Blinken as Israel remains high alert for potential Iranian retaliation

AGENCIES

The United States said it was working "round the clock" to avert an all-out war in the Middle East, as Israel remained on high alert yesterday for potential Iranian retaliation for two high-profile killings.

US President Joe Biden, whose country has sent extra warships and fighter jets to the region in support of Israel, held crisis talks on Monday evening with his national security team.

Biden and his top diplomat Antony Blinken sought to calm tensions that have soared since a suspected Israeli attack in Tehran last Wednesday killed Ismail Haniyeh, the political leader of Palestinian group Hamas.

Biden called King Abdullah II of Jordan, which helped down Iranian drones and missiles in an attack on Israel in April, while Blinken called top officials in Qatar and Egypt, the key intermediaries seeking a ceasefire in the 10-month Israeli offensive in Gaza.

"We are engaged in intense diplomacy, pretty much around the clock, with a very simple message -- all parties must refrain from escalation," Blinken said after joining other top officials in a White House meeting.

Iranian President Masoud Pezeshkian hit out on Monday at what he called the "criminal acts" of Israel "against the oppressed and defenceless people of Gaza" as well as Haniyeh's killing.

"The Islamic Republic of Iran is in no way seeking to expand the scope of war and crisis in the region, but this regime will definitely receive the response for its crimes and arrogance," Pezeshkian said during talks with a senior visiting Russian official, according to the official news agency IRNA.

Yesterday, five Hezbollah fighters were killed in an Israel strike on southern Lebanon, according to a security source. Israeli warplanes flew low over the Lebanese capital Beirut, with witnesses saying they could see the planes with the naked eye and creating one of the largest sonic booms heard by residents in years, reports AFP.

Interim govt must prioritise human rights

Says Amnesty

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Human rights group Amnesty International yesterday said any interim government, which will be formed after the ouster of Sheikh Hasina-led government, must prioritise human rights and not repeat the mistakes of the past.

"The first order of business for any interim government should be to ensure protection of people's right to life, right to free speech and peaceful assembly and to find ways of de-escalating any potential for further violence," said Smriti Singh, Amnesty International's regional director for South Asia, in a statement.

Any measures proposed to move forward from this deadly chapter in Bangladesh's history need to be rooted in the principles of justice, accountability and non-recurrence, she said.

"The human rights violations in the last three weeks that have led to the death of more than 300 people, with thousands injured and arbitrarily arrested, should be independently and impartially investigated in a transparent manner," said the regional director.

"We again call for the establishment of a prompt, independent and impartial investigation into the deaths and injuries resulting from the protests. Those found responsible must be held accountable and the victims of the violence should receive full reparations from the state, which includes compensation, rehabilitation and guarantees of non-repetition."

"It's an opportune moment for any new interim government in Bangladesh to show solidarity with its people, protect the most vulnerable, and not repeat the mistakes of the past."

UN, US, Canada, EU want democratic transition of power

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The UN, US, Canada and the EU have called for democratic transition of power and immediate actions to restore law and order in Bangladesh.

In separate statements, they also emphasised on ending vandalism and violence against the minorities and vengeance attacks, while also holding accountable those responsible for the killing of hundreds and injuring of thousands of people.

"The transition [of power] must be conducted in a transparent and accountable way, and be inclusive and open to the meaningful participation of all Bangladeshis," said Volker Türk, the UN Human Rights chief, on Monday following the resignation and fleeing of Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina to India.

It is vital the transition of power in Bangladesh is peaceful and guided by human rights, in line with the country's international obligations quickly and that all emergency measures must be strictly limited in accordance with international law, he said.

"Everyone arbitrarily detained must be released, and all those responsible for human rights violations must be held to account," he said, adding that underlying issues and grievances must be addressed.

Türk reiterated his calls for a comprehensive, impartial and transparent investigation into all alleged human rights violations since July.

"In the current circumstances, and to ensure public confidence, an investigation should be conducted

Khaleda, Tarique address huge rally

BNP yesterday called for calm and unity and ensuring the safety of all irrespective of religion, race and identity as well as immediate election.

"Let's not indulge in destruction, revenge, vengeance -- let us build a society based on love, peace, and knowledge," BNP Chairperson Khaleda Zia said in a three-minute-long video message played out at a mammoth rally at the capital's Nayapaltan.

Tens of thousands of leaders, activists and supporters, who began convening at the party's Nayapaltan headquarters in the morning, burst into loud cheers when Khaleda's video message played out, her first speech in six and a half years.

She thanked the youth for getting rid of the "fascist illegal government" through an extended movement centring on quota reforms for government jobs.

"I want to sincerely thank our brave children who made this possible through their desperate struggle. I pay respect to the hundreds of martyrs. This victory has brought a new possibility for the nation."

Khaleda, a three-time prime minister, called for building a "knowledge-based, democratic Bangladesh with merit and competence" and "free from exploitation".

"We have to build a prosperous Bangladesh from unprecedented corruption and ruins of destroyed democracy. The dream for which the youth have shed their blood must be realised. Students and youth are our future. Let's strengthen the hands of our youth to build tomorrow's Bangladesh based on peace, progress and equality."

Robberies rampant in Mohammadpur, other neighbourhoods in city; locals and students keep vigil in absence of law enforcers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Residents in the capital's Mohammadpur and several other areas are in a state of panic as gangs of criminals have been looting and robbing homes in the absence of law enforcers over the last two days.

The same is happening in several other parts of the country,

From Tuesday night to early yesterday, many families in Mohammadpur had been sleepless from fear of robberies.

Locals made loudspeaker announcements from mosques and took to the streets around midnight to confront the criminals.

Some residents had also turned to social media to seek help, which prompted many people, including students, to stand guard at various intersections and keep vigil.

The fear of robberies spread through Naboday Housing, Mohammadia Housing, Chan Mia Housing, Chand Udyan, Dhaka Udyan and Chandrima Housing areas – all in Mohammadpur.

Upon information, an army team patrolled the Naboday Housing and Bashbari areas.

It also detained a group of men on a truck in Bashbari. The men, however, claimed to be sand workers and were later released.

A resident of Naboday Housing area said, "Last night, a group of people carrying local weapons came and attacked a neighbouring house. They forcefully opened the main gate and looted cash and jewelry."

AUGUST 5 VIOLENCE

Death toll in Savar rises to 36

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Savar

The death toll centring the violence on August 5, the day Sheikh Hasina resigned from office, rose to 36, according to hospital sources.

On that day, violent clashes between police-backed Awami League activists and protesters broke out.

Most of the deaths were caused by gunshot wounds, they said.

Yusuf, duty manager of Enam Medical College Hospital, said that 27-year-old Sadek succumbed to his bullet injuries while undergoing treatment yesterday.

With this, the authorities reported 16 deaths, including those brought dead there and who died in the hospital.

Gonoshasthaya Samaj Vittik Medical College Hospital in Ashulia reported 10 bullet-riddled bodies, including one unknown victim.

Earlier, Ashulia Women and Children Hospital confirmed the death of three people while another victim died in Habib Clinic in Ashulia.

The house of Salman F Rahman, private industry and investment adviser to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, was ransacked and set on fire in the capital's upscale neighbourhood of Gulshan. Locals said the house was torched on Monday, the day Hasina resigned and fled the country.

Over 300 inmates flee Kashimpur, Kushtia jails

STAR REPORT

At least six bodies of prisoners were recovered from Kashimpur High Security Central Jail in Gazipur early yesterday, hours after a group of prisoners escaped following demonstrations by some inmates and attack from outside by their "relatives".

Gazipur Deputy Commissioner Abul Fateh Mohammad Safiqul Islam yesterday said, "We are yet to ascertain how many prisoners fled."

The bodies were taken to Shaheed Tajuddin Ahmad Medical College Hospital around 4:00am, said Abul Fazal, officer at the hospital's emergency department.

This newspaper could not confirm how the six prisoners died as the jail's senior superintendent, Subrata Kumar Pal, could not be reached over the phone despite repeated attempts.

Quoting jail officials, Bangla daily Prothom Alo reported that at least 209 prisoners fled.

A group of prisoners started demonstrating around noon on Tuesday demanding release. They tried to flee by breaking a wall and scaling it using a ladder. Jail guards tried to quell the trouble. At

THE ACQUITTAL

Later in the day, a Dhaka tribunal acquitted Prof Yunus in a labour law violation case.

Three other top officials of Grameen Telecom were also acquitted.

MA Awal, chairman (in-charge) of the Labour Appellate Tribunal, delivered the verdict, Khaja Tanvir Ahmed, a lawyer for Yunus, told The Daily Star.

On January 1, the Labour Court-3 of Dhaka sentenced Yunus, also chairman of Grameen Telecom, and its directors Ashraful Hassan, M Shahjahan and Nurjahan Begum to six months' imprisonment each for violating labour laws.

The four were also fined Tk 30,000 each, in default of which they would have to serve 25 more days in prison.

On January 28, Prof Yunus and his colleagues filed appeals with the Labour Appellate Tribunal against the sentence.

On September 9, 2021, Labour Inspector (General) SM Arifuzzaman filed the case with the labour court against the four.

The court framed the charges in the case on June 6 last year. It also recorded four prosecution witnesses' statements.

The sections of the labour law under which the case was filed carry a maximum of six months' imprisonment.

According to the case documents, Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments officials inspected the Grameen Telecom office in the capital's Mirpur on August 16, 2021, and found several violations of labour laws.

BB, NBR grapple with staff anger

Employees started agitating at the central bank in the commercial district of Motijheel right after they arrived at work in the morning, demanding the resignation of officials who are serving contractually. The governor, deputy governors, and the banking adviser are hired contractually.

In the face of protests, Deputy Governor Kazi Sayedur Rahman resigned, while two deputy governors -- Habibur Rahman and Md Khurshid Alam -- decided to step down. Banking adviser Md Abu Farah Naser also decided to go, according to officials. Meanwhile, Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit chief Masud Biswas was forced to leave his office. He then decided to quit.

At a hurried press briefing, BB spokesperson Mezbaul Haque said some deputy governors decided to resign amid protests and some were forced to step down.

Widespread protests came two days after Sheikh Hasina's sudden exit from Bangladesh amid a popular uprising. The collapse of her government created a power vacuum that led to further violence, alongside the joy and relief on the streets of Dhaka.

Partisan decisions and corruption weakened the financial system, once controlled by Awami League loyalists, during the party's 15-year iron grip on power.

A similar scene of anger played out at the National Board of Revenue, as officials called for the resignation of its chairman, Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem.

Economists say unruly protests are not the way to reform the regulatory bodies and can upend the financial sector.

Another powerful regulator, the Securities and Exchange Commission, passed two days without its boss -- Shibli Rubayat-Ul Islam. The chairman stayed away from work fearing reprisals from colleagues, an official said, asking not to be named.

These activities are not very uncommon during a mass uprising as people vent anger on the high-ups, according to Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute.

"There should be a planned process of streamlining the financial institutions and regulatory bodies. The officials involved in malpractices will face consequences. No one should take the law into their own hands," he said.

"What we saw at the central bank was very disturbing. The central bank's top officials are now completely inactive, which will make the institution inactive," Ahsan Mansur said.

The interim government, which is being installed with Professor Muhammad Yunus as its head, will now decide on the resignations of the deputy governors.

The new government should be formed without delay because it needs time to find eligible people to run institutions, according to Ahsan Mansur.

On top of these protests, a gloomy report came from S&P Global Ratings. It said Bangladesh's political crisis has further undermined sovereign credit support since it lowered its long-term sovereign credit rating on July 30 this year. However, credit metrics may still support the ratings at the current level if the situation stabilises soon.

The protests that led to the abrupt resignation of Hasina on August 5 have exacerbated downside risks to economic growth, fiscal performance, and external metrics, S&P said.

The week was rife with commotions in the corporate world. On Tuesday, employees of Islami Bank Bangladesh staged a demonstration against alleged plundering from the bank by S Alam Group, a corporate giant with ties to Hasina. They also briefly barred some officials from the bank's head office in Motijheel.

The demonstrators alleged that they were deprived of various benefits for over a decade, following changes in the bank's ownership and board. Some employees also demonstrated at the bank's headquarters, demanding the resignation of deputy managing directors and other officials appointed by S Alam Group.

A group of officials at Sonali Bank yesterday called for the state-run lender's managing director to provide incentives and promotions to the officials who were "deprived" of benefits in the past several years.

BNP calls for unity, polls at the soonest

Khaleda, who landed in jail in a corruption case in February 2018.

At the beginning of her speech, Khaleda, who was released from house arrest on Monday, said she was grateful to the Almighty for being able to speak after being ill for a long time.

"During my imprisonment, you struggled and prayed for my release and recovery. For that, I thank you all," she added.

Her son Tarique Rahman, the acting chairman of BNP, addressed the rally virtually to a thunderous applause too.

He urged everyone not to take the law into their own hands and not to engage in revenge.

He called upon his party's leaders and activists and other democratic political parties to ensure the security of every person irrespective of religious identity and not indulge in violence.

"Stop attacking the police or religious minority communities from today. Even if someone tries to commit a crime using the name of BNP, hand them over to the law. Stand as a shield and set an example by ensuring the safety of everyone, regardless of their religion, race or identity."

Stressing the significance of the role of police, he said: "In a civilised and democratic state, the police are indispensable. The police are not the enemies of the people."

Democratic parties, including BNP, believe that except for a certain clique within the police, most officers are trying to perform their duties by adhering to job regulations and laws, he said.

"After Hasina fled the country, a clique is now conspiring to demoralise police. If the police can be rendered ineffective, it will become easy to destabilise the country. It will be easy to create insecurity among religious minorities."

Speaking about the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government, he said the day was akin to a second independence for Bangladesh.

"Bangladesh has been imprisoned for the past 15 years. On August 5, Bangladesh witnessed another victory through the united revolution of students and the people. Today, the door to democracy has opened. Today, our beloved Bangladesh is free and independent."

No evil force can suppress Bangladesh if the pro-Bangladesh forces stay united, he said.

"In the Liberation War of 1971 and the Liberation War of 2024, the people's message was only one: independence cannot be conditional."

Tarique emphasised making the administration competent, with highest priority given to merit recruitment and promotion.

The BNP has proposed establishing an upper house in the national parliament to include knowledgeable and distinguished people residing abroad in state administration and policymaking, said Tarique, who has been living in London since 2008.

"The national election must be held immediately and power must be handed over to the elected representatives," he added.

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir urged the president to form an interim government without any delay.

"This government will arrange national elections within three months. The people will fully support them in this process," he said.

Before the speakers commenced their speeches, the gathering observed a minute's silence in memory of those who lost their lives in the quota reform movement.

Six members of the party's standing committee addressed the crowd, expressing their gratitude to the students for their contributions.

Swearing-in tonight

General Waker-Uz-Zaman hoped that normalcy would return within three to four days as the situation across the country is improving significantly.

Those involved in the crimes committed over the past few days will not be spared and legal action will be taken against them, he said.

The army chief briefed the media at the Army Headquarters yesterday, two days after Hasina resigned and fled the country amid an upspring.

On Tuesday night, President Mohammed Shahabuddin gave his consent to the proposal of the key student protest organisers for making Prof Yunus the interim government chief.

Since then, the people waited to know when the government would take charge and bring the prevailing situation under its control.

Yesterday, General Waker-Uz-Zaman said he had talked to Prof Yunus.

"I felt very good talking to him. It seemed to me that he is very eager to take up the responsibility. I'm certain that he will be successful in taking us to a democratic process, and that we will benefit from it."

General Waker-Uz-Zaman said they have discussed with political parties and protest organisers about making Prof Yunus the interim government chief.

He said they talked to the president about it and made the proposal.

He added that Prof Yunus will reach Bangladesh today.

General Waker-Uz-Zaman hoped that Prof Yunus would get support from all political parties and students, and he would be successful in discharging his duties.

"The navy chief, the air force chief and I ... We all will support him," he said.

He praised students and volunteers working to maintain traffic on the city streets in the absence of traffic police and to clean different vandalised sites and requested them to continue the good work.

He said students, following his request, also worked to prevent looting and other criminal activities committed outside Dhaka.

The army chief said he talked to commanders and general officers commanding (GOC) yesterday and came to know that the situation was improving significantly.

He urged people not to believe any rumors involving the army.

General Waker-Uz-Zaman said work is on to revamp the police force as a new inspector general of police has already been appointed and hoped that police personnel would start performing their duties soon.

"I want to assure that the army, navy, and air force were with the people and will be with them," he said.

Responding to a query of a reporter when the interim government members can take the oath, the army chief said they were trying their best to hold the event today.

He said there was a proposal to hold the programme in the evening, but it would be tight given that Prof Yunus will reach Dhaka around 2:10pm.

"In that case, we may hold the programme at 8:00pm."

When his comment was sought about the people's concern over the recent incidents of looting and vandalism, General Waker-Uz-Zaman said he has taken responsibility of all people and sought cooperation from political leaders in this regard as there were possibilities of such incidents during the transition of power.

"They [political leaders] assured me of their best possible cooperation. Even though some incidents took place and there are some reasons behind it. The situation, however, is getting normal."

He said police personnel were not on the ground and it was not possible to fill the void with the army personnel.

However, the army personnel have been trying their best and they rescued thousands of people, police personnel and are guarding different important establishments like the airport, and the secretariat, said General Waker-Uz-Zaman.

"I'm very sorry and embarrassed for what has taken place in the first one or two days."

Apart from army personnel, navy and air force personnel are working, he said.

"We have tried our best. But still some incidents happened. It is simply because we did not have enough strength. But I'm sure when the police force gets revamped, the void will easily be filled," he said.

"But I want to say that we will try our best to bring those involved in such [criminal] activities to book," he added.

Asked whether he had any plan to increase the number of the force on the ground, the army chief said, "All the personnel we have in the military have already been deployed and they are working."

Responding to another question, he said, "Politicians asked me to take the responsibility [of people's safety].

"Somebody has to take it [responsibility]. There was no one to take it and thus I shouldered the responsibility. I have to take the responsibility if there is any failure here. I have tried my best and normalcy will return within a very short time," he said.

"But we have a lot to do. Give me some more time."

Gaza City braces for fresh offensive

Israel orders residents to evacuate Beit Hanoon, Beit Lahiya areas

AGENCIES

Israel ordered residents and displaced Palestinians to evacuate the Beit Hanoon and Beit Lahiya areas of Gaza City yesterday, as reports said a "large scale" Israeli army operation is expected to begin there soon.

"For your own safety, evacuate immediately to the known shelters in the centre of Gaza City," Israeli army spokesman Avichay Adraee said.

In a nearby Gaza City neighbourhood, Al-Tuffah, an Israeli airstrike on a house killed three Palestinians, medics said.

Later yesterday, 10 Palestinians were killed in two separate Israeli strikes in Khan Younis in southern Gaza. Medics said one strike killed three people on a motorcycle west of Khan Younis, while seven others were killed in tank shelling that hit a tent encampment in Abassan town, east of the city.

The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said that at least 39,677 people have been killed in the offensive, which entered its 11th month yesterday. The toll includes 24 deaths in the past 24 hours, according to ministry figures.

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken said Tuesday evening that both Iran and Israel should avoid escalating conflict, in his most direct wording towards US ally Israel on the Middle East's spiralling tensions.

"No one should escalate this conflict. We've been engaged in intense diplomacy with allies and partners, communicating that message directly to Iran. We communicated that message directly to Israel," Blinken told reporters.

the safety of people's lives and property.

Restoring law and order in the country is the most important thing, Shahabuddin said, adding that the police should focus on improving the current situation.

He also asked the authorities concerned to take necessary steps to ensure that every member of the police force can perform their duties with high morale and courage maintaining the chain of command.

'JOIN WORK WITHIN 24 HOURS'

IGP Mainul yesterday instructed all police personnel to return to their respective police lines, offices, and barracks to secure public order.

"We want to start anew to ensure the safety of people's lives. Therefore, all are instructed to return to their respective workplaces within the next 24 hours ... by Thursday evening [August 8]," he said at his first briefing at the Police Headquarters.

Mainul said officers and staffers of all metropolitan, district, river police, railway, and highway police stations have been asked to join work within 24 hours.

A directive has been sent to all police units in this regard, he added.

"The metropolitan police commissioners and the superintendents of police will form citizen security committees for each police station's jurisdiction area, comprising senior citizens, professionals, student representatives, political figures, and media personnel.

"The committees will play an emergency role in ensuring the security of police stations and police station areas and its final outline will be determined later," he said.

He directed his colleagues at all levels to refrain from making any demand, comment or reply through social media personally or under the banner of any batch or association in the interest of maintaining discipline in the police force.

Mainul replaced Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun as IGP. A circular was issued in this regard on Tuesday night by the Public Security Division of the home ministry.

Mamun's removal came in the wake of a breakdown of law and order across the country after the fall of the Awami League government on Monday.

At least 142 people have died across the country in mob violence and rioting since then.

Students step up to fill the vacuum

Remain vigilant to restore order in Dhaka, Ctg and beyond

"Is this a place to ply a rickshaw?"

A student was seen telling a rickshaw puller at Hatirjheel intersection.

"Please turn the rickshaw around," he added.

This scene was just a snapshot of the measures taken by students to maintain order during an unprecedented power vacuum in the country.

Across the city at Panthapath intersection, a group of college-goers was seen stopping another rickshaw for moving in the wrong direction.

The rickshaw passenger, a middle-aged man, was taken aback for a moment. But instead of irritation, his face broke into a warm smile.

He stepped out of the rickshaw, extending a hand to the young men and women.

"Thank you," he said, "You're doing a great job. Carry on."

Then, he bought water bottles for the students.

For over 48 hours, with no police presence and absence of an existing government, students have taken it upon themselves to prevent chaos and untoward incidents.

Armed with sticks and proudly displaying the national flag on their foreheads, they have stood guard in the capital and other parts of the country. The sight brings back memories of the 2018 road safety movement, which coincidentally also took place in August.

These students, with their ID cards hanging around their necks, have created separate lanes for emergency vehicles, and have also made sure everyone follows traffic rules. They are also cleaning the city streets as wastes piled up in absence of city corporation workers.

> This is our country. Our brothers gave lives for this country. We won't let Bangladesh descend into chaos as long as we have life in our body.
> ALI WASIF, a college student

There are reports of students guarding homes, establishments, and businesses of minority communities in different parts of the country.

Meanwhile, they have stood guard and cleaned various state establishments following the vandalism on August 5.

Students have been actively managing traffic at major intersections in Dhaka, including Gono Bhaban, TSC, Agargaon, Mirpur 10, and ECB intersection. They are also present in heavily congested areas like Dhanmondi, Kalabagan, Mirpur Road, Bijoy Sarani, Farmgate, Karwan Bazar, and Rampura, ensuring smooth vehicle flow.

Ali Wasif, a college student, said, "This is our country. Our brothers gave lives for this country. We won't let this country descend into chaos as long as we have life in our body." He was managing traffic at Panthapath intersection.

Commuters were gladly following their directions. Nahidul Islam, a private job holder, said, "It's heartwarming that these young people took the duty into their hands in the absence of traffic personnel. They proved themselves; they are the guardians of this country."

In Agargaon, students stood with placards reading, "Ajker Shikkha Hok Protidiner Obbhash" (Let today's learning be a daily habit).

Within two and a half days since the fall of Sheikh Hasina, the country has witnessed widespread violence, ransacking, and the vandalism of archaeological sculptures, statues, and murals of Hasina and Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman.

On Monday, a mob vandalised and set fire to Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Mural and Bangabandhu Memorial Museum, the structure of Themis at the Supreme Court premises, Shadhinata Sangram Bhashkarjo at Fuller Road, the sculpture of Shilpacharya Zainul Abedin in Mymensingh, and the Mujibnagar Liberation War Memorial Complex in Meherpur.

On Wednesday night, miscreants vandalised part of the "Madhusudan De Smriti Sculpture" in front of Madhu's Canteen on the Dhaka University premises.

In Mymensingh's Zainul Park area, the sculpture of Shilpacharya Zainul Abedin in front of the Zainul Abedin Sangrahashala (art gallery) was damaged by a mob on Monday afternoon.

Additionally, miscreants also broke down the 144-year-old Venus sculpture in front of Shashi Lodge the same day.

Md Saiful Islam, an employee of the lodge, said the mob broke down the gate in the afternoon and later destroyed the sculpture.

Maharaja Suryakanta Acharya Chowdhury, one of the Muktagacha zaminders, built the lodge in 1880 after his adopted son Maharaja Shashikanta Acharya Chowdhury, at a cost of Tk 11 lakh.

Biplob's story is one of hope and hardship. A student at Mozaffar Ali Fakir High School and College, he had appeared for his SSC exams earlier this year but had failed in Bangla. Determined to succeed, he was preparing to retake the exams next year.

But Biplob wasn't just a student; he was the backbone of his family.

With his father, Babul Mia, unable to work due to an orthopedic issue, Biplob took on the responsibility of supporting his family and helped his two younger sisters, Farjana Akter Babli and Jannatul Ferdous, continue their education.

He started working at a local oil mill while preparing for the exams.

His mother, Bilkis Akter, said on July 20, Biplob left the house in the morning after getting a phone call. He told his mother that he would join a protest rally and then come back home for lunch.

"I was cooking lunch when I heard the commotion from nearby Kaltapara Bazar," Bilkis said. "I cooked Pangas fish, his favourite. He was supposed to come back for lunch before heading to work."

As Biplob did not return, Bilkis started to panic.

"My heart kept telling me something was wrong. As I went outside, I saw a human haulier carrying the injured, and then I saw his legs. I knew it was Biplob. I screamed and lost consciousness."

Biplob's father, Babul Mia, was away in Sylhet for work when the incident occurred. "We have no land, just our home on two decimals of land," Babul said. "We lost our son, our support, and now the future of my daughters is in jeopardy."

Babul said his wife is now bedridden and has lost the ability to communicate properly. Biplob's grandmother, Rokeya Begum, said, "Biplob earned about Tk 8,000 a month and supported all of us."

His wife, Sadia Akter, 18, is beyond consolation. "After losing her husband, Sadia is unable to mourn; she only gazes blankly at those who come to console her," said Rakib's father Abdul Halim.

He said she is now living with her parents in the adjacent Ishwarganj upazila.

"Recounting the events of that day, Halim said he, along with his wife Nurunnahar Begum and their eldest daughter Mastura Akter, had left their home to attend a relative's wedding in the Kandulia area of Gouripur on July 19.

Rakib and Sadia remained at home.

Rakib's grief-stricken mother said, "We relied heavily on Rakib; he was a sincere and honest boy, our hope in every sense. But now, who will take care of us?"

"He used to encourage us to strive for the betterment of our family. He often motivated his sister Mastura to focus on her studies to secure a better future. But now, who will guide us? My only son is gone," Nurunnahar added.

His father added, "My son's lifeless body was brought home in the afternoon, and the local union parishad chairman urged us to bury him quickly to prevent further violence. Following his advice, we laid him to rest, but my wife, Nurunnahar, never got to see her beloved son's face one last time."

The family demanded proper investigation into the killing to ensure that those responsible are brought to justice.

Atiqul's body was taken to their village home Panpatti village of Patuakhali's Galachipa upazila that night. He was buried in their family graveyard the next day at noon.

Visiting the village home last week, this correspondent saw Atiqul's mother Mumtaz Begum wailing on the floor.

Shah Alam Howladar, his father, said, "Atiqul was my youngest son. He worked hard and continued his education, funding it with the money he earned from tuitions. Who will care for us now? How will we survive without him? I want a fair trial to bring his murderers to justice."

Cantonment reached near Ashulia Police Station on that day, the release said.

When the patrol team left for the cantonment with the injured, the policemen stationed in and around the police station started firing in the opposite direction with a hope to get assistance from the army patrol team.

The policemen were quickly identified and disarmed, said the ISPR release.

On information that some policemen had taken shelter in the cantonment, a mob gathered in front of the Dendabar Military Police Check Post in Savar Cantonment and demanded that the police personnel be handed over to them, the press release said.

When the crowd was assured of police personnel's disarmament, their identities and legal actions against them, the mob left the place, the ISPR said.

Students step up to fill the vacuum

Agriculture University, said, "We want our countrymen to abide by the law and order. Not only general citizens but all those in government positions must follow the law. This is what we fought for."

Beyond traffic management, students have taken on cleaning tasks, sweeping roads and removing debris. They are painting over the graffities on the walls of the city, in an attempt to restore Dhaka's pre-turmoil appearance.

Sharif Md Rafi from Daffodil International University shared that 40 students from his university have been working tirelessly, managing traffic and cleaning the city.

Students were also seen cleaning the Central Shaheed Minar, where recent anti-government movements had left significant waste.

Student volunteers of Red Crescent and Bangladesh Scouts were also present in the streets, assuming the role of police.

Similar scenes were also observed across the country in Khulna, Barishal, Chattogram and Sylhet.

In Chattogram, students took position at key intersections like Wasa, Agrabad, and Tigerpass, among others. They held posters which read, "Follow the traffic rules".

While some managed traffic, others collected waste, diligently cleaning their city.

The iconic tiger sculpture at Tigerpass was also cleaned. Local residents have expressed their appreciation for the students' efforts and responsibility.

In Barishal, students with sticks in hand and ID cards displayed on their necks maintained traffic flow and collected waste to clean the city. With brooms and bags, they worked to ensure Barishal remained orderly and clean.

In Khulna, students managed traffic at Shibbari Intersection, stopping bikers who were not wearing helmets.

In Sylhet, at Chouhatta, students managed traffic, instructing people to use crosswalks for their safety. A platform of students called Save Sylhet was seen collecting waste in the Rikabi Bazar area.

Meanwhile, Md Mainul Islam, newly-appointed inspector general of police (IGP), during a briefing at the police headquarters yesterday expressed his gratitude to the students for cleaning the city streets and controlling traffic system.

Secondary Education Board, confidential exam materials, including question papers, were stored in various police stations and other facilities for safekeeping.

Several of these locations were attacked on Monday following the resignation and departure of the former prime minister Sheikh Hasina. During the attacks, question papers in many areas were burned or destroyed, sources said.

The Higher Secondary Certificate and its equivalent exams began on June 30.

Liberation War, spoke to reporters after visiting the museum yesterday, two days after the attack following the ouster of Sheikh Hasina.

"Bangabandhu and Sheikh Hasina are not the same thing. Bangabandhu is the Father of the Nation and the great hero of independence. Today, I saw the charred house of Dhanmondi 32. It would have been better if I had died before that," Kader remarked.

He blamed the Awami League for many wrongdoings. "But Sheikh Mujibur Rahman did nothing wrong. He has brought honour to the Bengali nation. The destruction will remain as a blot on the history of the Bengali nation in future. Bangabandhu will live for ages. His honour will remain intact for ages. Those who committed this crime will be brought to book one day."

He also urged the student leaders to establish and maintain peace instead of seeking revenge. "There is nothing wrong if anyone supports the Awami League, do not assault them."

Besides the students, the administration and the army need to take steps to protect the Hindus and other minority groups, he said.

Asked what would happen to the leaders and activists of the AL as Hasina left the country, he said, "This disaster is not bigger than the catastrophe that came through the assassination of Bangabandhu. Yes, for some time, they will be afraid, and they will suffer. But the party is not completely doomed."

and people take to the streets for such killings and destruction? What message are we sending to our young generation by damaging these assets and our history? As a concerned citizen, I strongly condemn these," Sohel Taj, also a son of former prime minister Taj Uddin Ahmad, said.

"What benefit did they gain from burning the Dhanmondi-32 house and damaging Bangabandhu's sculptures?" he asked.

"We all want an impartial investigation on those cops who were involved in unjust activities. But why are we putting everyone against us? We need to remember that it is impossible to run a country without law enforcement agencies," he said.

He also made several demands regarding the upcoming interim government.

They include protecting lives and properties from ongoing destruction, holding accountable the Awami League leaders and activists involved in wrongdoings and ensuring the safety of innocent leaders and activists, giving space to dissent, restoring the right to vote, establishing good governance and the rule of law, freeing the judicial system, administration, and police forces from political influence, and ensuring communal harmony and fundamental rights.

In Chattogram, the Sheikh Russel Aviary and Eco-Park at Rangunia upazila was vandalised and looted for two consecutive days by miscreants following Hasina's resignation.

"Around 500 miscreants entered the park on Monday evening and vandalised everything in several phases till Tuesday night," said Nahid Hasan, in charge of the park and a forester of Chattogram South Forest Division.

They took away around 350 birds and two deer. Hasan said the miscreants also beat up six employees of the park and looted cable cars, tables, chairs, computers, electronic items, and documents. They set fire to various structures within the park.

Videos and photos showed some looters taking away a deer tied with ropes.

They vandalised the control box of the cable car and set fire to the office room of the park.

"We returned to the park on Wednesday with Army shelter. Currently, we have closed the park as per higher official directive," Hasan said. The park was opened for tourists in 2013.

Abdullah Al Mamun, divisional forest officer of the Chattogram South Forest Division, told this newspaper that they are yet to estimate the amount of damage.

CCC at a standstill

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

With the mayor remaining absent from his office, the activities of Chattogram City Corporation (CCC) have come to a standstill.

CCC officials also haven't been very active, with many being absent from work. Those who came to the office declined to talk to the media.

"Amid the current situation, we are feeling very insecure," said a CCC official, preferring anonymity.

According to sources, miscreants vandalised the offices of at least 12 ward councillors of CCC in different areas of the port city on Monday.

Several vehicles under the CCC conservancy department were also set on fire.

Since then, most CCC ward councillors have gone to hideouts, and CCC conservancy workers have not been going to localities for waste removal, fearing attacks.

Residents of the port city are suffering due to the waste removal activities being stopped for three days.

Waste was found to be piled up while visiting different areas of the city, including Katalganj, Askar Dighir Par, Chatteshwari Road, and Chawk Bazar.

"We cannot walk through the road due to the stink from the garbage piled up by the side of the road," said Masud Haider, a resident of Katalganj area.

CCC chief conservancy officer Commander Latiful Haque Kazmi could not be contacted, as his cell phone was found switched off.

Contacted, CCC Chief Executive Officer Sheikh Md Tauhidul Islam said all the officials and staffers were feeling insecure.

"We have taken some security measures on our own, as we are not getting any support from police," he said.

"A total of 12 ward councillors' offices have been vandalised on Monday, while miscreants destroyed all equipment for waste management kept in those offices," he said, adding that valuables worth Tk 1.57 crore have been destroyed in CCC ward 41.

They also vandalised some 12 vehicles of the CCC, of which, four were of the conservancy department, he said.

Asked why the mayor has been absent from office, Tauhidul said as police are providing no security, the mayor is not coming to office.

"I hope the situation will return to normalcy within the next week," he added.

A group of students not only cleaned the graffiti drawn on the sculpture of a tiger in the port city but also painted it anew. The photo was taken in the Tigerpass area yesterday afternoon.

More than just NUMBERS

A textile engineer shot dead in Dhaka. A student died of bullet wounds in Gouripur. A 21-year-old fatally shot in Mymensingh. At least 204 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

Thai court bans popular politician

Dissolves his Move Forward Party

AFP, Bangkok

Thailand's most popular politician was banned from politics for 10 years and his party dissolved yesterday over his attempt to reform the kingdom's archaic royal defamation laws.

The Constitutional Court in Bangkok voted "unanimously" to dissolve the Move Forward Party (MFP) and ban its executive board, which includes its former leader Pita Limjaroenrat, for 10 years, judge Punya Udchachon said.

Pita, 43, led the reformist MFP to a shock first place in a general election last year.

He struck a chord with young and urban voters with his pledge to reform Thailand's strict royal defamation law, which rights groups say has been misused to stifle pro-democracy groups.

Harris, Walz debut White House ticket

Vow to 'fight for future' in Philadelphia rally

AFP, Philadelphia

Kamala Harris made her debut Tuesday evening with new White House running mate Tim Walz, who unleashed a stinging rebuke of their Republican rival Donald Trump, questioning his commitment to the country and skewering his record in office.

Hours after being announced on the Democratic ticket, the Minnesota governor took the stage with Vice President Harris in the crucial swing state of Pennsylvania, and signaled his intent to press the case aggressively against Trump.

"Donald Trump -- he sees the world differently. He doesn't know the first thing about service because he's too busy serving himself," Walz told a crowd of around 10,000 wildly cheering supporters in Philadelphia.

He accused Trump of deliberately weakening the economy for his own ends, mocking law and order, and sowing "chaos and division"

"He drove our economy into the ground, and make no mistake: violent crime was up under Donald Trump. That's not even counting the crimes he committed," Walz added, earning roars of laughter and boisterous applause.

With less than three months to go until election day, most Americans don't know who Walz is -- and he gave voters a glimpse of his personal story, describing his military service, his experiences as a public school teacher and his record in politics.

He spoke of his upbringing in the small town of Butte, Nebraska where he worked on the family farm and where community was a "way of life" with neighbors striving together "for the common good." In their first campaign appearance together, Harris and Walz offered a glimpse of how they might appeal to voters as a duo -- one a trailblazing Black and South Asian former senator from California, the other a white ex-congressman from the blue-collar US heartland. Harris, 59, described Walz as "a leader who will help unite our nation and move us forward, a fighter for the middle class, a patriot who believes, as I do, in the extraordinary promise of America."

A former attorney general of California, Harris has sought to draw a contrast between her past as a prosecutor and Trump's criminal record, which extends to 34 felonies, with over a dozen more charges pending. But she told the crowd: "This campaign -- our campaign -- is not just a fight against Donald Trump. Our campaign -- this campaign -- is a fight for the future."

Harris draws more support among Black voters

Says analysis of Reuters polling; Trump up slightly among white voters

REUTERS, Washington

Democratic presidential candidate Kamala Harris is drawing more support from Black voters than President Joe Biden did when he was in the race this year, while Republican Donald Trump's support among white voters has risen somewhat in recent months, according to an analysis of Reuters/Ipsos polling.

The analysis, which examined more than 10,000 responses from seven nationwide Reuters/Ipsos polls conducted since May, points to significant strengths and vulnerabilities for Harris, the US vice president who took over Biden's campaign when the president dropped his re-election bid on July 21.

Harris would be the first Black woman elected president, as well as the first Asian American, if she were to defeat Trump in the November 5 election.

Some 70 percent of Black voters polled in July picked Harris over Trump on a hypothetical ballot, up from 59 percent who backed Biden in May and June polls. Trump's share of the Black vote rose marginally to 12 percent in July from 9 percent in May and June.

Trump, meanwhile, is seeing increased support from white voters. Some 50% picked Trump in July polls, up from 46% in May and June. Harris had the support of 38% of white voters in July, compared to 36% in May and June.

The race remains essentially tied, with Harris and Trump each getting 43% support in an aggregate of last month's polls. Biden and Trump each had 40% in the polls conducted in the previous two months.

The analysis examined poll responses gathered throughout July on a hypothetical Harris-Trump contest and included responses from before Biden, 81, ended his bid. All responses on Harris, however, were gathered after Biden's June 27 debate against Trump, when the president's faltering performance led Democrats to call on him to end his campaign.

White voters make up the biggest racial bloc, accounting for 72% of all voters in the 2020 election, according to the Pew Research Center, though their share of the electorate has dropped sharply in recent decades.

Ukraine now opening '2nd front' in Africa: Russia

AFP, Moscow

Russia said yesterday that Ukraine is now opening a "second front" in Africa after Mali and Niger broke off diplomatic relations with Kyiv, accusing it of support for "terrorist groups".

"Unable to defeat Russia on the battlefield, the criminal regime of Volodymyr Zelensky has opened a second front in Africa," Russian foreign ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova told the RIA Novosti news agency.

Zakharova accused Ukraine of "pandering to terrorist groups in countries on the continent friendly to Moscow".

Tuareg-led separatists have said they killed 84 fighters from Russia's Wagner mercenary group and 47 Malian soldiers in an attack last month in northern Mali.

Mali accused a senior Ukrainian official of having admitted Kyiv's role in the attack and broke off diplomatic relations on August 5.

period of chaos. Our Awami League leaders outside the city are being murdered. The Awami League is the largest democratic political party. It is not dead. The Awami League has liberated Bangladesh. It will not be easy to wipe it out."

"A new democratic Bangladesh is not possible without the Awami League," said Joy.

"I call upon all the leaders of Awami League to stand tall, knowing that we are with you. We will do everything needed to save the country and save the Awami League. Sheikh Hasina is not dead. We have not gone anywhere."

Hours after Hasina's departure on Monday, Joy told BBC that there will be no political comeback for her. Following that Joy gave an interview to DW Bangla, stating neither his mother, nor him nor any of their family members will enter politics.

Meanwhile, AL leaders and activists in Gopalganj yesterday vowed to bring back Hasina, who resigned following a massive uprising.

They marched through Tungipara and took the oath at the mausoleum of Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. Mahabub Ali Khan, president of Gopalganj Awami League, administered the oath.

Speaking at the programme, GM Sahab Uddin Azam, general secretary of Gopalganj AL, said they would fight politically and continue their movement until they could bring Hasina and her sister Sheikh Rehana back to the country.

Major shakeup night and yesterday.

The new IGP is a BCS 12th batch officer. Before becoming IGP, he served as the commandant of the Traffic and Driving School. He is from Panchagarh.

Additional IGP AKM Shahidur Rahman, also a 12th BCS police cadre officer, was serving in the police headquarters. He is from Barishal. Mainul Hasan who is from Kishoreganj and is a 17th BCS Batch officer was serving in the Criminal Investigation Department.

The changes came days after Sheikh Hasina was forced to resign as the prime minister and fled the country amid an unprecedented mass upsurge following student protests that saw over 400 people (as far as this newspaper could confirm) killed in violent clashes since July 16. Many of the deaths have been blamed on the indiscriminate firing of police, Rab and BGB to quell the protest.

Since the ouster, many police establishments came under attack by angry mobs across the country that left dozens of policemen killed, leaving the force's chain of command in disarray. The attacks also forced many policemen to flee for safety leaving their routine work and police establishments unguarded.

The newly appointed IGP yesterday instructed all policemen to return to their respective police lines, offices, and barracks to manage public order in the next 24 hours.

The IGP said many police officials were killed, injured and tortured because of some unprofessional and overly ambitious officials who did not follow the accepted principles of applying force and violated human rights.

Meanwhile, lower-ranked police personnel from constables to inspectors staged separate demonstrations at Dampara Police Lines in Chattogram yesterday and Barishal Police Lines on Tuesday afternoon. They also announced work abstention until their 11-point demand including the safety of every member of the police is ensured.

They brought out processions and held rallies demanding realisation of their demands which also included bringing those involved in the killings of police members to justice, forming an independent police commission to ensure that any political party cannot use police to implement its political agenda, ensuring eight hour working hours, increasing risk allowance, and the appointment of sergeant and sub-inspector through public service commission.

During the demonstration in Barishal, the agitating policemen said that they were the victims of some corrupt police officers and wanted those officials to be removed from the force.

In a written statement, the demonstrating policemen pointed out that the chain of command of police has broken down. "Our guardians (superiors) went into hiding abandoning us, leaving us insecure. The houses of the police forces are also being attacked. Many members of the police force have been brutally killed," it reads.

During a briefing yesterday, the IGP issued a warning to policemen on using social media, "I am directing my colleagues at all levels to refrain from making any demand, comment or reply through any kind of personal, association, batch, association on social media."

orphans. Even the former IGP, who went into hiding, gave direction to the police force in a video message. But there was no such message for us, not even from the cabinet division," said the deputy commissioner of a district in Mymensingh division.

The officer added that DCs across the country were shocked that no one even asked how they were doing even after their officers were vandalised.

The residence of Mymensingh DC, and many offices of upazila nirbahi officers and assistant commissioners were vandalised in Cumilla, Bhola, Sunamganj, Narsingdi and Chuadanga, officials said.

A secretary said the void in general administration leadership was unprecedented. "These top officials only thought about their own safety, setting a bad example."

An employee of the Mymensingh DC office said, "We have never heard of the general administration falling apart like this."

Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain did not pick up the phone.

Senior Secretary Mezbah said, "We talked with all the divisional commissioners and are taking information from the field officials."

Helicopter crashes in Nepali forest

All 5 on board killed

REUTERS, Kathmandu

A helicopter crashed in a forest outside Nepal's capital Kathmandu shortly after takeoff yesterday, killing all five people on board, an official said, the latest of more than a dozen air crashes in the mountainous region since 2000.

The helicopter, operated by Dynasty air crashed into a Himalayan forest in Shivapuri National Park of Nuwakot district, 57 km from the capital, deputy Chief District Officer Krishna Prasad said.

Police spokesman Dan Bahadur Karki confirmed all four passengers were Chinese nationals, three men and one woman, while the pilot was a Nepali male.

Local residents saw a fire emanating from forest and alerted authorities, he said.

The helicopter lost contact with air traffic control three minutes after takeoff, the Civil Aviation Authority of Nepal said.

Security force personnel search for the victims amidst the debris at the site of a helicopter crash on the outskirts of Kathmandu, Nepal yesterday. All five people aboard including the pilot and four Chinese tourists were killed in the crash. PHOTO: REUTERS

UK braces for more riots

Thousands of riot police on standby

AFP, London

Thousands of riot police stood ready yesterday as Britain remained on alert for disturbances during far-right protests across the country.

Nightly riots, during which mosques and migrant targets have been attacked, erupted after three children were murdered on July 29.

Police said they were investigating several racially-motivated hate crimes in Belfast on Tuesday, including an attack on a young boy that left him with minor facial injuries.

And far-right groups plan demonstrations yesterday in more than 30 locations, with immigration lawyers and buildings hosting asylum seekers primary targets, according to posts on messaging app Telegram leaked to the British media.

The government has said 6,000 specialist police are on standby to deal with the disorder, which has seen over 425 people arrested and at least 120 charged.

The violence broke out after girls aged nine, seven and six were killed and five more children critically injured during a knife attack at a Taylor Swift dance class in Southport.

Gaza prisoners subject to systematic abuse

Says rights group; Israeli army, prison service deny allegations, say law upheld

REUTERS, Jerusalem

Israel has conducted a systematic policy of prisoner abuse and torture since the start of the Gaza offensive, subjecting Palestinian detainees to acts ranging from arbitrary violence to sexual abuse, Israeli rights group B'Tselem said in a report.

It said the report, issued on Monday, was based on interviews with 55 Palestinians from Gaza, the West Bank and Israel detained in Israeli prisons since Hamas' attack on Israel that set off the offensive, most of them without being tried.

Palestinian prisoners were subjected to arbitrary beatings, humiliating treatment and sleep deprivation.

"The testimonies clearly indicate a systematic, institutional policy focused on the continual abuse and torture of all Palestinian prisoners held by Israel," the report said.

The Israeli military, which runs some detention facilities where Palestinian prisoners have been held, said that it operated according to the rule of law and any specific claims of abuse were investigated.

"The IDF categorically rejects allegations of systematic abuse, including sexual abuse, in its detention facilities," it said, adding that monitoring mechanisms were in place to ensure facilities were run in accordance with the law.

A spokesperson for the Israel Prison Service said that all prisoners were treated according to the law and all basic rights were fully applied by professionally trained guards.

"We are not aware of the claims you described and as far as we know, no such events have occurred under IPS responsibility," the spokesperson said, adding that detainees had the right to file complaints that would be fully examined and investigated.

The B'Tselem report was issued days after the Israeli military detained nine soldiers accused of severe abuse of a prisoner in a military facility in the Negev desert. Israeli press reports said the soldiers were accused of sexually abusing a member of an elite Hamas unit.

The report detailed allegations that Palestinian prisoners were subjected to arbitrary beatings, degrading and humiliating treatment and sleep deprivation, as well as "the repeated use of sexual violence, in varying degrees of severity".

"The overall picture indicates abuse and torture carried out under orders, in utter defiance of Israel's obligations both under domestic law and international law," it said.

UK TOP COURT

Former 'IS bride' loses citizenship removal appeal bid

AFP, London

A woman stripped of her British citizenship after leaving the country as a teenager to marry an Islamic State group fighter lost a bid yesterday to take her case to the UK's top court.

Shamima Begum, 24, had hoped to challenge an earlier ruling in which she lost an appeal against the removal of her citizenship.

But UK Supreme Court justices said she could not appeal again following her defeat at the Court of Appeal in February.

The justices found that her proposed grounds for appeal "do not raise an arguable point of law".

Begum, whose family is of Bangladeshi origin, was 15 years old when she left her east London home for Syria with two school friends in 2015.

While there, she married an IS fighter and had three children, none of whom survived. She said she was left stateless in February 2019 when Britain's then-interior minister revoked her citizenship on national security grounds after she was found in a Syrian refugee camp.

'Whom do we turn to for help?'

A house owner of the area told this correspondent that Alamgir, son of another resident name Siraj, banged on the main entrance.

"When I opened the gate, they [Alamgir and others] held a machete to my throat and demanded Tk 5 lakh." He said, adding that they also beat him up.

"At one point, the attackers took cash worth Tk 2 lakh, including Saudi riyals."

Alamgir and the rest fled the scene on motorbikes later, witnesses said.

Imran Hossain, a security guard of a house in Bashbari, said some young people were moving around the neighbourhood on a truck, while several others were on motorbikes.

Meanwhile, locals, mostly students, in Mohammadpur and Shyamoli areas, have formed groups to stay vigilant in their respective neighborhoods.

Last night, a group of residents was seen in Shyamoli Housing area, ready to alert others if any threats were detected, encouraging neighbours to band together and confront miscreants.

Apart from Mohammadpur, such incidents of robberies have also been reported from other areas of the capital, including Jatrabari, Demra, Badda, Rampura and Vatara.

Mahbubur Rahman, a resident on Hashem Khan Road in Rayerbazar and a trader by profession, said they usually leave for home late into the night but their house owner has demanded that everyone be back by 10:00pm due to the ongoing situation.

"Around 11:00-12:00 at night, multiple groups roam around the area to commit robbery and looting, taking advantage of the absence of law enforcers on the streets. This has been going on for the last two days. Who are we supposed to go to for help?"

People have also reported that shops were broken into and looted. They are in fear that such incidents will increase if police stations are not operational soon.

With stations unmanned and arms and ammunition looted from many, a grave sense of insecurity has been prevailing in the capital and elsewhere.

Speaking to The Daily Star last night, Indrajit Barua, a resident of Mohammadpur's Jafrabad, said a group of at least 15 teenagers armed with sharp weapons attacked his neighbouring house in Ityadi Mor around 10:00pm.

An army team later arrived and apprehended some of them, he said.

"There were so many screams we heard during the attack. We were so scared, we switched off the lights in our house and stayed inside."

Like Tuesday, locals of Mohammadpur around 11:00pm last night began alerting residents through loudspeakers from mosques to potential attacks. Similar loudspeaker alerts were reported in Dhanmondi, Uttara, Shekertek and Adabor last night.

Masum Basher, actor and resident of Dhanmondi 13/A near the the 32no bridge, said, "There is a group of around 100 civilians mobilised from the nearby Taqwa Masjid. They are stationed at different parts of Dhanmondi trying to provide security."

Mahmuda Dipa, resident of Arshinagar in the capital's Bosila, around 1:00am early today told The Daily Star that an announcement was made last evening regarding possible attacks. "Around 11:00pm, some locals reported an attack and by 12:50pm, residents of all surrounding buildings gathered and chased the miscreants away."

According to a video footage on social media, the army detained one person with sharp weapons from that area.

In Mirpur's ECB Chattar, witnesses said that around 11:45pm a group of over 100 people carrying sharp weapons and firearms came there. At that time, locals called upon the army, who detained some of the attackers. Gunshots were heard during that time.

In the wave of violent mob attacks since Sheikh Hasina's fall on Monday, many police stations have been vandalised and set ablaze.

Amid this spate of criminal activities, the army yesterday requested the citizens to contact the nearest army camps in emergency, said a press release issued by the Inter Services Public Relations Directorate.

It said the army will remain deployed to ensure the safety of the public, property and important government installations.

People were, however, requested to refrain from misleading the army with false information and rumours.

The ISPR also provided some mobile phone numbers of designate army control rooms.

one stage, the guards opened fire, leading to the deaths of the six prisoners, reads the Prothom Alo report.

Contacted, the jail's Deputy Jailer Md Farhad Sarkar said multiple attacks were carried out from inside and outside the prison on Tuesday.

He said some relatives of the prisoners tried to break the jail gate to release the prisoners.

There are about 3,000 prisoners in the jail, according to jail sources.

In Kushtia, at least 104 prisoners fled from the district jail around 2:00pm yesterday, said Jailor Abu Musa.

Seeking anonymity, several jail guards said a group of BNP men were scheduled to be released on bail around noon.

When the BNP men were walking out of the jail, several hundreds prisoners created chaos at the gate to get out. At one stage, the jail guards opened fire to foil their attempt.

In Pirojpur, a group of jail guards yesterday kept Pirojpur District Jail Super Debdulal Karmakar confined to his office for about three hours from 12:15pm alleging that he was involved in irregularities and corruption.

On information, Pirojpur Additional Deputy Commissioner Md Aminur Islam went to the jail and got Debdulal and his family members out of the jail compound.

On Monday evening, an unidentified number of prisoners escaped from the Satkhira District Jail. However, at least 200 of them surrendered to the jail authorities a day later, according to jail sources.

On the same evening, a mob stormed the Sherpur District Jail, leading to the escape of 518 inmates.

On July 19, at least 826 prisoners fled the Narsingdi District Jail. During the jailbreak, around 85 arms and 9,000 bullets were looted.

However, around 598 prisoners surrendered later, and 51 arms and 1,085 bullets were recovered.

Our district correspondents from respective districts contributed to this report.

China launches air, sea patrols near flashpoint reef

US holds joint drills

AFP, Beijing

China carried out a combat patrol to test "strike capabilities" near a flashpoint reef in the South China Sea yesterday, as the United States and its allies held joint military drills in the same waters.

Tensions in the disputed waterway have spiked following a series of escalating confrontations between Chinese and Philippine vessels that have fanned fears of a wider conflict that could draw in the United States due to its mutual defence treaty with Manila.

Beijing claims almost the entire South China Sea, brushing off rival claims of several Southeast Asian countries, including the Philippines, and an international ruling that its assertion has no legal basis.

Its claims include the waters around Scarborough Shoal -- which Beijing seized from Manila in 2012 -- where the Chinese military's Southern Theater Command said yesterday it had held joint sea and air patrols.

The triangular chain of reefs and rocks is 240 kilometres (150 miles) west of the Philippines' main island of Luzon and nearly 900 kilometres from the nearest major Chinese land mass of Hainan.

Beijing said the manoeuvres tested "the reconnaissance and early warning, rapid mobility, and joint strike capabilities of theatre troops".

Islami Bank rejects cheque seeking to withdraw Tk 548cr

MD MEHEDI HASAN

Islami Bank Bangladesh yesterday rejected a cheque of a little-known company seeking to withdraw Tk 548 crore.

An official of the Shariah-based bank, requesting anonymity, said their Khatunganj corporate branch in Chattogram received the cheque issued by Top Ten Trading Company.

The contact number which the company kept with the bank was found switched off yesterday.

The attempt to withdraw such a large amount amidst the countrywide turmoil raised suspicions, he said, adding, "We have rejected the bid to withdraw the money kept with us as deposits against loans."

The official also alleged that Md Akiz Uddin, deputy managing director (DMD) of Islami Bank, and his associates were behind the fund withdrawal attempt.

Md Akiz Uddin did not receive calls from this newspaper yesterday. He has not come to work since Sheikh Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister and fled the country on Monday in the face of spiralling protests.

Another DMD, Miftah Uddin, has also been absent.

Md Akiz Uddin was the personal secretary of Mohammed Saiful Alam, chairman of Chattogram-based S Alam Group, which holds a majority stake in the bank.

The group has been in the public discourse in recent times for its alleged excessive borrowing from the banking system in violation of rules.

On Tuesday, Islami Bank's Agrabad corporate branch in Chattogram rejected another cheque of a company with alleged links with S Alam Group seeking to withdraw Tk 325 crore.

The Daily Star tried to reach Islami Bank's Managing Director Mohammed Monirul Moula over the phone for comment but he did not receive calls.

A group of officials and staff of the bank staged demonstrations on Tuesday alleging that they were deprived of official benefits and promotions over the last seven years.

They demanded investigations into the activities of top officials of S Alam Group and into their appointment of officials at the bank.

The demonstrators said the officials appointed since 2017, when the group bought the stakes, have to be sacked while those whose jobs were illegally terminated have to be reinstated.

A source of Islami Bank told The Daily Star that Muhammad Qaisar Ali, additional managing director of the bank, was forced to resign yesterday.

Afterwards, he left with the help of army officials, as per the source.

Businesses worried about law and order situation

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Top businessmen and leaders of different business and trade bodies yesterday demanded the immediate restoration of law and order to ensure safety at their production units.

Numerous factories have been targeted by arson attacks in the past three days after Sheikh Hasina handed in her resignation from the position of prime minister on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

Business leaders urged the army chief to form an interim government soon and said immediate steps should be taken to restore law and order, protect the lives of workers, and ensure safety at industrial units.

They added that production in mills and factories is being hampered since they cannot transport goods from the port to factories.

Garment and textile mills were supposed to reopen yesterday, but many had to shut down and many others could not even reopen, particularly in Ashulia, where unidentified outsiders were preventing them from operating their units.

Across Ashulia, all garment units remained shuttered.

The International Chamber of Commerce, Bangladesh (ICC-B) called a press conference at the Platinum Grand Hotel in Dhaka, outlining fears of unrest and vandalism.

At the event, Tapan Chowdhury, managing director of Square Pharmaceuticals, said the biggest concern is the safety of workers and owners.

At the same time, international retailers and brands are asking for quick delivery of goods and have sought updates several times.

AK Azad, chairman and chief executive officer of Ha-Meem Group, said a group of businessmen met the president and army chief on August 6 to be briefed about the situation.

He said the businesses told the president and army chief that the main target at present is to improve the law and order situation, reopen factories, ensure safety and reactivate the police.

It will take two to three days for the chief of the interim government to be sworn in. By this time, shipments will face a challenge, Azad added.

"They will also face problems regarding payment to workers. Many factories may even be unable to pay workers on time," he lamented.

Many mills and factories of Ha-Meem and Beximco as well as the head office of Square Group were vandalised and looted alongside others, he added.

Businessmen have sought protection and the deployment of more army and police personnel to ensure safety in industrial areas like Ashulia, the main garments hub.

Simeen Rahman, vice-president of the Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry (MCCI), said restoration of law and order is paramount, not just for industries but also for everyday life.

She also requested the media to create a positive image of the country by avoiding propaganda and instead highlighting positive aspects.

Mohammad Hatem, executive president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association, earlier demanded the government keep the garment sector out of the purview of curfews and other political regulations.

"If the situation improves, business will revive and the economy will run well," he said.

He added that no students, ordinary people or political entities were involved in factory vandalism. Instead, he blamed unidentified miscreants.

ICC-B President Mahbubur Rahman said if steps are not taken immediately to restore law and order, the garment sector may lose work orders to competitor countries.

The reputation of Bangladesh as an exporting country is important now, he stressed.

A Matin Chowdhury, former president of the Bangladesh Textile Mills Association, said all textile and garment mills and factories have been severely affected over the last five months and the latest chaos has only deepened their woes.

Some international companies have cut back on work orders from big garment groups by 30 percent, seeking to de-risk their businesses.

MA Jabbar, managing director of DBL Group, said buyers were now inquiring more often about their shipments as their confidence has been dented by the spate of unrest.

Naser Ezaz Bijoy, CEO of Standard Chartered Bangladesh, said restoration of law and order is imperative alongside rebuilding the country's image.

"Reforms can be carried out gradually. The priority is restoration of law and order," he said.

Md Amin Helaly, senior vice-president of the Federation of Bangladesh Chambers of Commerce and Industry, said it was a critical time.

The current situation needs to improve for the economy's sake as the private sector accounts for around 85 percent of economic activities, he said.

Anwar-ul-Alam Chowdhury Parvez, a former president of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association, said the garment sector and remittances are the main sources of US dollars so these sectors should run smoothly.

In a statement issued yesterday, the MCCI expressed deep concern over the deteriorating law and order situation. The chamber said it knew through media reports that police have been abstaining from their duties.

Factories yet to start running in full swing for a lack of security

JAGARAN CHAKMA

Factories are yet to start running in full swing for a lack of law and order since Sheikh Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister three days ago in the face of a mass uprising.

A subsequent spate of looting and vandalism, especially on establishments related to the Awami League and homes and places of worship of religious minorities, has created panic among businesses and workers.

Between July 16 and yesterday, more than 535 people have been killed in violence that had its origins in a student movement demanding reforms to a quota system in public service jobs.

"Now, law and order should be established. This should be the top priority," said a leader of a platform for businesses on condition of anonymity.

"One of the most important tasks for the nation now is to ensure that the economic activities, particularly manufacturing and service sectors, return to business as usual," said Asif Ibrahim, chairman of Chattogram Stock Exchange.

"We must give assurance to our trading partners abroad that the private sector is back in business and will fulfil all commitments to them," he said.

A senior official of a top steel manufacturer said they ran their factories on a limited scale but could not deliver any products due to security concerns.

"We will start transporting steel after normalcy returns," he said.

Kamruzzaman Kamal, marketing director at Pran-RFL Group, said both production and distribution of products were being hampered immensely due to uncertainty and a lack of security.

"We are not operating our factories fully as the workers are in panic and many were absent from work," he said.

"At the same time, our deliveries are stuck as there is no security in the absence of law enforcement agencies," he added. He said the army comes to help when they are informed of any security risk.

"But it is not sufficient," he said.

"Miscreants have attacked and vandalised outlets of our distributors and owners of the rented outlets because of their involvement with a particular political party," he said.

Besides, export activities have remained suspended for over two weeks because of impediments to deliveries and shipments from ports, he added.

M Mohibuz Zaman, managing director of ACI Healthcare, said they have started running their factory partially with a small number of workers who live close to the plant.

Most workers were absent from work due to the ongoing volatility.

"However, delivery of medicine to pharmacies has been normal," he added.

ATMs out of cash as money supply disrupted

Bangladesh Bank asks lenders to halt suspicious transactions

AM JAHID

Nasir Hossain, a resident of the capital's Dhanmondi area, had to urgently buy daily necessities as he had not gone to the market for the past few days in the wake of the deadly protests that forced Sheikh Hasina to resign from her post as prime minister.

He usually does not keep a lot of cash with him owing to the convenience of ATM booths.

But despite travelling all around his neighbourhood, Hossain could not withdraw money from any machine yesterday as they had all run out of cash.

"Overall, I visited almost 10 booths but failed to withdraw a single penny. Either they had run out of money or restricted the use of ATM cards issued by other banks," he said.

Speaking to The Daily Star, multiple customers of different banks shared similar experiences.

Bankers said most ATMs were out of cash and even many branches were running low on cash as money supply had been disrupted due to inadequate security over the last several days.

Security concerns gripped the country since August 6 as police observed a work abstention, citing fears for their own safety amid reports of deadly attacks on policemen the previous night.

Bangladesh has been in turmoil since July, with over 535 fatalities in clashes involving protesting students, police and ruling party members.

Reports of violence and arson also flared on Monday night after Sheikh Hasina fled the country.

Apart from the limited presence of army personnel, the streets and important establishments in the capital were left without security.

Mohammad Ali, managing director and chief executive officer of Pubali Bank, said although there is no cash crisis in the banking sector, they have been unable to deliver money to booths and branches as security companies that transport money have halted services.

"The security agencies that carry our cash told us that they will not provide services in the current situation," he said.

Hence, banks are struggling to supply money, especially to remote branches and booths, he added.

"One of our advantages is that 95 percent of our ATM booths are connected to branches. So, if necessary, we can supply money to the booths from the branches. But we can't send money to the booths which are not connected to branches," Ali said.

An ATM booth of Pubali Bank on Kazi Nazrul Islam Avenue is shuttered. Many ATMs around the country have run out of cash as money supply has been disrupted by persisting unrest and violence. The photo was taken yesterday.

At the same time, banks operated on a limited scale across the country, closing outlets and booths in areas where the risk is greater.

Similar to the past couple of days, the presence of customers was very thin as no one went to banks unless they were facing an emergency.

In the Motijheel area, most branches operated through pocket gates while most booths were shuttered and the doors of several banks closed, hampering overall activities, including financial transactions.

Nahid Hasan, a private job holder, said he went to Motijheel from Farmgate yesterday to collect a bank statement from Standard Chartered Bangladesh as its branches in Karwan Bazar and Dhanmondi were closed.

"I had to enter the bank through the fire exit as the main door was shuttered," he said.

Mashrur Arefin, managing director and CEO of City Bank, said they have closed 19 out of 174 branches across the country due to security reasons.

As a pre-emptive measure, branch managers have been given the authority to operate as per their own security assessment, he said.

As a result, branch managers will be able to shut their operations without consent from the headquarters if they sense security concerns, he added.

Pubali Bank's Ali further said that the security provided by the banks with their own armed guards is insufficient given the current situation.

As a result, there is a risk of untoward incidents occurring at any time, he added.

He said money supply can be ensured if security is provided by the army, Border Guard Bangladesh or Rapid Action Battalion.

Economy faces fresh risks if stability not restored soon: S&P

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Bangladesh's political crisis has further undermined sovereign credit support since S&P Global Ratings lowered its long-term sovereign credit rating on July 30 this year, the American credit rating agency said yesterday.

However, credit metrics may still support the ratings at the current level if the situation stabilises soon, it said.

The protests that led to the abrupt resignation of Sheikh Hasina from the post of prime minister on August 5 have exacerbated downside risks to economic growth, fiscal performance, and external metrics, it said.

The damage to credit metrics may be contained if the socio-political situation normalises soon and Bangladesh forms a new government, the S&P said in a bulletin.

"While credit buffers have diminished, we would not expect immediate strong pressures on the credit ratings," it said.

Continued disruptions to social stability could weigh more heavily on credit metrics, dampening economic growth and government revenue, it said.

"In this scenario, exports would be materially lower than our expectations, with a more prolonged impact on Bangladesh's external balance sheet," said the S&P.

"Materially lower exports could weaken the generation of foreign exchange (forex), further diminishing the central bank's usable reserves," it said. A normal flow of remittances will also be crucial for Bangladesh to avoid a more acute forex shortage, the bulletin read.

India calls for trade deal among Bimstec nations

OUR CORRESPONDENT, New Delhi

India yesterday urged members of the Bay of Bengal Initiative for Multi-Sectoral Technical and Economic Cooperation (Bimstec) to consider forming a preferential trade agreement among themselves to foster intra-regional trade and investment while also enhancing regional competitiveness.

Piuysh Goyal, the commerce minister of India, said Bimstec members should re-examine their priorities with regard to trade negotiations so that the delayed free trade agreement can be finalised.

Goyal was speaking at the inaugural edition of the Bimstec Business Summit organised by the Confederation of Indian Industry, in partnership with the Indian Ministry of External Affairs in New Delhi.

Bimstec consists of Bangladesh, Bhutan, Nepal, India, Sri Lanka, Myanmar and Thailand.

Goyal said there is a need to reassess the reasons behind the delay in finalising the BIMSTEC free trade agreement.

He said the Bimstec needs to come up with a set of cogent recommendations that are acceptable to all seven member countries to this end.

"The trade negotiating committee and business community should consider a preferential trade agreement to begin fostering intra-regional trade and investment and enhance regional competitiveness," the Indian minister said.

Goyal called on the Bimstec members to introspect on their current trading relations, noting that trade among the Bimstec countries is small.

"There's a long way to go before we can achieve its full potential," he added.

After several days of violence and unrest, trucks and covered vans began returning to ports around the country to collect goods. However, importers and exporters are still fearful of violence and theft, so the clearance of goods has only improved slightly. The photo was taken at the Chattogram port yesterday. Security concerns slow clearance of goods from ports

MOHAMMAD SUMAN

Importers are refraining from clearing goods at the ports in Chattogram, Benapole and Mongla as well as the Kamalapur ICD due to a lack of security on major highways.

Despite port activities returning to normal, both importers and exporters highlighted the drop in clearance of goods, citing that highways are still unsafe.

The streets of Bangladesh convulsed with violence and death over the last three weeks, leaving over 535 dead, including students who were protesting for reforms.

The movement, which has been raging since July, climaxed on Monday with Sheikh Hasina handing in her resignation from the post of prime minister and fleeing the country.

However, many reports of violence and arson were reported in the aftermath.

As security concerns continue to cloud the nation, importers and exporters called for the swift formation of an interim government to stabilise the law and order situation.

"Clearing and forwarding (C&F) agents are responsible for clearing and delivering goods to factories, but fear of theft is preventing them from retrieving products," Aktar Hossain, president of the Chattogram C&F Agents Association, told The Daily Star.

He added that goods had been stolen from trucks and covered vans along the Dhaka-Chattogram Highway in recent weeks.

However, the release of goods increased since yesterday morning, according to the Chattogram Port Authority.

Around 2,238 TEUs (twenty-foot equivalent units) of containers were released as of 8am yesterday, with 2,958 TEUs shipped for export.

The number of released containers increased to 2,349 in the seven hours from 8am to 3pm yesterday.

Despite port activities returning to normal, both importers and exporters highlighted the drop in clearance of goods, citing that highways are still unsafe.

However, 42,638 TEUs were still in the port yard.

"It would be better if traders wait a few more days until the law and order improves as the situation on the road is still risky," said Syed M Tanvir, managing director of Pacific Jeans Ltd.

He hoped the situation would stabilise in a day or two as government departments, including law enforcement agencies, are undergoing massive changes and import-export activities would return to normal.

"The clearance of commercial goods has been sluggish for the past few weeks. Considering the current situation, the port authority has already waived the seven-day demurrage charge for importers," said Nahid Moin, director of the Junior Chamber of Commerce and Industries.

He demanded an extension of the waiver for another seven days to prevent unwanted delays.

"Customs officials and C&F agents did not go to the office for a few days owing to security concerns. But the situation is improving and people are working regularly today (Wednesday). So, product clearance has also increased," said Naziur Rahman, joint commissioner of the Chattogram Customs House.

AKM Mahbubur Rahman, customs commissioner of Mongla Port, and Mohammad Akbar Hossain, customs commissioner of Kamalpur ICD, echoed those sentiments.

Stocks continue to make gains riding on large investors

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Share markets in Bangladesh have continued to rise, buoyed by the ongoing movement for change, as large investors made fresh bets on blue-chip stocks yesterday, the second day of trade since the fall of the Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government on July 5.

The DSEX, the benchmark index of Dhaka Stock Exchange (DSE), soared for the second consecutive day by 192.37 points, or 3.54 percent, from that on the previous day and closed at 5,618.79.

Similarly, the DSES index for the Shariah-based companies, increased 42.53 points, or 3.61 percent, to 1,219.14.

Meanwhile, the DS30 index, which comprises blue-chip firms, surged 87.43 points, or 4.52 percent, to 2,022.17.

Stockbrokers are saying that institutional investors were buying stocks, for which the index was rising. They are hopeful of good governance in the market once a new government comes to office, they said.

Blue chip firms such as Square Pharmaceuticals, BAT Bangladesh, BRAC Bank, Islami Bank Bangladesh, Grameenphone, LafargeHolcim Bangladesh, Renata, City Bank, Olympic Industries and Robi Axiata were among those that largely attracted investors.

The first five entities posted a double-digit growth in share prices.

Square Pharmaceuticals and BAT Bangladesh contributed 29.27 percent and 19.69 percent respectively to the day's total market turnover, according to LankaBangla Finance Portal.

A top official of a leading stock brokerage firm said it had conducted an analysis on the effect of a political crisis on the capital market last year where it found that a regime change had a minimum upside of 1,000 points.

He expects many more fundamental changes to come about in the future through increased market monitoring and a drop in market manipulation.

As a result, good stocks will regain a momentum of gains while junk stocks will stop making it to the top gainers' list, which has happened for most of the days in the last couple of years, he added.

Turnover, which indicates the total value of shares changing hands on the trading floor of the country's premier bourse, increased 3.41 percent to Tk 776 crore, the highest in about one month.

Of the issues that changed hands on the DSE, 266 advanced, 114 declined and 16 did not witness any price fluctuation.

Non-bank financial institutions, telecom, and food and allied are the top three sectors that closed in the positive while jute, travel and leisure and paper and printing become the top three sectors that closed in the negative.

The pharmaceuticals sector dominated the turnover chart, accounting for 15.31 percent of the day's total turnover.

According to a market analyst, reforms were required in most of the regulatory bodies, including the Bangladesh Securities and Exchange Commission (BSEC), in order to bring good governance and transparency in the market.

Already, the BSEC's officials sat in a meeting yesterday where they planned to urge the new government to bring about the reforms.

Several BSEC sources confirmed that BSEC Chairman Prof Shibli Rubayat-Ul-Islam is planning to resign. He has not come to office in the last two days.

Chittagong Stock Exchange also made gains with its all-share price index, the prime index of the port city bourse, growing by 545.1 points, 3.54 percent, to settle at 15,938.25.

200 members call for reshuffle of BGMEA board

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

More than 200 garment exporters yesterday submitted a memorandum to the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), seeking significant reforms within the trade body.

They demanded the dissolution of the current BGMEA board and the formation of a new one as soon as possible.

The members of the BGMEA have lost confidence in the current board as they failed to provide any specific instructions to improve the industry since being elected about seven months ago, they said.

Export, import, production and banking were all affected by the unrest stemming from the student-led protests in July, which culminated in Sheikh Hasina handing in her resignation from the post of prime minister on August 5.

Additionally, the BGMEA did not express condolences for the deaths of over 535 people, including students, amid the recent protests.

Neither did the current board work to brighten the industry's image at home or abroad, they alleged.

As a result, buyers are losing confidence, the BGMEA members said in a statement.

The statement also said some influential leaders of the Sammilito Parishad, which won the BGMEA elections in February this year, were involved in rigging the result.

So, a group of general members cast a vote of no confidence in the current BGMEA board, said Faisal Samad, who led a panel called Forum in the elections.

"The current board could not improve the business situation even six months after being elected," he added.

Acting BGMEA President Khandoker Rafiqul Islam, who is also a senior vice-president of the trade body, said he received the memorandum and the issue would be discussed at a board meeting soon.

Islam said BGMEA President SM Mannan Kochi has not been very active in his duties amid the current spell of violence, leaving him to fill the role.

He informed that more than 200 general members came to the BGMEA office in the capital's Uttara at around 2:30pm and began agitating during the submission of the memorandum.

Islam hoped they could reach a solution following consultations with the board and other leaders.

The garments sector, which accounts for over 84 percent of the country's annual exports, has been going through a tough time as exporters are facing challenges in production and logistics.

Artistes are assets, should not be blindly dedicated to power: Mamo

> Everyone can have their own opinions and preferences. Positions can differ. Blind dedication towards anything leads to overall deterioration. Even in love, it ends the relationship. Artistes, poets, and writers are assets of the country. Everyone loves them. They should move forward and work accordingly.

National Film Award-winning actress Zakia Bari Mamo has been vocal in support of the student movement against discrimination from the very beginning. She has taken a stand in favour of the students everywhere, from posting on Facebook to even being present at Shaheed Minar and Shahbagh. She spoke to The Daily Star about the issues.

"I have always supported the students' rightful demands. I will stand by their rightful demands for my entire life. I stand against violence or division. I do not want any form of division. I urge everyone not to create any disunion."

Mamo further said, "It is our country, and as responsible citizens, we have to come forward to make the country beautiful."

The former Lux Superstar expressed her concern over the ongoing communal attacks. "What can we possibly achieve with such division? How can we accept the inhuman attack on musician Rahul Ananda's house, for instance?"

When asked what she expects from a new Bangladesh, Mamo said, "Let it be a government of the people. Corruption at all levels must be stopped and we must be concerned about the elimination of corruption at all levels."

In response to being asked what she is looking forward to from the students? She said, "They (the youth) are extremely wise and talented. I have faith in them. They will play a leading role in shaping a beautiful country."

Mamo resigned from the Actors' Equity Bangladesh. She was a member of the association for a long time. The decision stemmed from a statement that the Equity made, which directly opposed the student movement's interest and put them in the crosshairs of the brutish authoritative regime. "Stepping down from my position in the association was a personal decision. However, that doesn't mean I have severed ties with any of the artistes in the organisation. I have a good relationship with everyone, and it will remain so. My decision will not affect my friendship with them."

Regarding her opinion on some artistes, poets, and writers getting directly involved in politics, Momo remarked, "Everyone can have their own opinions and preferences. Positions can differ. Blind dedication towards anything leads to overall deterioration. Even in love, it ends the relationship. Artistes, poets, and writers are assets of the country. Everyone loves them. They should move forward together and work accordingly."

Mamo believes that upholding ethics and controlling greed is a way to organise a beautiful country. She expressed, "May wisdom lead us to the right path."

Sharing her expectations from the interim government, Mamo concluded the conversation, saying, "Millions of students have made demands. Now, there will be an interim government. I hope this government will run the country according to those needs."

Akcent holds Bangladeshi flag up high

On August 5, the nation celebrated the end of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's 15-year regime. However, this celebration was marred by incidents of vandalism and arson, as miscreants took advantage of the situation to loot innocent civilians.

As the country strives to recover and move forward, Adrian Claudiu Sina, the lead singer of the Romanian dance-pop group Akcent, expressed his support for Bangladesh by sharing old photos from a concert he held in the country. In the pictures, he proudly displayed the Bangladeshi flag.

The singer captioned the photos, "Bangladesh, stay strong! I believe in you! More power to you all."

Don't replace one fascist regime with a greater one: Parambrata

Addressing the recent state of affairs in Bangladesh, Kolkata actor Parambrata Chattopadhyay broke his silence in an article published by Anandabazar.

The actor expressed admiration for the students' demands for the former government's resignation, acknowledging the importance of such a bold stance.

Calling the day a "day of pride" for Bangladesh's citizens, Parambrata wrote, "We, too, feel the pride! It's undoubtedly a day of celebration! But do not tarnish the joy of overthrowing tyranny! Do not replace one fascist regime with a greater one! Honour this pro-democracy movement with a democratic establishment, not by force or coercion."

on for our colleagues who are Bangladeshis and for the people of Bangladesh," Lewis said, highlighting Bangladesh's progress towards the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development.

"Young people and people from every range of life across Bangladesh came out on the streets to celebrate," Lewis said, referencing the public response to Hasina's resignation.

She acknowledged that some celebrations turned violent, leading to destruction, attacks on police stations, and the killing of police officers deemed "aligned with the government".

Over the past weeks, more than 300 civilians have been killed and over 20,000 injured in student-led protests, marking some of the worst bloodshed in Bangladesh's history, she added.

Relative calm returned yesterday morning, but Lewis warned that the situation remains uncertain until a transitional government is fully established.

When asked how the protests led to the demands for the prime minister to be removed, she said that political frustration had been brewing since the controversial election in January, which many believed was not free and fair.

Economic issues, such as rising food and fuel prices, further exacerbated the situation, pushing marginalised Bangladeshis deeper into poverty, she added.

Young people, in particular, were affected by a court order in June on civil service job quotas favouring the elite, making employment prospects bleak for the two million young Bangladeshis entering the workforce annually, Lewis said.

Though the quota scheme was rescinded, protests evolved into broader calls for prime minister Hasina's resignation, with demonstrators from various societal sectors demanding change and transparency they felt were missing.

Lewis stressed the importance of inclusive dialogue and the formation of a responsive interim government to address the nation's challenges and aspirations.

Taiwan ex-soldier held in China returns home

AFP, TAIPEI

A former Taiwanese military officer held in China for nearly five months after he was rescued by Chinese authorities during a fishing trip finally returned home yesterday.

The angler, surnamed Hu, from Taiwan's outlying Kinmen islands was found with a friend on March 18 by the coast guard of China's Fujian province after the engine of their boat failed.

His friend was repatriated to Kinmen a few days later, while Hu -- an active member of Taiwan's military at the time -- was held as Chinese authorities accused him of intentionally concealing his identity.

Yesterday, Kinmen lawmaker Chen Yu-jen accompanied Hu's parents and daughter on the first ferry service to the Chinese city of Xiamen -- located just five kilometres (three miles) away -- to bring him back.

Chen live-streamed their return around noon on her Facebook page, showing Hu holding his daughter's hands as they disembarked from the ferry.

"I miss home, I miss home very much," he told reporters gathered at the dock.

"This was just an accident and it's good that it can be resolved smoothly."

was a major. He was elevated to the rank of lieutenant colonel the same year and took charge as director of Rab's intelligence wing on August 27, 2010.

He was made Rab's additional director general (operations) on December 7, 2013 after being promoted to colonel.

Allegations of enforced disappearances, killing people in contract and crossfire started piling up against Rab when Ziaul served as its intelligence chief and additional DG.

Despite various allegations, the Awami League government promoted Ziaul to the rank of Brigadier General and made him director (internal affairs) of National Security Intelligence.

In 2017, he was later made the director of the National Telecommunication Monitoring Centre (NTMC), an intelligence agency under the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence.

The agency is responsible for monitoring, collecting and recording information and communication data as well as for the interception of electronic communication such as phone calls, emails and social media accounts.

On July 21, 2022, a new post of director general of NTMC was created when Ziaul was promoted to the rank of major general; he became the first DG of NTMC.

During the peak of the student protest on June 17, the NTMC closed down mobile internet. A day later, it instructed International Internet Gateway companies to stop supplying bandwidth to broadband service providers, leading to a complete internet blackout in the country.

Although the BTRC is tasked with regulating the internet in Bangladesh, NTMC overstepped its authority to suppress the protesters, according to sources.

The NTMC, which began its full-fledged operation on January 1, 2017, has been monitoring all telecommunication service providers around the clock.

Since 2019, it could also block and filter content of the social media and websites critical of the government.

Earlier, on June 1, 2022, the Cabinet Committee on Government Procurement approved the proposal for the 'Part Procurement of Integrated Lawful Interception System - Geo Location System and Related Services' at a cost of Tk 172 crore.

The geo-location system can perform intelligent analysis by examining data from various sources.

The platform covers the geographical boundaries of the entire country, enabling the NTMC to identify the exact location of any person by analysing past location data.

Rights Commission. It urged the law-enforcing agencies, civil society and students to play an effective role in maintaining communal harmony.

A statement by 29 eminent citizens said they received reports of attacks on Hindus in at least 35 districts, including Khulna, Jashore, Satkhira, Jhenaidah, Dinajpur, Thakurgaon, Narail, Munshiganj, Noakhali, Meherpur and Dhaka.

Ahmadiyya people in Panchagarh and Rangpur, ethnic minorities in Rajshahi, Dinajpur, Naogaon, Chapainawabganj and Patuakhali, and Hijra community people in Jamalpur also came under attack, according to the statement.

They called upon the president and the army chief to deploy troops with specific directives in all districts and upazilas to prevent violence and looting.

The signatories of the statement include Sultana Kamal, Hameeda Hossain, Khushi Kabir, Rasheda K Choudhury, Syeda Rizwana Hasan, ZI Khan Panna, Saleem Samad, Shahnaz Huda, Shireen Huq, Kajal Debnath, Tabarak Hussain, Subrata Chowdhury, Sumaiya Khair, Faustina Pereira, and Shamsul Huda.

At a rally under the banner of "Pratibadi Samajik-Sangskritik Sangathan" outside the National Museum at Shahbagh in Dhaka at 4:30pm, 31 social and cultural organisations also condemned the vandalism of sculptures.

Mofizur Rahman Laltu, general secretary of Bibartan Sangskritik Kendra, called upon everyone to unite to resist the attacks, while Zakir Hossain, president of Gono Sangskritik Kendra, described the miscreants as "agents of fascism".

Harunur Rashid, a physician and leader of professionals, requested everyone not to divide people in the name of religion.

Amit Ranjan Dey, general secretary of Bangladesh Udichi Shilpigoshthi, read out a declaration on behalf of the 31 cultural and social organisations, presenting their vision for the type of government they want in the country.

Dipok Suman, chief of Tirandaz Natya Dal, and poet Hasan Fakir recited poetry at the event. Charan Sangskritik Kendra, Udichi Shilpigoshthi, Democrazy Clowns, and Bibartan Sangskritik Dal performed songs.

In a press statement, Manusher Jonno Foundation, or MJF, expressed support for the change towards democracy, but added that they are "deeply concerned" over the violence.

Shaheen Anam, executive director of MJF, said they were "delighted with the joy of liberation from the culture of a lack of democracy and misgovernance".

She congratulated the young generation on this victory and expressed "profound" respect for those who have been martyred.

Emphasising MJF's long-standing commitment to defending marginalised communities, Shaheen Anam "strongly" condemned the attacks on religious minorities and marginalised communities, and police stations, political offices, and statues as "completely unacceptable".

The Workers' Party of Bangladesh criticised the army chief for not playing a visible role in maintaining law and order even after promising to protect people. It called on the student leaders to take a vigilant and active role so that their victory does not go astray. It also urged all leftist, progressive, secular and anti-imperialist forces to take united action to restore peace and order in the society.

The US embassy also issued a security alert advising the US citizens to take shelter in safe places, and urged them to strongly consider returning to the US when safe to do so. The advisory said the situation in Bangladesh is unpredictable and volatile due to lack of law enforcers' presence.

In a statement, Australian Foreign Minister Penny Wong, meanwhile, called on all parties to de-escalate and respect universal rights.

"We urge a full, independent and impartial investigation into the events in recent weeks," she said on Tuesday, expressing deep concern over the violence and tragic loss of lives in Bangladesh. She offered deepest condolences to the families and friends of all those killed.

Australia continues to stand by the people of Bangladesh and supports their calls for an orderly and peaceful return to a democratic and inclusive government.

Australia also increased the level of security alert and advised Australians not to travel to Bangladesh.

It advised the Australians to move to a safe place and follow the advice of local authorities and avoid large gatherings.

Russian foreign ministry in a statement on Tuesday hoped the situation in Bangladesh will return to normalcy soon.

"We look forward to the internal political processes in that friendly country returning to the constitutional norms as soon as possible," it said.

According to the Russian embassy in Dhaka, no injuries of Russian citizens were reported.

disappearance, had a meeting with the DGFI.

The rest of the delegation included Odhikar Secretary Adilur Rahman Khan, women's rights activist Shireen Huq and academic CR Abrar.

After the meeting, Shireen told the families of some victims, "DGFI said that there are no detainees in its Dhaka facility at the moment. They invited us to visit the facility. They also said that they will form a joint commission to arrange visits for rights activists to 23 other facilities across the country to see if the victims of enforced disappearance are there.

"We have sought an appointment with the army chief to discuss formation of an inquiry committee," she said.

Families who had gathered in front the DGFI office at Dhaka Cantonment were left disappointed by this development.

Nadira Sultana, wife of Ataur Rahman who went missing on December 8, 2011, had rushed to Dhaka from Madaripur yesterday hoping to get back her husband.

"I left Dhaka after my husband went missing. I told everyone I am going to Dhaka to bring back my daughter's father. I left Madaripur at 3:00am," she said.

Another delegation of rights activists had visited the DGFI headquarters on Tuesday but they were told that the authorities would give an update on the victims of enforced disappearance the following day.

After visiting the DGFI office, some of the protesters led by Sanjida Islam Tulee visited the DB detention cells on the seventh floor of an eight-storey building on the DB office premises. The building also houses the office of the DMP's Counter Terrorism and Transnational Crime Unit.

"All the cells were empty, but it was evident that those were used until recently. There were some bottles of water and bedding," said Tulee.

CONCERT FOR BANGLADESH

Madison Square Garden, New York City, August 1, 1971

> It launched a geopolitical issue into America's collective psyche in a way that no concert ever had before. Harrison closed the show with a brand-new song. He called it "Bangla Desh." The lyrics were a simple plea to his millions of fans to help a suffering people.

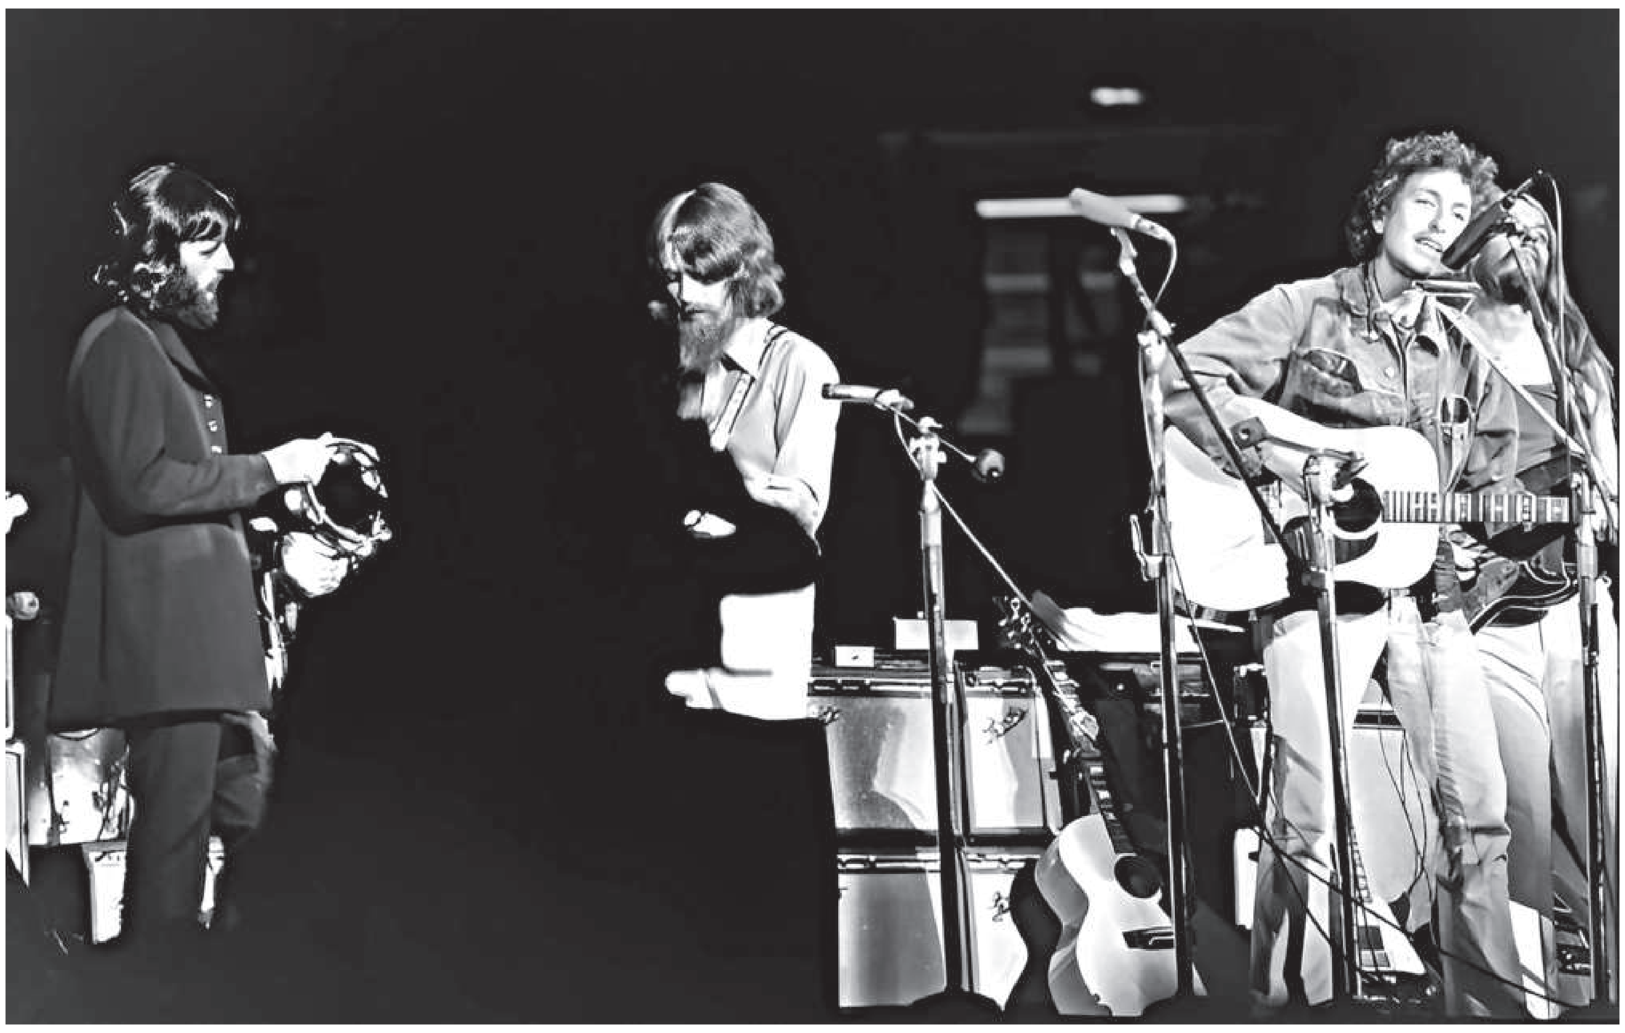
JASON MIKLIAN AND SCOTT CARNEY



George Harrison and Bob Dylan perform at `The concert for Bangladesh` in Madison Square Garden on 1 August 1971.

Ravi Shankar methodically plucked the seven top strings on his sitar, drawing twanged melodies out of the four-footlong instrument. Surrounded by marigolds and burning incense, Shankar paired the heavy top strings with notes from the airy twelve bottom strings, making complex sounds that a guitar could never attain. Barefoot, sitting cross-legged on a large antique rug, and draped in an exquisite white kurta, he was the world's best known sitar player and a musical deity in his home of India.

Shankar paused for a moment; the packed Madison Square Garden crowd cheered wildly. He smirked like he was remembering a joke. He'd toured the United States for a few years now and gotten used to the flower-power hippie crowd trying to find God by mixing his live music with drugs.

He finished adjusting his instrument and took the microphone. "If you appreciate the tuning so much, I hope you'll enjoy the playing more."

To be fair, a sports arena was a pretty odd place to showcase an instrument best suited for intimate rooms or beneath banyan trees. Still, Shankar couldn't resist gently mocking their musical ignorance. They cheered again, their marijuana haze easily deflecting his barb. Shankar played on as his sharp, lingering notes reverberated through the cavernous steel rafters and echoed away into oblivion. Backstage, George Harrison, Eric Clapton, and Ringo Starr waited their turns to perform.

This was the birth of a new phenomenon in American music: the rock-and-roll charity benefit concert. The idea was as simple as it was unorthodox: leverage the power of celebrity musicians to draw attention to an under-recognized human rights issue and raise money for organizations working in the field.

Two months earlier, Shankar paced around his Spanish-style villa in the heart of Hollywood. He'd followed the horrors in Pakistan, like every other overseas Bengali, and felt a kinship with the Pakistani Bengalis from just across the border of his own home in Calcutta. As the most famous living Bengali in the world, friends, gurus, and countrymen all asked him to help. Could he play a benefit at the local temple? And one at a high school too? Shankar agreed time and again, but the pitiful handfuls of money, one three-hour show at a time, couldn't possibly move the needle when ten million were starving to death.

Then Shankar's friend George Harrison called. He was coming to Los Angeles to work on a film score and would love to get in a sitar lesson or two. Shankar and Harrison had been friends ever since the Beatles ventured to India in 1966. John Lennon, Paul McCartney, and Ringo Starr soaked in the subcontinent like typical tourists, hitting up spiritual hotspots to taste transcendent religious bliss, only to have it evaporate by the time their plane touched down in London. But Harrison was different. He spent the next four years diving ever deeper into Indian mysticism. He flew around the world to seek out temples and ashrams, rereading the Bhagavad Gita and Autobiography of a Yogi, and studying at the feet of gurus, babas, and swamis. With music part and parcel of his spiritual journey (not to mention copious amounts of LSD, weed, and cocaine), he'd sought out India's most famous musician.

The moment Harrison heard Shankar play, he said, "I felt I wanted to walk out of my home that day and buy a one-way ticket to Calcutta. I would even have left my wife behind." The feeling wasn't exactly mutual. Shankar had never heard a Beatles song in his life. Harrison told the Bengali musician he played sitar on their megahit "Norwegian Wood." When Shankar listened to it later, he told a Rolling Stone journalist: "To tell you the truth, I had to keep my mouth shut. I couldn't believe it. It sounded so terrible." Still, Shankar loved Harrison's earnestness. Harrison loved that Shankar was one of the only people who never asked him for anything. They became fast friends.

And when Harrison came by Shankar's house that summer day in 1971, Shankar asked his first-ever favor. "George, this is the situation, I know it doesn't concern you, I know you can't possibly identify . . . but would you help me?"

Shankar mailed Harrison newspaper clippings of the atrocities that had been written by journalists who snuck back into Dacca to document Yahya and Tikka's genocidal path, but he didn't know if Harrison cared enough to read them. Shankar hoped they could do a fund-raiser together. With luck they might get $25,000. Harrison sat back and squinted, calculating the request. Maybe I went too far, Shankar thought. Now he looked like just another hanger-on hoping to milk a Beatle. Harrison had ended friendships for less.

Harrison snapped back to attention. No, a fund-raiser was no good. They needed something bigger, another Woodstock, but one where every artist would play for free and every penny would help East Pakistan's refugees. They'd make an album and a movie. They'd raise millions.

A musical revolution was born. They called it The Concert for Bangla Desh.

Harrison rang up his friends: the world's biggest rock stars. Getting a visa for Mick Jagger would be tricky after he'd been busted for marijuana possession. Bob Dylan was Harrison's idol, but he'd stopped performing live in 1966. The Beatles broke up two years back, and they were barely on speaking terms. And Eric Clapton was a heroin junkie, madly in love with Harrison's wife, Pattie. Harrison asked them all anyway—and dozens more. He made the calls on his rotary phone, from dawn until dusk, for six straight weeks. For the show, Harrison and Shankar agreed they'd start with a traditional Bengali music set, then bring on the rock. Harrison hired an Indian astrologer, who picked out the most auspicious date: August 1, 1971. Conveniently, it was also the only open date on the Garden's calendar on such short notice.

Shankar reached a blistering crescendo under the hot amber lights. Tabla, sarod, and tamboura players matched him, beat for beat, and doubled their tempo. Joni Mitchell, Crosby, Stills & Nash, The Who, and Grand Funk Railroad swayed along in the front row. Behind them, 19,500 fans itched for Shankar's long set to wrap while they waited for the main event.

Shankar tore through the last few dozen notes at 140 beats per minute, grinning from ear to ear. The crowd broke into wild applause. Then Shankar bowed, picked up his ten-pound sitar, and strolled backstage as the audio-visual team flicked on a documentary. The movie aimed to shock. Thousands of screaming fans hushed themselves to silence while absorbing nauseating images of crows picking at rotting corpses on the outskirts of Calcutta, Bengali mothers wiping biting flies off toddlers too weak to protest, and cholera victims dying in ditches.

The film's credits rolled with a plea to give to UNICEF and Harrison took the stage. He scanned the crowd nervously, white electric guitar in hand. The cord got wrapped around his foot.16 He had no idea if the show was going to be legendary—or just a legendary debacle. He wore a white suit with a red Om embroidered on the lapel in Sanskrit, a red button-up shirt, and a full Jesus beard and hair. He shook off the cord and strummed the opening bars of one of his biggest post-Beatles hits, "Wah-Wah." Ringo delivered drums right on cue.

Emotions rose as they played a series of massive hits, one after another, including "Jumpin' Jack Flash" to honor Mick Jagger, as well as some Beatles' tunes sung live by a Beatle for the first time in several years. A mustachioed Clapton floated his way onstage, dressed in a navy blue sports coat and jeans. He accessorized the outfit with a bloodstream packed to the gills with opioids. Clapton wedged his lit cigarette into his guitar's headstock and launched into a duet with Harrison. Together, they did the first ever live performance of "While My Guitar Gently Weeps." Clapton later said he was ashamed because he was so high he could barely walk, let alone play. The crowd was too enthralled at the sight of George Harrison and Eric Clapton riffing together to care. Now they were rolling. Harrison wrapped up "Here Comes the Sun," then took a quick sip from a Coca-Cola can resting on the monitor. He glanced offstage and breathed a sigh of relief. A man with a simple guitar at his side and a harmonica strapped to his neck waited for his turn onstage. He'd just biked into the arena, appearing like a divine apparition.

"I'd like to bring out a friend to us all, Mr. Bob Dylan!"

The crowd erupted. Dylan had gone recluse at the height of his popularity five years earlier and wasn't listed on the roster. He brought tender soul to his renditions of "A Hard Rain's A-Gonna Fall" and "Blowin' in the Wind," channeling the Great Bhola Cyclone through his song selections.

The concert was just one of dozens of public outpourings in support of the Bengali cause during that summer and fall. West Pakistan imprisoned a pregnant woman from Philadelphia for illegally crossing from India to East Pakistan to deliver saris. A Dutch man stole a famous Vermeer painting and tried to fence it for millions of dollars in order to give the sum in relief aid. Children in thirty thousand schools across America fasted for a day so that they could donate their lunch money to the cause. Activists built a refugee camp out of sewer pipes in front of the UN, about a mile and a half northeast of Madison Square Garden. They tried to shock the diplomats and ate the same single daily meal of rice and lentils that refugees did, while Allen Ginsberg read poetry.

In Paris, a former French special forces officer took a pistol and a briefcase bursting with colorful wires up to the cockpit of a Pakistan International Airways plane bound for Karachi. He hijacked it, demanding twenty tons of medical supplies for the Calcutta refugee camps. During the tense standoff, the French Red Cross brought the supplies as requested. Commandos disguised as airport workers loaded the crates, then captured the skyjacker. Though he only carried a toy gun and some wires, he still got five years in jail for the stunt. Nevertheless, the French Red Cross delivered the goods to the refugee camps as promised.

Yet none of those protests captured the imagination quite like the Concert for Bangladesh. It launched a geopolitical issue into America's collective psyche in a way that no concert ever had before. Harrison closed the show with a brand-new song. He called it "Bangla Desh." The lyrics were a simple plea to his millions of fans to help a suffering people. Harrison and the rest of rock's biggest stars left the stage, pumping their fists to raucous whistles and whoops. Clapton said, "This will always be remembered as a time that we could be proud of being musicians. We just weren't thinking of ourselves for five minutes."

Shankar agreed: "It was a miracle, really."

At the after-party, Keith Moon demolished a drum set and hotel room in celebration, as they all reveled in a job well done. The live concert album sold millions of copies and won a Grammy.

Public safety is paramount

Formation of interim govt vital to resume regular police activities

We are worried about the law-and-order situation which continues to be in a fluid state after deposed prime minister Sheikh Hasina fled the country on Monday. Even though there have been signs of improvement over the last three days, there is still a sense of fear and disorientation following widespread attacks on Awami League-linked establishments, minority communities, public properties and infrastructure including key symbols of power and nationhood, etc. What's at stake here is not just security, but also the functioning of regular activities and services, which cannot resume in full swing without an interim government.

That it couldn't still be formed, despite the efforts of all involved in the process, speaks to the complications related to such sensitive undertakings. The appointment of Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus as chief adviser of the interim government is reassuring. But we are yet to know about other appointees who will work alongside him, or when the government will be sworn in. Yunus will reportedly land in Bangladesh on Thursday afternoon, so things are expected to be fast-tracked after that. But as things stand, the country continues to stagger in a power vacuum.

The biggest worry in such a vacuum is the state of law and order. With the entire police force still missing from the scene, people are right to worry. Even though army and Ansar forces have stepped up in providing security, it hasn't calmed frayed nerves. According to an estimate, over 450 police stations across the country were destroyed or damaged on Monday alone. Arms and ammunition were looted from many of the stations. Over the last few days, many police officers were killed or injured in such attacks. Clearly, the morale among officers is extremely low. If the police don't feel protected themselves, how can they provide protection to others? With the non-cadre officers staging work abstention, and cadre officers largely in hiding, it may take some time to restore order among the force.

This is bad news. Students who led the movement that brought down the Awami League government are trying to do the best they can to help fill the vacuum. They are managing traffic, guarding at-risk police stations, churches and temples, helping clean up garbage, etc. This is commendable indeed. But it can hardly make up for the services provided by professionals in the police, fire service, customs, and other relevant bodies. In fact, the events of the last few days have had a disruptive effect across all government-linked institutions, leading to major reshuffles in some key institutions. Many long-suppressed issues among public employees are also coming to the fore.

While we hope these will be resolved sooner than later, ensuring the security of citizens is something that cannot wait. We understand that given how entranced corruption was in police force—and how politicised it became—overhauling the force and restoring people's faith in it will not be easy. This is something the incoming administration must work on. But right now, we urge the authorities to step up their efforts to ensure safety. That means further involvement of the military forces in law enforcement activities across the country, especially in risky areas. The police authorities also must do whatever necessary to put officers back on the field, and operationalise all police stations as soon as possible.

Time to bring back smuggled money

Those involved in stealing funds must be held accountable

With the hush-hush policy gone now that the reign of Sheikh Hasina's government is over, the true extent of our economic crisis is coming to light. According to a report by Bonik Barta, over the last 15 years of her rule, nearly $150 billion, equivalent to around Tk 17.6 lakh crore, was syphoned out of the country. That's more than double the amount of the current national budget—Tk 7.97 lakh crore—which happens to be the biggest in our history.

The report is based on the findings of US-based think tank Global Financial Integrity (GFI). Most of the stolen funds apparently came from big loans taken from banks, mostly by politically influential people and businesses. Those who stole the money included politicians, businessmen, bureaucrats, police officials, high-ups of banks, NBFIs, insurance companies, etc. Even mid-level officials of these institutions were involved. Money was also stolen from various government projects, through inflated prices and orchestrated cost overruns.

Money laundering and trade mis-invoicing were among the popular means for smuggling money, with some of the funds stored in offshore accounts in Switzerland, the UK, the US, Canada, the UAE, Southeast Asian countries like Singapore, and East European countries, among others. Some of the funds were also invested in properties in Malaysia, the UAE, Canada, and the UK. One notable example was the former Land Minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury who amassed enough money illegally to buy 260 properties in the UK, worth Tk 1,888 crore.

This shows how those who were entrusted with the responsibility of protecting our money were often the ones to embezzle it. The massive pilfering was only possible because relevant state institutions became virtually ineffective because of rampant corruption and irregularities. Several Bangladesh Bank high-ups admitted they were forced to disregard regulations in the face of political pressure. A culture of impunity and lack of accountability let corrupt elements like former police chief Benazir Ahmed get away with amassing illegal wealth.

Awami League was not the first ruling party to facilitate money laundering, nor might it be the last. To ensure this doesn't happen again, we must overhaul and strengthen relevant institutions so that they can do their job properly. Reforms in the banking sector are also long overdue. We must not waste the opportunity for reforms created by the recent student-led mass movement. The interim government, likely to be sworn in later today, must make it a priority to hold accountable those who laundered money and recover the funds to help rebuild our economy.

'No political decision should be taken without students' input'

What are your thoughts on the new interim government proposed by the students with Dr Yunus as its head?

In the meeting on August 5 with the president and the army chief at the Bangabhaban, we have specifically mentioned that no political decision should be taken without taking the opinions and inputs from students, because it is the students who organised this movement; it is the students and the mass people who sacrificed their lives which led to the Sheikh Hasina regime's fall. The organisers of the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement have already proposed the names for the interim government. Now it should be formed without further delay—by today (Wednesday).

Do you think the leaders of the political parties who were present there at the Bangabhaban on August 5 represent the students' and the mass people's aspirations for a new Bangladesh? Besides you, we saw leaders of only right-wing political parties, including Jamaat and Hefazat.

When they invited me, they didn't tell me who the other invitees were. As a political party, we thought that it was important to present our views and so we went there. Seeing the other participants in the meeting, we proposed that the other political parties who were actively involved with the movement should also be invited for discussion. They told us that the discussions were not over, that they would also invite others. I would like to make it clear that we were not there to form any political alliance. We were called in for discussion on the formation of the interim government, so were other political parties and individuals.

Student organisers have categorically said they are against any form of fascism. Can we really say that the parties that were invited for the discussion have been above this? What can people really expect from them?

If the people cannot expect anything from these political parties, they have other choices and alternatives in a democratic system. Democracy means people have the absolute power and freedom to choose their candidates. This must be ensured. We have seen how people have revolted against the fascist Hasina regime. Likewise, people can also reject any other political party who exhibited their fascist nature in the past. There are other alternatives from whom they can choose their candidates. We have been fighting for a long time to restore people's voting rights. I think after this student revolution, no party will ever dare to rule the country in the same fascist manner, people will not tolerate it. We think new political forces will emerge in the country who will eradicate all kinds discrimination among people and ensure economic freedom for our people. Our aim should be to inculcate a culture of tolerance and harmony in spite of all our differences.

It seems the BNP is already in an election mood. With Khaleda Zia and the party's other senior leaders and activists released, they already held a political programme today, at a time when the law-and-order situation in the country is still volatile and when an interim government is yet to be formed. Is this not somewhat opportunistic?

We have been saying all along that at this moment it is our responsibility to uphold the spirit of the mass uprising and ensure stability, peace, safety and security of the people and always remain vigilant to stop any attacks and violence on the minorities. Looting and destroying of public properties must stop. We have already directed all our activists to form voluntary organisations to ensure safety and security of the people, particularly the minority communities, so that the opportunists cannot tarnish the image of this student revolution through carrying out violence. After the interim government is formed, the political parties of the country should also give their opinions on how this government can carry out its mandated duties. All the political parties must also assist the new interim government to ensure that there is no lawlessness and anarchy in the country. Ensuring the safety of people should be our key priority at this moment. The political parties should play the role expected from them for transitioning into a true democracy. It would be expected that the BNP's programme will also be aimed at these goals.

What will be the major challenges for the soon-to-be-formed interim government in fulfilling the dreams and aspirations of the students? What should be the priorities for this government?

Under the Hasina regime, people were killed, tortured and arrested indiscriminately and they are still living in insecurity and fear. All these incidents must be investigated on a priority basis and those involved must face justice. In our talks with the president and the army chief, we also asked them to take responsibility for the families of the martyrs and compensate them adequately. We also demanded immediate release of those detained unlawfully during this movement.

Ensuring safety of people's lives and property should be a key priority for the interim government. They must also reconstruct the administration, particularly the police administration and the civil administration, so that they can serve the people and not become their enemies. This should be done immediately. Thirdly, we are currently facing an economic crisis and the interim government must take the necessary measures to overcome the challenges. We would urge our brothers and sisters living abroad to send us more remittance now to avoid the impending economic crisis. Finally, this government must work sincerely to establish and strengthen democracy in the country by making the necessary institutional changes and constitutional reforms. Our political parties must come to a consensus on this.

How do we clear this economic mess?

MAMUN RASHID

Mamun Rashid

We extend our sincerest congratulations to the young students and individuals in our community who demanded for a just and more equitable social order in Bangladesh. They have achieved the seemingly unachievable. Their courageous deeds have not only converted the quota reform movement into a powerful popular revolt for political transformation, but also resonated with the aspirations of every individual in the nation. Their resonant voices have deeply moved and inspired the entire nation, paving the path towards aspired progress. Credit also goes to whatever little is left in our civil society, including some important stakeholders of change in the media.

For the last 15 years, individuals as well as institutions have been denied economic advantages as a result of persistent corruption and prejudice. The government's exclusive preoccupation was with infrastructural development in the name of GDP growth, which failed to significantly impact the lives of broader segments of the populace, putting the inclusion agenda in the backyard with very little investment in social infrastructure building. Hence, it only favoured dishonest politicians, bureaucrats, and businessmen.

The regime has methodically destroyed institutions. The scarcity of employment prospects and the practice of preferential treatment via the quota system are indicative of the marginalisation experienced by the youth in the country. More so, the scenario in education, from the primary level to tertiary educational institutions, has become very pathetic and dismal. The lower level of the judiciary, and education and health systems have been politicised, resulting in poor service delivery. Despite loud discussions over it, the revenue expansion agenda was not acted upon due to individual officials prioritising personal gain. The overall size of the possible inward remittance is estimated to be more than $40 billion annually, but actual remittance has never exceeded $24 billion in a year because of an ever engulfing hundi business. Even our regulator lent a blind eye towards what was being done by some exchange houses owned by interest groups in the gulf, resulting in rampant rise in trade-based money laundering. The six and nine percent caps on interest rates only favoured a rogue few, not the honest and small entrepreneurs. An almost fixed exchange rate regime discouraged exporters and remitters. It neither helped foreign investors, nor the local ones. Favouritism in identifying the public interest projects as well as selection of project drivers also remained a big question for the development partners.

There is no doubt that the state and its dysfunctional systems must be rebuilt. The economy must be salvaged from the turmoil caused by the despotic administration and its supporters. Rectifying the chaos caused by the political regime over the last 15 years would need extensive effort and resolute decision-making. Over the last 15 years, we have seen the growth of many monsters, trying to swallow everything around, occupying large banks. High amount of cash transactions in banks during odd hours and the significant rise of impaired loans favoured only a few cronies, and depriving the honest entrepreneurs.

Individuals are experiencing the adverse effects of significant inflationary pressure and insufficient money in the ecosystem. The economic foundations have been severely compromised. Consequently, all economic indices are under strain. Every institution has been methodically dismantled to enable corruption and maintain an undemocratic grip on power as well as simple decision making.

Individuals are experiencing the adverse effects of significant inflationary pressure and insufficient money in the ecosystem. The economic foundations have been severely compromised. Consequently, all economic indices are under strain. Every institution has been methodically dismantled to enable corruption and maintain an undemocratic grip on power as well as simple decision making.

The heads of regulatory agencies responsible for governing the economy exhibited complete susceptibility to a single "decision maker" and made erroneous and detrimental choices in order to appease political seniors and those with connections to those in power. Some examples are Bangladesh Bank, National Board of Revenue, and the capital market watchdog. Consequently, these entities have implemented various discriminatory and erroneous policies. Some of these actions involve amending the Banking Company Act to benefit the few board directors, refraining from taking any measures against willful bank loan defaulters, altering the definition of classified loans, maintaining fixed interest rate caps and exchange rate for an extended period, and neglecting to make autonomous decisions to manage inflation.

Hence the desired laundry list to reboot the economy is quite extensive. Significant exertion and unwavering commitment will be required to effectively guide the trajectory. Decision makers need to be very cautious regarding who they put up to dispassionately clear the mess. Relevant credentials and the ability to remain above any controversy should be the minimum threshold. Along with these, implementation with precision can never be underestimated.

Regime change in Bangladesh: The fallout for India

Dr Salimullah Khan
is professor of general education at the University of Liberal Arts (ULAB).

SALIMULLAH KHAN

Vladimir Lenin, after all, was right. Sometimes, there are decades where nothing happens; and there are weeks where decades happen. Glory to the martyrs and vanguards of Bangladesh who made it to a possible democracy once more!

In Bangladesh, August is apparently a month when decades happen. Karl Marx famously said, "History repeats itself, first as tragedy, second as farce." If the fall of the BAKSAL (Bangladesh Krishak Sramik Awami League) regime in August 1975 was a tragedy, the boisterous exit of the regime this August is a repetition, this time as a farce.The free fall of the regime is a relief for many; however, there are also darker clouds around in the horizon.

The odds are no less apparent. One of these concerns India, the nation-state's largest neighbour. The facts around the number one superpower, the US, are another concern. But I can't deal with the second topic in this space. Let me rather stay with only India today.

To some, the events of July-August, for all their valour and glory may tell the same old story. But it is not exactly a void in which they disgorge.

The coup d'état of 1975 was organised clandestinely. It was a civilian-military combined effort. There is good evidence that it was sustained by a Western power. The current conjuncture seems to involve a broad coalition of radical forces led by university students, sustained by the support of a cross-section of civil society, political parties and the so-called international community. The fallout now is more uncertain than ever, at least compared to what it was a half century earlier.

The Awami League regime in 1975 under Sheikh Mujibur Rahman had gone berserk with its one nation one leader "mantra". In 2024, the daughter's regime only went wilder with its sheer ruthlessness. History repeated itself.

It is perhaps too early to say what awaits us even in the not-too-distant future. A doubt pops up, nevertheless. What is the nature of the August 5 revolution? Is it a popular revolution like the French Revolution flying the banner of equality, human dignity and social justice? Or is it to prove a coup d'etat of sorts, an 18th Brumaire of civil society, midwifed by the "international community", tailored by the armed forces? How different is it going to be from the events of January 11, 2007, events welcomed by the country's biggest neighbour, India? We hardly learn from history. That seems to be the only takeaway from history's department stores.

Did Bangladesh's inevitable neighbour follow even a rule of its own best interest in underscoring the dynastic autocracy in Bangladesh?
PHOTO: PID

One does not choose from an empty set. Not a neighbour, at any rate. Nations act, as everyone knows, not as philanthropists or cynics but in their own best interest. Did Bangladesh's inevitable neighbour follow even a rule of its own best interest in underscoring the dynastic autocracy in Bangladesh? Was that the best option it had had? Will it learn a lesson, in all candour, this turnaround? These are questions best left to political pundits in India and beyond.

For us, citizens and denizens of Bangladesh, it is more of a single-payer option. India's unabashed selfishness in promoting a regime that clearly violated all rules of liberal democracy proves highly short-sighted, more now than ever.

What alternatives did India have to choose from is not apparent, or not well-known in any case. But it may even be non-transparent. In 1975, India blatantly ignored its lower riparian neighbour in claiming the Ganga-Padma as a virtually all-India domestic watercourse. That it is an international river, it apparently forgot then. India's stance on other watercourses changed little since then. The waters of the Teesta and many other common international rivers don't flow quietly anymore.

Border killings on a rhythmic scale are not simply a mystic symbol of India's political muscle but of its myopic nature. It is a bizarre thing: "India's Bangladesh Problem," as one pundit called it. Termites, they call their unhandsome neighbours.

India's China obsession, at least ever since her war with China in 1962, could have misled it to its Bangladesh policy. But a people who didn't put up with Pakistan's proto-colonial repressive regime of two and a half decades can hardly be expected (let alone taken for granted) to welcome such a proverbial "subsidiary alliance" as India desires to perpetrate on Bangladesh.

The latest regime change in the wake of a popular mass uprising should provide an occasion to rethink future relations between the two sovereign neighbours in South Asia, adorned by the common historical legacy of many centuries.

The immiseration of one neighbour for the benefit of the other can only be sustained by such regimes as the just fallen one in Bangladesh. India is a habitat, nay a breeding ground, of proverbial wise men. I am sure they will not be deluded by dreams of "Akhand Hindustan". That simply will not work.

The regime change of August 2024 may also provide an occasion to reflect on the question of national identity, a question the think tanks of national security (or regional imperialism if you like) can only ignore at their own peril.

Let history not repeat a second tragedy. The regime change in Dhaka, apparently, will enjoy the blessings of the "international community." But it is unlikely to work well if India does not consider the forces of the current circumstances today. Tomorrow the same forces will force India to think.

India's best interest may perhaps lie in strengthening a new democracy in Bangladesh. At any rate, not obstructing democratic aspirations of a new generation in its eastward neighbourhood is the key point.

How to not fall for another dictator

Lessons from the Arab Spring

Ramisa Rob
is in-charge of Geopolitical Insights at The Daily Star.

RAMISA ROB

The quick-fire collapse of Sheikh Hasina's Awami League regime seemed unbelievable till it happened on August 5, 2024. The historic fall of the longest serving female head of state in the world mirrors the Arab Spring in the Middle East, which began in 2010 when anti-authoritarian uprisings toppled one notorious dictator after another in the region. Before her resignation, Bangladesh's former Prime Minister's response to the student quota reform movement with crushing lethality that killed at least 450 people, had begun resembling the obsessive autocratic tendencies and brutal methods of ousted Arab leaders such as Tunisia's Zine el-Abidine Ben Ali, Egypt's Hosni Mubarak, and Libya's Muammar Gaddafi—to name a few.

The "one-point" step down slogan—Ek Dafa, Ek Dabi—reverberating in the nationwide protests on Saturday, August 3, was reminiscent of the slogan of the Arab Spring, "The people want to bring down the regime," as were the images of hope and euphoria of mass gatherings of people from all walks of life striving for democratic change. But beyond the optics, the most significant parallel between Bangladesh's historic movement and the Arab Spring is their driving force: pent-up frustration and socio-economic grievances of the mass people, the youth, the middle and lower class, towards grave inequality and injustice fostered by corrupt, fear-mongering dictatorships.

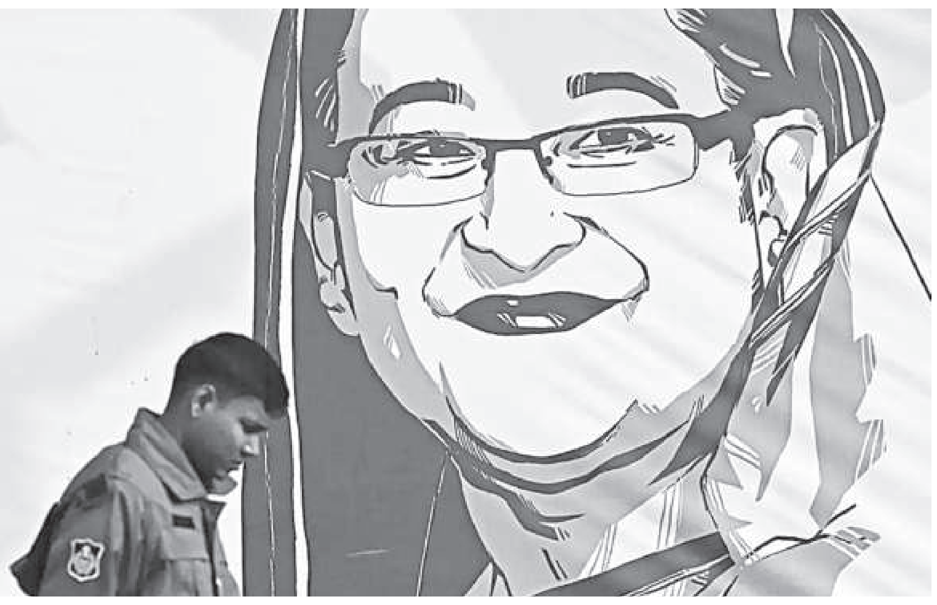
Though the Arab Spring led to the fall of seemingly invincible leaders, the victory was short-lived in most countries, as the downfall of the reviled regimes instead led to further turmoil. Only Tunisia, came out of the revolution as a success story and began backsliding last year. Libya and Syria collapsed into civil war, and foreign powers' heavy investment in Yemen's democratic transition led the country to a disastrous civil war. Egypt, on the other hand, witnessed a military coup followed by the rise of a leader even worse than the one they got rid of. Understanding the underlying reasons for the failure of the nations' to transition to democratic regimes is crucial as Bangladesh navigates uncharted waters of a seismic regime change, unlike any before.

In an article published in the Catalyst, writer Anand Gopal attributed the Arab Spring's failure to neoliberal economic policies which were not challenged after the oppressive governments were toppled. "Because the poor and working class didn't have the structural leverage to organise collectively and as a class, they instead conceived of them differently—say, as Muslims against the more elite figures who don't represent Islam. That's where fundamental Islamists came in," writes Gopal. The role of the political economy cannot be understated for a constructive change in the system of governance in Bangladesh.

The disparity between long standing elites in Bangladesh—many of whom silently adhered to Sheikh Hasina's regime for their own gains—and the working class or unemployed—who were denied basic economic and human rights—need to be addressed as we shift towards a system where an all-powerful regime can never rise again. There is anger, there is hate—and that was always going to be the case. The fragmented society has to establish a unified dialogue to solve it. Democracy as an umbrella idea for "free speech" and "free and fair elections," without addressing deeply unequal systems—that triggered Hasina's fall—will lead us down the same path as the Arab nations that went backwards despite a world-changing moment.

Since Sheikh Hasina fled, attacks on Hindu minorities have escalated, and vandalism, looting, burning and violence has engulfed the nation. Bangladesh is predominantly a secular country, and its very strength lies in that fact. The student coordinators have insofar stepped into protecting minorities, and minority places of worship. To retain and expand unity of all communities in Bangladesh, the interim government and the Bangladeshi community as a whole, have to work towards changing the existing social contracts which disproportionately affect marginalised people of all religions. During Egypt's uprisings against three-decade ruler Mubarak, minority Orthodox Coptic Christians thought the discrimination would end after the revolution, but it escalated instead. Five years later, as current President Abdel Fattah El-Sisi took office overthrowing an Islamist regime, the violence and divisions between Muslims and Christians have continued to intensify, along with socioeconomic disparity.

A burst of democratic spirit and national unity, similar to what we witnessed last week, brought down the oppressive regimes of the Arab countries a decade ago, but the movements lacked structure or plans for the future. When such a formidable dictatorship falls, there's a blitzkrieg of non-violent actions needed to create a new form of governance from scratch. In that regard, the students' dialogue with the army, and the appointment of Dr Yunus as Chief Advisor, aligned with the students' requests, is a start. But due to the fact that the Awami League regime denied citizens free elections, and a breeding ground for new political parties to emerge, the interim government will have to stay intact for longer than previous ones, in order to start rebuilding the cracked pillars of the country before groups with vested interests take advantage of the political vacuum.



Students coordinators of the movement have voiced that they want a change in the overall system of Bangladesh, in which fascism or 'any leader like Sheikh Hasina' can never emerge again.

Egypt's swift return to autocracy, after ousting Mubarak, is a cautionary tale for Bangladesh. In 2012, Egypt elected Islamist Mohammed Morsi, with fierce opposition from the protesters who ousted Mubarak—paving the way for a military coup by Defence Minister Abdel Fattah-Al Sisi, whose dictatorial regime is more autocratic and harmful to Egypt's middle and lower class, than Mubarak's was. The economic woes which drove people to protest and demand for social justice, dignity and democracy, in the streets of Cairo in 2011, continue to persist today.

For all but 12 years since 1971, the political landscape of Bangladesh has always been caught in a tussle between BNP, the political dynasty of former president Ziaur Rahman, and Awami League, the political dynasty of the Father of the Nation, Sheikh Mujibur Rahman. Recently, BNP General Secretary Mirza Fakhrul Islam has announced that Tarek Rahman, the son of former Prime Minister Khaleda Zia will return to Bangladesh from exile in the United Kingdom. Students coordinators who have led the monumental movement have voiced that they want a change in the overall system of Bangladesh, in which fascism, authoritarianism, or "any leader like Sheikh Hasina" can never emerge again. Tarek Rahman's ascendancy to politics was based on nepotism—which the quota reform movement sought to fight. His political career has long been under a cloud; though he denies certain charges, a leaked US embassy cable from 2008 called him a "notorious and widely feared... symbol of kleptocratic government," who had "flagrantly" demanded bribes in return for procurement decisions and political appointments. The prospect of BNP or other existing parties returning with the same political dynamics will inarguably perpetuate the same cycle of corruption and mass sufferings.

Breaking free of authoritarianism is a long, difficult road. In 15 years, the Awami League has ruled the country with a fortress of fear, normalising inequality of the classes, thuggery of those in power, wealth appropriation by government authorities, corruption within the elites and government officials, cronyism and lawlessness in every corner of the society. While we could not write any of this before, it must be said now that the legal system was also robbed of its independence. The student wing of Awami League, BCL, which has long terrorised the youth and dissenters with brute force, have also been left behind; the brainwashing of violent ideologies too, needs to be addressed constructively.

Tunisia, which was long known to be the only success story coming out of the Arab Spring—holding two democratic free and fair elections in 2014 and 2019–is now facing the exact issues they fought against in 2011. The civil society in Tunisia won the Nobel Peace Prize in 2015, for mediating the National Dialogue in 2013. Yet its drive for consensus to keep both labour and business parties content without concrete steps to address the economic issues since 2011 led to a stagnating economy, affecting the youth, causing widespread disillusionment and polarisation. The current populist President Kais Saed, as such, has been cracking down on dissenters and, according to critics, suppressing challengers ahead of October elections after the Tunisia court jailed potential presidential candidates on August 5. Tunisia's unfortunate relapse only affirms that sustained recovery from autocratic governments requires far more innovation and a renewed effort to connect political citizenship with socioeconomic rights. Change never happens overnight, but positive change warrants learning from other nations, like the Arab states. Despite leading an exhilarating revolution, the citizens continue to live through the same oppression—uprisings continue to rock the region since 2018.

Marwan Muasher, a former Jordanian diplomat who authored The Second Arab Awakening, told the Middle East Eye, "Arab Spring 1.0 could have resulted in social peace if Arab governments understood the need for new social contracts and the need for more open political systems, and the need to fight corruption institutionally."

NAZIA MANZOOR

One does not need to remember Rabindranath on the occasion of the anniversary of his death—22 Srabon or August 7 to be precise. Rabindranath is evoked often, and with spontaneity in our everyday lives. But perhaps he is recalled with a particular kind of urgency when we experience turmoil of the kind we are experiencing at our present political juncture. In his long life, Rabindranath confronted protests and movements, revolutions and resistance efforts. His lectures, essays, letters, novels, and songs often tell the tales of those struggles. From the Swadeshi Movement to Bongo Bhongo to colonial violence against the unarmed, Rabindranath's pen addressed them all. On the occasion of this baishe srabon, here are six essential revolutionary Rabindranath pieces everyone should read.

Letter to Lord Chelmsford Rejecting Knighthood (29 May, 1919)

Rabindranath was awarded the Knighthood in 1915, after winning the Nobel prize for Gitanjali (1910). However, he returned his Knighthood in 1919 in protest of Brigadier General Dyer's killings of 379 innocent, unarmed civilians at Amritsar in the Jallianwala Bagh Massacre.

Condemning the killing of unarmed civilians, Rabindranath wrote to the Viceroy of India, Lord Chelmsford: "Considering that such treatment has been meted out to a population, disarmed and resourceless, by a power which has the most terribly efficient organisation for destruction of human lives, we must strongly assert that it can claim no political expediency, far less moral justification." He adds, "The time has come when badges of honour make our shame glaring in the incongruous context of humiliation, and I for my part wish to stand, shorn of all special distinctions, by the side of those of my countrymen, who, for their so-called insignificance, are liable to suffer degradation not fit for human beings."

A bold declaration of solidarity and a firm rejection of such brutal violence meted out against unarmed general people, the letter affirms Rabindranath's sense of what is just and what one must stand for.

Manusher Dhormo* (1931)

A compilation of lectures delivered by Rabindranath and drawn from his Hibbert Lectures given at Oxford University in 1930, Manusher Dhormo is essential for everyone who wants to familiarise themselves with Rabindranath's philosophy on life and being human. The lectures were delivered while tensions surrounding India's independence struggle were high. Rabindranath proposes that the future of humanity must be based upon equality among the races when he claims, "I ask them to claim the right of manhood to be friends of men, and not the right of a particular proud race or nation which may boast of the fatal quality of being the rulers of men." A critique of race egotism and the race-centric human order, the book attests to Rabindranth's belief in the notions of insubordination, creativity, and autonomy.

Pother Sonchoy* (1939)

Rabindranath's trip to England and America in 1912–13 was his third visit to the West, and the impressions were recorded in a collection of small pieces in a text which was given the name, Pother Shonchoy. In one of the essays, he talks about the intellectual world in England which, as Rabindranath put it, bore no resemblance to the arrogance and pomposity demonstrated by the members of the British ruling class in India. Here, one might also recall the 1916 essay he wrote, condemning a Presidency College professor's ill words against Indians. He critiqued that men who are better suited for disciplinary roles—such as that of drill sergeant, or a jailer—have been put in charge of educating our young minds. Rabindranath's critique of English rule in India, particularly about how India was a source of profit for them and they kept India poor, is also worthy of engagement.

Roktokorobi* (1923/1924)

Often regarded as one of Rabindranth's staunchest protests against totalitarianism, Roktokorobi features Nandini—the woman whose only ornament is the flower roktokorobi which she wears for the man she loves—as a character who stands tall against oppressive regimes everywhere. The tyrant king's greed is contrasted sharply by Nandini's ability to love and her fierce determination to fight him. A play critiquing the onslaught of modernity and mindless industrialisation, Roktokorobi raises questions about what it means to be human when one is chained to a system that is intent on oppressing them.

Song lyrics

1905's Bongo Bhongo, or the first Bengal Partition by the British Raj was rejected by Rabindranath. Songs from this era, including "Ami porer ghore kinbo na ar", "Bidhir bidhon katbe tumi", and "Aji Bangladesher hridoy hote", are full of patriotic zeal and unparalleled love for Bengal. Other songs from this era include "Tor apon joney chhharbey torey, ta boley bhabna kora cholbena", "Jodi tor daak shune keu na ashe", "Ebar tor mora Gangey baan esechhey", and of course, "Aamar shonar Bangla", Bangladesh's national anthem. Lyrical, passionate, and poetic, the songs from this period continue to sway and move us—whether in music form or when appreciated for their poetic brilliance.

Gora* (1910), Ghore Baire (1916), and Char Odhdhay (1934)

While out of the three novels, Ghore Baire most explicitly and expertly analyses the limits of the Swadeshi movement, together the novels reflect the thinker's dis-ease with nationalism and how sometimes, the endeavour can be selfish. Rabindranath was an early advocate for the Swadeshi Movement, and later a critic, but his anti-nationalism is perhaps less interesting than what the novels cleverly reveal—his dis-ease with revolution itself. This is not to claim that he was anti-revolutionary, but Rabindranath's constantly shifting, morphing ideas of both concepts—nationalism and revolution—are exhibited brilliantly in the novels, and particularly in Ghore Baire. All three novels also hypothesise the dangers of hyper masculinity and hyper sexualisation, and discuss the emergence of the new, modern woman.

BOOK REVIEW: POETRY

About romances ever-appealing

Review of Abdus Selim's 'Shobdo O Bodher Kobita' (Aksar Bunan, 2024)

This book has been a clandestine romance all along; Selim makes no bones in admitting that this romance was initiated back in 1973 (I believe, the translator was studying literature in the US in those days) that continued till today.

DESIGN: MAISHA SYEDA

Poetry and Bangali gentlemen are perennial bedfellows. Unlike some romances that die young, a regular Bangali male, once smitten by the muse of poetry, never quite relinquishes that moment of epiphany. He keeps coming back to it whenever an occasion shows up. Thus, Abdus Selim, one of the most prolific translators of Bangladesh, with a mind boggling collection of plays that he has transplanted from lands near and far into our soil, finds an opportunity to return to his first love—poetry. And boy oh boy, have we been presented with an exquisite collection of poems culled from the whole Anglophone ecosystem rendered in exquisite Bangla!

When we say 'Anglophone ecosystem', we, of course, imply all the English translations from major languages like Spanish, French, German, et al. As a translator, Selim takes full advantage of the Anglophone privilege. In Shobdo O Bodher Kobita (roughly translating to Poetry of Sound and Sense), Selim accommodates 33 poems by 21 poets representing seven nations and six languages. In addition to the languages one would expect in such a volume, the list includes Japanese and Russian, demonstrating Selim's genuine interest in poetry at large.

This book has been a clandestine romance all along; Selim makes no bones in admitting that this romance was initiated back in 1973 (I believe, the translator was studying literature in the US in those days) that continued till today. Thus, the poems in this volume reflect both the purity of young love and the autumnal leaves.

Such diversity also reflects an educated Bangali's passion for literature of the world, a rarity these days. As I studied the poems—the translations and the originals, whenever I had an opportunity side by side—I was marvelled by Selim's complete command over the 'tatsama' elements in literary Bangla. This, facilitated by his penchant for matters linguistic, makes Selim a perfect representative of the last generation of Bangalis who inherited a multilingual ethos and chose to hone one's skills in several languages, including academic Bangla spiced with Sanskrit delicacies.This inheritance is rich, in every sense.

Selim does a marvellous job with Mathew Arnold's "Dover Beach" (1867), encapsulating the meditative mood of the original with smart deployment of transferred epithets. On reading Selim's rendering of John Keats' "On First Looking into Chapman's Homer" (1816), I was reminded of Jibananda Das debts to the wealth of literary allusions employed by the second generation of English Romantic poets, and also how Das emulated the syntax of Keats' language in "Much have I travelled in the realms of gold" (1820) to pen the opening verse of Banalata Sen.

Irrespective of the ambivalence that marks Metaphysical poetry of the 17th century, Selim marvels us with his choice of words and precision of utterance. The rendering of John Donne's sermon starting "No Man is an Island" (1624) is a case in point. Sometimes, Selim's translations are so lucid and musical that you feel like reading out his adaptation of Maya Angelou's "Still I Rise" (1978).

Some poems spring a surprise. Yevgeny Yevtushenko's "My Universities", for instance, is a socialist gem composed during the years of Communist atrocity. Jack Hirschman's "The Twin Towers Arcane" is a moving paean to the worst human massacre of recent years. That Selim introduces each poet in a few lines is helpful for the readers. As for publishing details, Selim gives the original titles at the end of each poem and names the English translators of non-English poems.

Translation is also about acknowledging the untranslatable. While digging into the culture specific registers of T S Eliot's "Ash Wednesday" (1930) for example, Selim leaves the title as it is.

Only one upsetting aspect lies in the production front. The proofing was below-par. And the cover design reflected nothing of the nuances that poetry carries.

WHAT WE'RE READING THIS WEEK

"Kaho" by Haruki Murakami

Imagine being called ugly on a blind date as a sort of social experiment. Then, imagine going out with him again. Within the fabric of such an absurd short story, entitled "Kaho", that was featured in The New Yorker last month, Haruki Murakami weaves a critique of our world's hypocritical condemnation of lookism and its simultaneous obsession with women's appearance. The force of such a statement is all the more amplified as it stands bare in an unembellished, blunt writing style. What strikes me is how Murakami conveys complex issues such as the symbiotic bond between one's face and one's perception of the self, the malleability of identity, and the fluidity of beauty, all through a deceptively simple character, Kaho—the eponymous protagonist of the story and the "plainest woman" her "quirky" blind date has, purportedly, ever seen.

Uncertainty over Shakib's Pakistan Tests inclusion

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) officials are still undecided about the inclusion of premier all-rounder Shakib Al Hasan in their upcoming two-match Test series against Pakistan.

Shakib, who is currently playing in the Global T20 Canada, earlier expressed his desire to feature in the Test series -- with the first Test scheduled to begin on August 21 in Rawalpindi -- before leaving Bangladesh for the USA to take part in Major League Cricket last month.

Having been granted NOC by BCB until August 12, Shakib was expected to join the national teammates either in Bangladesh or Pakistan from Canada to prepare for the Test series.

However, Shakib, who was a lawmaker in the Awami League government that fell after a student protest on August 5, is no longer an MP following the president's order the next day. Due to the current unrest, he is unlikely to return to Bangladesh anytime soon.

It remains unclear whether his political identity would impact his selection in the national team. According to sources, Shakib's fitness for red-ball cricket is also a concern as he has been playing non-stop T20 matches since the home series against Zimbabwe in May.

"Before it was just about whether he [Shakib] could come to Bangladesh and then travel to Pakistan. He's been playing cricket but in a format where he has to score quickly in short time. And even though he knows how to play longer matches, there's a concern about whether he can handle the physical demands [of Test cricket]," a BCB official told The Daily Star yesterday.

The selectors, who were unable to contact Shakib over the past week due to unrest situation, are likely to sit with skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto and head coach Chandika Hathurusingha in one or two days regarding the matter and other issues about the squad for the Pakistan Test series before they announce their final squad.

It was learned from another source that BCB has already formed an 18-member preliminary squad with Shakib and pacer Taskin Ahmed being in the team, but the final 15-member squad will be decided after the meeting with all the members of the selection panel, which had to be deferred a few times due to the current unrest situation.

Meanwhile, on Wednesday, Cricket Operation In-charge Shahriar Nafees informed that Shakib's inclusion in the Test squad depends both on his availability and selection.

"He is only a cricketer now," Nafees told reporters in Mirpur. "There is a question of whether he is available for the series now, and another being whether he gets picked for the tour. We will run our activity keeping these two factors in mind," he concluded.

'Uncomfortable' presence of outsiders at Mirpur stadium

SPORTS REPORTER

Security concern is a quickly growing issue in Mirpur's Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium's premises due to the presence of outsiders.

While some club officials and organisers were seen coming with banners on Tuesday, demanding justice for the irregularities and corruption in the board under the Awami League government, on Wednesday there were presence of outsiders not affiliated with cricket.

Bangladesh 'A' team began their training following the unrest in the country but the presence of outsiders created an eerie atmosphere. Some were seen patrolling the periphery of the BCB offices while from time to time, media personnel saw people coming in with bikes and entering the premises of the stadium through gate number 2, virtually unobstructed.

Security personnel seemed unsure about the comings and goings. Inquired about these people, security personnel said, "Some of them quarrelled amongst themselves because there were two separate groups present at the same time."

A BCB official said, "It's an uncomfortable situation right now for everyone. It's a time for transition for the country. Let's see and hopefully after the interim government is formed, things will normalise."

Shahriar Nafees, in charge of BCB's cricket operations, was asked about the overall situation in terms of security or lack of it.

"Our players, many of them have practised in such situations. We have seen before that when change of power comes, this happens. But our regular staff are aware of the situation. The atmosphere in the whole country is a bit uncertain. We hope that just like the whole country would get back to normalcy in one to two days and run normally, the cricket board too would run in its normal course."

A patrol team of Bangladesh Army had visited the stadium as part of routine patrol.

"Bangladesh Army patrol team has been visiting since August 6. It's their routine work and not because of any security threat. The way they have been maintaining law and order in the country to normalise the situation, it's part of that," Shariar claimed.

PCB 'optimistic' about hosting Bangladesh Tests

AFP, Karachi

Pakistan are "optimistic" about hosting Bangladesh for their Test series this month, a source close to the cricket board said Wednesday, after a second-string team delayed its arrival amid an unfolding political crisis in Bangladesh.

Bangladesh prime minister Sheikh Hasina stepped down on Monday and fled the country following mass protests demanding her resignation.

The second tier team, known as the "A team", were due to arrive in Islamabad on Tuesday but pushed back their schedule to Saturday.

The national team are due to land on August 17 for two Tests -- the first in Rawalpindi from August 21 and the second in Karachi from August 30.

"The PCB is proceeding with the plans and optimistic that the Test series will go ahead as scheduled," a source close to the Pakistan Cricket Board said, asking not to be named.

In an official statement on Wednesday, the PCB said it "has been in contact with the Bangladesh Cricket Board".

It also announced a 17-man squad for the two Tests against the Bangladesh national team.

Pakistan squad: Shan Masood (captain), Saud Shakeel (vice-captain), Aamir Jamal (subject to fitness), Abdullah Shafique, Abrar Ahmed, Babar Azam, Kamran Ghulam, Khurram Shahzad, Mir Hamza, Mohammad Ali, Mohammad Huraira, Mohammad Rizwan, Naseem Shah, Saim Ayub, Salman Ali Agha, Sarfaraz Ahmed, Shaheen Shah Afridi

'Mentally devastated' Saifuddin requests two-month break

SPORTS REPORTER

All-rounder Mohammad Saifuddin has withdrawn himself from the upcoming Bangladesh 'A' team's tour of Pakistan, saying he has been feeling 'mentally devastated' and requesting a two-month break from all cricketing activities.

Saifuddin, who was picked for the second four-day match of a two-match series and the following three-match one-day series against Pakistan 'A', expressed his desire to take a break through an email to the selectors earlier this month, informed a Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) official to The Daily Star on Wednesday.

In the email, he informed that he was devastated over not being picked for the ICC T20 World Cup squad in June, coupled with the fact that he could not fly to Canada to feature in the ongoing Global T20 due to the ongoing unrest in the country.

"Due to these matters, I want to keep myself away from all forms of cricket for the next two months. Hopefully, you will take the matter in a positive way," Saifuddin's email read.

However, it was learned that Saifuddin didn't mention the right rib injury that he sustained while attending an individual gym session in Mirpur two days before his Canada-bound flight, which was scheduled for late July.

Saifuddin was scheduled to represent the Montreal Tigers in the GT20 and he had also obtained a NOC from the BCB till August 8. Then, he was expected to join the 'A' team in Pakistan for the second four-dayer and one-day series.

"He observed the situation for a day [after the injury]. When he felt that his pain wasn't decreasing, he contacted our medical team. [BCB chief physician] Dr.Debashish [Chowdhury] checked him and gave him some instructions for treatment to assess his condition. We found severity in his pain," BCB physio Muzadded Sany told The Daily Star yesterday.

"We were not sure what type of injury it was. He planned to travel to Canada, and the 22-hour economy-class flight might have aggravated his injury.

"There would also be questions on us as to why we cleared him to play the tournament. So, we had asked him not to go to Canada to feature in the league," he added.

According to sources, Saifuddin's recent letter to BCB has irked the selectors as the cricketer had also skipped the Bangladesh Tigers' majority practice sessions in Sylhet and Chattogram last month.

"He only practised for nine days in Sylhet and four days in Chattogram out of a total of 45 days of Bangladesh Tigers' practice camp. He left the Chattogram camp after playing the first two white-ball practice matches citing that he had to attend his biometric for Canada visa," said an official on request of anonymity.

"He had also earlier taken leave citing family issues before Eid. He then sought extended leave which we also granted seeing his family emergency. Now he is talking about his reluctance about cricket," he concluded.

Saifuddin, who last represented Bangladesh in a T20I series against Zimbabwe in May this year, could not be reached for comments on the matter.

A family affair

REUTERS, Paris

For the 32 women's and men's teams in the Paris Olympics table tennis the matches are about representing their country, but for the many siblings amongst them it is also about representing their family and the shared last name they hold dear.

At least eight sibling pairs are among the 96 athletes competing in the table tennis team events, a higher-than-usual percentage in the world of top-level competitive sports.

Some of these athletes come from families with deep-rooted table tennis traditions, while others were inspired by the desire to follow in the footsteps of an older sibling, finding joy in the sport and keeping each other company.

One of the best known sibling duos in the sport, French favourites Alexis and Felix Lebrun, have cheered for each other on and off the courts.

"Table tennis is a family sport. It's always a part of my family," said Felix, who ran to hug his brother after his bronze medal win for France, the first in the sport since 2000.

"I live my dream to be here with my brother," added Felix, who hails from a family where their father was a French champion and their uncle an Olympian.

When the younger Lebrun felt nervous before his medal match, he turned to his brother Alexis for support, especially since Alexis had been eliminated by the same opponent, Brazil's Hugo Calderano, earlier in the singles.

Sweden's Anton Kallberg echoed the influence of family on his decision to take up table tennis, as well as that of his younger sister Christina. Both are competing in their second Olympics together.

"I would say our parents played a big part. My dad, my mum, even my uncle and grandfather played a bit, so I pretty much had no choice but to get into table tennis," said Kallberg.

Not every Olympian table tennis sibling was inspired by their parents. For 19-year-old Brazilian Guilia Takahashi, it was her sister Bruna, five years her senior, who provided the inspiration.

"I play because of her. When I was six, I watched her play and thought, why not? Then I started to play, and this is my life now," said Takahashi, who described going to the Olympics with her sister as a dream come true.

Competing in sport with a close family member is not always easy. Rivalry between siblings, most famously demonstrated by the Williams sisters in tennis, can add complexity.

The Lebrun brothers, while teammates at the Olympics, often face each other in singles competitions, where Alexis has a better record despite Felix's higher world ranking.

Even siblings competing in different gender categories can feel the pressure brought on by their older counterparts.

"For the older sibling, if it works out, it works out; but for the younger one, they're under so much more attention and pressure to perform," said Japanese table tennis player Tomokazu Harimoto, who also comes from a table tennis family.

"I have a lot of respect for my sister. She faces so much pressure yet still delivers and continues to improve," Harimoto said of 16-year-old Miwa, who is making her Olympic debut in Japan's women's team.

Harimoto mentioned that while there are no current plans it would be very special to play mixed doubles with his sister at future Olympics.

Off the courts, travelling for tournaments with siblings can help combat homesickness. In the Olympics Village, Brazil's Giulia Takahashi, 19, shares a room with her sister Bruna, 24.

"It's like my house, I can do whatever I want. She takes care of me and wakes me up every morning," she said giggling.

Sacked Maj Gen Ziaul 'arrested' at airport

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Sacked Maj Gen Ziaul Ahsan was detained at the Dhaka airport in the early hours of yesterday while trying to flee the country.

Ziaul, who was dismissed from the army on Tuesday, was on board an Emirates flight that was taxiing the runway for take-off.

The plane was asked to return to boarding bridge and Ziaul was taken off the aircraft and transported to the Dhaka Cantonment, The Daily Star has learnt from officials at the Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport.

Ziaul, who joined the Bangladesh Army as a commissioned officer in 1991, is alleged to have been involved in enforced disappearances and assassinations during his time in the Rapid Action Battalion.

In 2009, he was made the vice-captain of Rab-2 in 2009 when he

Hundreds of Hindus at border to go to India

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

Fearing attacks, several hundred Hindus, including women and children, gathered near two border areas of Thakurgaon and Panchagarh yesterday to enter India.

Mojakkarul Alam Kochi, chairman of Aloakhawa union under Panchagarh's Atwari upazila, told The Daily Star around 5:30pm that over 100 young people from different areas of Thakurgaon and Panchagarh reached near Barshalupara border.

They told the chairman that attackers looted valuables from their houses and businesses, and also threatened to kill them.

They refused to return home despite requests from Border Guard Bangladesh personnel, Mojakkarul said.

The UP chairman said nearly 3,000 people had thronged the border on Tuesday, but they returned home after failing to cross the border.

Local journalist Jibon Al Mamun, who visited Jagdal border of Thakurgaon's Ranisankail upazila yesterday afternoon, said around 600 people were waiting near the no-man's land to enter India.

Some of them alleged that their houses and businesses were vandalised and looted, the journalist said.

Uphold rule of law, respect democracy

Blinken urges; Australia asks all to ensure universal rights

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken called on Bangladesh to respect democracy after Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus was tapped to lead an interim government following an uprising.

"Any decisions that the interim government makes, they need to respect democratic principles, uphold the rule of law, and reflect the will of the people," Blinken told reporters, reports AFP.

The US embassy in Dhaka also reiterated calls for calm and peace, having expressed concerns about reported attacks on religious minorities and places of worship in Bangladesh.

"As a friend and partner to the Bangladeshi people, the United States will continue to support Bangladesh's democratic aspirations and respect for human rights," it said in a statement.

Rights groups, eminent citizens and sociocultural organisations have condemned the violence, specifically targeting Hindus, in different parts of Bangladesh amid a power vacuum in the wake of Sheikh Hasina's abrupt resignation and escape.

They demanded immediate steps to protect the religious minorities and bring the assailants to justice in statements issued yesterday, describing the attacks targeting Hindu homes, businesses and temples as an "evil attempt to destroy communal harmony".

Such violation of human rights can tarnish the image of the country, warned the National Human

Says UN resident coordinator Gwyn Lewis

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

UN Resident Coordinator in Bangladesh Gwyn Lewis has described the national sentiment as "one of hope" despite recent chaos and violence following the fall of Sheikh Hasina.

"If and when this transitional government is shaped and the voices of the young people in the country are heard, I think we can really shape and move forward to continue the trajectory of positive development," she said in an interview with UN News on Tuesday.

Her comment comes ahead of the formation of an interim government led by Nobel Laureate Dr Muhammad Yunus today.

"It's really a moment of a crossroads for Bangladesh, and so we're really hopeful that this will become something very positive that we can build

Says DGFI; Mikel Changma 'released' after five years

Directorate General of Forces Intelligence (DGFI) yesterday said there were no detainees at its Dhaka facility, known as "Aynaghor", at the moment.

The detention cells of the Dhaka Metropolitan Police's Detective Branch were found empty yesterday.

Although the Dhaka DGFI claimed that they were not holding anyone, Mikel Changma, 40, a UPDF activist who was forcibly disappeared on April 16, 2019, from Narayanganj, returned to his friend's home in Chattogram yesterday.

A source who spoke to his family confirmed this to The Daily Star.

A delegation of rights activists visited the DGFI headquarters yesterday morning.

Civil admin still without direction

BAHARAM KHAN

From rural areas to the secretariat, the civil administration officials have been directionless in the absence of a government since former prime minister Sheikh Hasina's departure on Monday.

The secretariat, usually abuzz with officials and visitors, looked almost deserted for the last two days as very few officials went to work and visitors were not allowed.

Most of the secretaries and other senior officials were absent and some even switched off their phones, leaving the junior officers in the dark and badly affecting the chain of command.

> Most of the secretaries and other senior officials were absent and some even switched off their phones, leaving the junior officers in the dark and badly affecting the chain of command.

"This has led to the collapse of civil administration across the country," a secretary told this correspondent over the phone.

Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossian, Public Security Division Secretary Jahangir Alam and Senior Secretary of the Security Services Division Mashiur Rahman, and Agriculture Secretary Wahida Akhter, did not attend office, said sources.

Mohammad Mezbah Uddin Chowdhury, senior secretary of the Ministry of Public Administration, was found at his office.

"We are in a special situation. We are working to overcome this. We hope everything will be normal soon," he told The Daily Star.

"Even though there is no government, the President is there. We are carrying out some important tasks. Soon, there will be no administrative vacuum," he added.

Some officials said that they were feeling insecure because of the attacks on important government structures. Secretariat buildings have offices of at least 45 ministries and divisions.

Many had said they did not know offices would reopen on Tuesday. The government on Sunday, when Hasina was the prime minister, announced that all offices would be closed for the three following days.

Army Chief Waker-Uz-Zaman on Monday afternoon announced on TV that the offices would reopen the next day. But very few went to work on Tuesday and left shortly after midday.

The situation improved ever so slightly yesterday.

Most of the officers present at the secretariat said they felt that they had been deprived of promotions over the last 15 years.

Witnesses said many held a meeting at the library room of the public administration ministry and expressed anger at their colleagues who they thought had enjoyed undue benefits.

Major shakeup in police high-ups

Heads of Rab, DMP replaced; low-ranked cops place 11-point demand

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The high-ups of Bangladesh Police have gone through a major reshuffle since the ouster of Sheikh Hasina.

Since August 5, changes have been made to the positions of the inspector general of police, director general of the Rapid Action Battalion and the commissioner of Dhaka Metropolitan Police.

Md Mainul Islam has been appointed the new IGP, replacing Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun. Additional IGP AKM Shahidur Rahman has been made the DG of Rab while Additional Deputy Inspector General of Police Md Mainul Hasan took charge as the DMP commissioner (current charge).

The change in the top post came as the contractual appointment of Chowdhury Abdullah Al Mamun as the IGP was revoked.

Shahidur replaced former Rab DG Md Harun-or-Rashid who has been transferred to the Police Headquarters. Mainul Hasan took over from outgoing DMP commissioner Habibur Rahman who has been attached to the PHQ as the additional IGP.

The home ministry issued separate circulars in this regard on Tuesday

Yunus-led interim govt takes charge

13 advisers including 2 student representatives sworn in; 3 to take oath later

MOHIUDDIN ALAMGIR and BAHARAM KHAN

The interim government led by Prof Muhammad Yunus took oath last night, four days after the resignation and departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina amid a mass upsurge led by students.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin administered the oath of office and oath of secrecy to the 84-year-old Nobel laureate and pioneer of microcredit and 13 advisers at the Bangabhaban Darbar Hall around 9:30pm in a ceremony conducted by Cabinet Secretary Mahbub Hossain. Three advisers could not be sworn in as they are outside the capital.

Wearing a chequered punjabi and a white vest, Prof Yunus arrived at the Bangabhaban to a standing ovation.

Earlier in the afternoon, Prof Yunus arrived at Hazrat Shahjalal International Airport from Paris. Chief of Army Staff General Waker-Uz-Zaman and student organisers received him there.

He made a short speech and talked to the student leaders and civil society members at the airport.

In 1996, Prof Yunus became an adviser to an interim government after declining an offer to lead the caretaker government.

It is, however, not clear for how long this interim government will be in power. The Daily Star asked the question to four of the Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus said those who spread the poison of anarchy would face the full power of law enforcement agencies, along with the victorious students and the people, who will make them fail.

He sounded the warning in his first address to the nation last night after taking the oath as head of the interim government.

"The conspirators have created an atmosphere of anarchy and fear in the country to thwart our second independence through the uprising of the student-masses. Anarchy is our enemy, and it must be defeated quickly," he said.

"As the first duty of the government, we will suppress these conspirators with a heavy hand.

Normalcy should return soon

Hope eminent citizens

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Eminent citizens welcomed the new interim government, hoping it would restore normalcy and address the ongoing crises across the country.

Dhaka University Professor Emeritus Serajul Islam Choudhury yesterday said one of the duties of the interim government would be to restore order, which has been disrupted over the last few days following the fall of Sheikh Hasina.

"The other task is to ensure the safety of citizens," he said in his immediate reaction to the oath-taking of the interim government last night.

He added that this government would also need to eliminate all forms of oppression and the culture of fear prevailing across the country.

However, the main responsibility of the government, he emphasised, would be to hold a fair and acceptable election to facilitate a democratic transition of power.

Says father of Nafiz, 16, after identifying slain son in a photo

NILIMA JAHAN

On August 5, several newspapers featured the image of a wounded protester being carried by a rickshaw-puller in the Farmgate area of the capital.

The photo showed a protester with a Bangladeshi flag tied around his head, lying in the footwell of a rickshaw with his head hanging over one side and his feet dangling from the other.

The viral image helped Golam Rahman, a businessman from Mohakhali, identify the protester as his son, Golam Nafiz, 16.

PHOTO: REUTERS

Nafiz, who recently admitted to Noubahini College after completing his SSC, was a participant in the quota reform movement from the very start.

While he was alive when the photo was taken, he died on the way to Suhrawardy Medical College Hospital. The rickshaw-puller later handed his body over to the hospital's morgue authorities.

“Nafiz was my youngest of two sons, but he was the most active in protesting. I admired his passion and never discouraged him from joining protests. He participated in demonstrations across Mohakhali, Rampura, Mirpur, Farmgate, and other locations,” said Rahman.

“On August 4, he was protesting in the Farmgate area. He even called his mother in the afternoon from a friend's phone. She asked him to come home, and he said he would be coming soon. That was their last conversation,” he added.

When Nafiz did not return home, the family feared he had been arrested and searched nearby police stations in Tejgaon, Kolabagan, Hatirjheel, Khilgaon, the DB office on Minto Road, and the CID office in Malibagh. Despite their efforts, no one could confirm his arrest.

ROBBERIES IN DHAKA

People stand vigil through the night

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Sleepless nights and living in a state of panic have become a constant for the residents of different areas in the capital for the past three days due to a series of alleged attacks and robberies in their neighbourhoods, amid the absence of law enforcers.

However, people did not sit idly and instead took the matter into their own hands, as residents of Uttara, Dhanmondi, Mohammadpur, Basila, Adabor, Mirpur, Jigatola, Gulshan, Badda, Jatrabari, and the old part of Dhaka took to the streets to ensure their safety.

Armed with sticks, they patrolled their areas every night amid the situation and returned to their homes in the morning.

Students, alongside general citizens from all walks of life, formed area-specific patrol teams, coordinating through various social media messaging platforms.

To alert residents of potential attacks, announcements were made from mosques urging everyone to stay vigilant. Many also took to social media to seek help from neighbours and volunteer groups during alleged robberies.

Army men were also seen patrolling the streets in some areas of Mirpur, Pallabi, Uttara, and Mohammadpur.

Robbers of various ages, mostly teenagers and young adults, wielding knives and machetes, reportedly entered several houses and establishments. Army personnel, in association with locals, apprehended some of these robbers from various areas.

Meanwhile, information and videos of robberies in Mohammadpur, Keraniganj's Atibazar, Washpur, Arshinagar, and Uttara areas have spread through social media.

In Mirpur's ECB Chattar, witnesses said on Wednesday night, a group of over 400 people carrying sharp weapons and firearms came there. At around 11:45pm, locals called upon army personnel for help, who detained some of the attackers.

During a visit there yesterday, locals told The Daily Star that the incident was related to a land dispute between two groups, not a robbery.

Following the incident, announcements were made from mosques in other areas, including East Shewrapara, Senpara, Mirpur, and Bhasantek, urging residents to stay vigilant.

Shaheen, a resident of East Shewrapara, said, "Last night (early Thursday) around 2:00am, we heard an announcement from the mosques that robbers had entered the neighbourhood. We then went out onto the streets with sticks."

A resident of Mirpur said, "We are passing sleepless nights. This situation can't continue. The law enforcement agencies should start their duties and provide security to the people."

Md Faisal, a resident of Arshinagar, said robbers entered their area, which led to the announcements from the mosques to remain vigilant.

A resident of Mohammadpur mentioned that robbers entered the area from different directions around 12:30am early yesterday, but people came out of their homes with sticks and chased away the robbers.

Residents in Uttara said robberies took place late at night at Sector 7. Afterwards, the mosques made announcements asking everyone to stay alert in Sectors 11, 12, and 14.

Tahmid Islam, a resident of Uttara, said he and many others patrolled the area the whole night.

Meanwhile, in Dhanmondi, locals were seen patrolling the area with multiple cars and chasing alleged miscreants.

People are in fear that such incidents will increase if police stations are not operational soon.

Police personnel have yet to return to work following attacks on them during clashes with protesters after Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled the country.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Army, along with other armed forces and law enforcement agencies, has decided to take strict action to stop the ongoing anarchy, according to a press release issued by ISPR yesterday.

During a meeting, they discussed initiating operations in all police stations across the country within the next 24 hours with the support of the army.

Kumar Bala of Kashimpur High-Security Central Jail was withdrawn in connection with the escape of 209 prisoners on Tuesday.

Pedestrians and locals were in fear after sudden firing occurred at Gazipur jail around 11:00am, said Jail Superintendent Anwarul Karim.

He said there was unrest in the prison. "However, the situation was brought under control."

Gazipur District Jail Hospital's physician Maksuda told reporters that 16 people were injured when the prisoners started protests inside the jail, demanding their release. Then, gunshots were heard from outside the jail.

Of the injured, 13 are prisoners and three are prison guards, she said.

New Jail Superintendent Main Uddin was given charge of Kashimpur High-Security Central Jail yesterday morning, said Gazipur Deputy Commissioner and District Magistrate Abul Fateh Mohammad Safiqul Islam.

On Tuesday, 209 prisoners fled Kashimpur high-security prison, while six people -- including three militants -- were killed by prison guards.

In Jamalpur, inmates of Jamalpur District Jail rebelled for their release around 1:30pm yesterday and attempted to break out of the prison. The prison guards started firing around 2:00pm and it continued till 3:30pm, said locals.

After hearing loud noises in the jail, Abu Fatah, the jailor, rushed there, where prisoners took him hostage.

Later, the guards opened fire and snatched the jailor from the inmates. Panic spread across the city within a short time.

Three injured inmates were taken to Gazipur Sadar Hospital.

Four units of Jamalpur fire service worked to douse the fire. The amount of damage is yet unknown, said Iqbal Hossain, assistant director of Jamalpur fire service.

Abu Fatah, the jailor of Jamalpur district jail, could not be reached for comments.

Salina Akter, deputy jailor of Jamalpur District Jail, said, "The prisoners rebelled, demanding their release. We are trying to control the situation."

On Wednesday, a group of jail guards kept Pirojpur District Jail Super Debdulal Karmakar confined to his office for three hours starting from 12:15pm, alleging that he was involved in irregularities and corruption.

On Tuesday, 104 prisoners fled from the Kushtia jail around 2:00pm.

On Monday evening, an unidentified number of prisoners escaped from the Satkhira District Jail. However, at least 200 of them surrendered to the authorities a day later, according to jail sources.

The same evening, a mob stormed the Sherpur District Jail, leading to the escape of 518 inmates.

On July 19, at least 826 prisoners fled the Narsingdi jail. During the jailbreak, around 85 arms and 9,000 bullets were looted.

However, around 598 prisoners surrendered later, and 51 arms and 1,085 bullets were recovered.

help build international opinion and exert pressure for the restoration of democracy in Bangladesh.

"Yes, it is true that I had said she wouldn't return to Bangladesh. But a lot has changed in the last two days following continuous attacks on our leaders and party workers across the country. Now we are going to do whatever it takes to keep our people safe."

"She will definitely return to Bangladesh once democracy is restored," he told PTI over the phone.

He said he also expects the interim government to create a level playing field whenever democracy is restored and fresh elections are held.

Joy mentioned that once democracy is restored, either the AL or BNP will come to power, and the "Mujib family and Sheikh Hasina will be around".

"She has been in touch with all our party leaders for the last two days. My mother was going to retire anytime soon, so we thought now that she is gone, they (rioters) would leave our party people alone, but that did not happen. Instead, they started attacking," he said.

He declined to comment directly on whether he and his sister Saima Wazed, who is currently the South East Asian regional director for the WHO, would join politics.

Joy also said there is circumstantial evidence suggesting foreign interference and alleged involvement of Pakistan's ISI agency.

He also pointed out that the rioters attacked police with guns, which could only be provided by terror outfits and foreign powers.

On reports of involvement of a US intelligence agency like the CIA, Joy said he had no evidence but added, "maybe, they are." He dismissed any Chinese involvement when asked about it.

Dismissing reports of Hasina seeking asylum in the UK or any other country as "rumours," Joy said the reports of her US visa being revoked are also untrue.

"At this point, she wants to go back to Bangladesh. It's a question of when rather than if," he said, hinting that the ousted Bangladesh PM will be staying at an undisclosed location in India for now.

Refuting claims that Hasina ran away to save her own life, he said the family insisted on stopping the bloodshed.

"She was not willing to leave the country. The prime minister's security was ready to protect her till the end. But that would have led to hundreds of deaths of protesters who were marching towards the PM's residence. We convinced her for the sake of Bangladesh, we cannot let her get killed," he said.

"Our government was not weak, but my mother did not want to harm the students. Even after her leaving the country, the bloodshed has not stopped. The people will now understand the difference with and without Sheikh Hasina," he said.

An opportunity carefully weighing the costs and benefits between sticking to the constitutional limit of 90 days from the day of the dissolution of the parliament to the organising of new elections, or pushing back the elections to allow for the formation of new political parties -- possibly one led by students -- as elections right now would probably end with BNP emerging victorious.

ICG opined that India needs to tread carefully and "generally avoid actions that Bangladeshis could perceive as undermining their efforts to restore democracy".

While ICG admitted that Bangladesh is in a period of high instability, it also expressed hope that this is an opportunity for renewal. It urged foreign powers to help Bangladesh take advantage of this "once-in-a-lifetime" opportunity.

part to ensure safety on the roads. The response from both pedestrians and drivers has been positive."

Shirin Akhter, a student from Daffodil International University managing traffic in Gulshan, added, "This is more than just controlling traffic; it's about building awareness. If we can influence even a few people to follow the rules, it's worth it."

The efforts of these students have not gone unnoticed by the public.

Jahanara Begum, a private sector employee, said people are obeying the rules from the heart.

Bashir Uddin, a shopkeeper from Panthapath, said, "The students have brought some discipline, and it's refreshing to see that."

Students were also involved in painting graffiti, cleaning street walls and metro rail pillars.

hour to finish his self-assigned duty, promising to study for four hours afterward. I couldn't refuse his request."

Araf explained his motivation, saying, "Usually, the police uncles manage traffic here, but they haven't been around for a few days, leading to chaos. I decided to step in to restore order. It feels great that the rickshaw and auto drivers listen to me."

In addition to his traffic duties, Araf has also been seen cleaning the road with other students.

Residents and local business owners have expressed their admiration for Araf.

Many have noted the difference his efforts have made in maintaining order and cleanliness.

"It's heartwarming to see such a child take on responsibilities usually managed by adults," said a local shopkeeper. "Araf's dedication is a reminder that we all have a role to play in our community," he added.

Besides, Government PC College, Government Women College, and other institutions were seen maintaining traffic at all key intersections and safeguarding state establishments yesterday for the third day in a row.

"He is chosen by the students and by us. He has been entrusted with this responsibility on behalf of the entire nation. We are confident he will fulfil this duty," Fakhrul said during his visit to the National Institute of Traumatology and Orthopaedic Rehabilitation (NITOR).

After attending the oath-taking ceremony at Bangabhaban, BNP standing committee member Amir Khasru said, "In the coming days, they [members of the interim government] will fulfill the expectations for which so many have shed their blood. The ownership of the country must be returned to the people."

I could not believe my eyes

"Later, around midnight, someone sent some images of protesters who were injured or had died to my wife's phone. One photo caught my eye, and I immediately recognised my son. I could hardly believe my eyes," Rahman said.

The family rushed to the nearby government medical college hospitals at midnight and found Nafiz's body in the morgue at Suhrawardy Hospital around 4:00am on August 5. His body was listed as "unidentified".

"We found that he had been shot in the chest and had wounds from being beaten on his face," said Rahman.

The following day, Nafiz was laid to rest in Uttarkhan area.

His mother is in such a condition that she can barely speak.

According to Rahman, Nafiz's intermediate classes were scheduled to begin yesterday. He had dreamed of becoming a pilot and was actively involved in scouting, sports, BNCC, cultural activities, alongside his education.

"We hope to see justice once a new government is in place. We have collected all the evidence, including newspaper clippings, and have reached out to student leaders. They have promised to compile a list and take action against those responsible for the deaths of innocent students like my son," he added.

‘Please don’t break rules’

Students continue managing traffic, cleaning streets

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Students remained in the roads of Dhaka for a third day in a row yesterday to manage traffic and collect wastes in absence of law enforcement and conservatory workers, following the upheaval that led to Sheikh Hasina’s fall.

From Panthapath to Gulistan, Shahbagh to Banglamotor, young volunteers have stepped up to restore order and safety in the city.

Around 1:30pm in Panthapath, rickshaw puller Amjad Hossain was attempting to overtake a line of vehicles when a female student intervened, saying, “Please don’t break the rules.”

Hossain, who has been using the road for nearly two years, happily complied.

The student, Sadia Amreen, a private university student, along with her peers, took it upon themselves to guide drivers and ensure adherence to traffic rules.

“A dozen of us are here controlling traffic. We work in a roster system. It’s encouraging to see people actually listening to us,” Sadia told The Daily Star.

Amjad expressed his approval of the initiative.

“Today, a young girl approached me and told me it was wrong. This change is positive, and I’m following their directions,” he said.

This scene was replicated across the city. Students from various educational institutions were seen managing traffic at major intersections, including Gulistan, Paltan, Shahbagh, and Banglamotor. Working in shifts, sometimes joined by Ansar members, they filled the void left by absent traffic police.

Students were also engaged in cleaning efforts.

Arif Hossain, a private university student managing traffic at Farmgate, said, “With traffic police not fulfilling their duties, we, as students, stepped in to control the situation. I’ve been here since 8:00am, and despite the long hours, I’m enjoying it because I love this work.”

Rafiqul Islam, a Dhaka College student stationed in Dhanmondi, shared a similar sentiment.

“It’s our responsibility to step in when things aren’t being managed properly. People are actually responding well to us, and it’s a great feeling,” he said.

Maria Rahman, a high school student managing traffic at Bijoy Sarani, added, “At first, I was nervous about confronting drivers, but they have been surprisingly cooperative.”

In Moghbazar, student volunteer Nafis Ahmed said, “We’re just doing our

Not all heroes wear capes

7-year-old Araf Mahin manages traffic, cleans street in Bagerhat

PARTHA CHAKRABORTTY, Bagerhat

In times of chaos, heroes often emerge from the most unexpected places. They don’t always wear capes -- in fact, some show up wearing a raincoat, armed with nothing more than a stick and a whistle.

A seven-year old hero has emerged in Bagerhat in the aftermath of a complete breakdown in law and order following a power vacuum triggered by the fall of Sheikh Hasina and absence of police.

Araf Mahin, a first grader, has been managing traffic and cleaning streets in front of the Police Line School in Bagerhat for the last two days.

He uses his whistle, which he bought for Tk 30, to direct vehicles and maintain separate lanes.

Yesterday morning, Araf was seen organising separate lanes for rickshaws, motorcycles, and auto-rickshaws all alone.

His mother Laili Anjuman shared her pride, saying, “Araf asked for 30 taka for a snack, but instead, he bought a whistle to manage traffic. When I came to take him home, he asked for one

Tarique, BNP leaders laud Yunus, advisers

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

BNP Acting Chairman Tarique Rahman has congratulated Prof Mohammad Yunus and his advisers on forming the interim government.

“The BNP supports the formation of an elected government with a public mandate, an accountable parliament serving the people, and the restoration of people’s rights and freedoms, thereby establishing the rule of law and good governance,” Tarique stated on his verified Facebook account yesterday.

“With the fall of the regime, the people of Bangladesh now expect the interim government to create an environment where they can vote freely, reflecting their democratic aspirations and enabling fair and credible national elections,” he added.

Meanwhile, BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir hoped that Prof Yunus would be successful in leading the interim government.

Asaduzzaman new AG

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Md Asaduz-zaman, a senior lawyer of the Supreme Court and a BNP leader, has been appointed as new attorney general of Bangladesh.

President Mohammed Shahabuddin appointed him as the 15th top law officer of the state since the post fell vacant after previous attorney general AM Amin Uddin resigned on August 7 citing personal difficulties.

Law Secretary Md Golam Sarwar issued a gazette notification to this effect yesterday.

The attorney general has been appointed even before the formation of the interim government, which was sworn in last night.

Advocate Asaduzzaman, hailing from Shailakupa in Jhenidah, is the human rights affairs secretary of BNP. He was a student of 17th batch of law faculty of Dhaka University.

He was a candidate for the post of a lawmaker of Jhenidah-Shailakupa constituency from BNP ticket in national election held in 2018.

INTERIM GOVERNMENT

An opportunity for a new start

Says ICG, gives set of recommendations

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The International Crisis Group (ICG), a global NGO and think tank, on Wednesday night published a set of recommendations for the army and the interim government in Bangladesh in the wake of the fall of Sheikh Hasina after week-long protests that engulfed the country in violence.

“The army should prevent reprisal killings, and the soon-to-be-formed interim government should investigate abuses and begin rebuilding democracy,” the statement said.

The statement stresses upon the challenges of forming an interim government and the constitutional challenges it faces.

The ICG says the key will be to ensure that the protest movement is capably represented. If calm is to be restored, the statement read, those who risked and sacrificed the most to compel Hasina to resign -- namely, the students who initiated the protest movement -- should have a meaningful voice in the government’s counsels, rather than finding themselves sidelined by conservative generals and opportunistic politicians.

The ICG recommended that the army and the interim government need to ensure “security and stability, including staving off reprisal attacks on Awami League members.”

Ensuring justice for the violence of recent weeks and compensating victims are going to be equally important to this process, according to the ICG. Stability is also going to be important to avoid the short-term economic crisis, the ICG said.

In the statement, ICG said, “The bigger challenge for the interim government will be to put Bangladesh back on the path of genuine democracy.”

The think tank recommended

Hasina will return once democracy is restored: Joy

UNB, Dhaka

Awami League President and former prime minister Sheikh Hasina will return to Bangladesh once democracy is restored, her son Sajeeb Wazed Joy told PTI, an Indian news agency.

He also alleged that Pakistan’s ISI fuelled the unrest in Bangladesh.

He said the Indian government must “build up international pressure” for swift restoration of democracy in Bangladesh, PTI reported.

Joy said although 76-year-old Hasina would definitely return to Bangladesh, it is not yet decided whether she will be back as a “retired or active” politician.

He also asserted that the members of the Sheikh Mujibur Rahman family will neither abandon the people of Bangladesh nor leave the Awami League in the lurch.

He expressed gratitude to Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi and his government for protecting his mother and appealed to India to

Imran 'ready to apologise' if PTI role in riots proved

DAWN ONLINE

Former prime minister of Pakistan Imran Khan on Wednesday offered to apologise for the May 9 riots, provided the involvement of PTI supporters in the violent protests was proved.

His remarks came during a media talk at the Adiala Jail following the proceedings of the £190 million corruption reference against him and Bushra Bibi.

Khan said if CCTV footage identified that the PTI workers had trespassed and attacked government installations, he would not only apologise, but also expel those from the party, and ensure their prosecution before a court of law.

The ex-PM, however, pointed out that he too was manhandled on May 9, as Rangers had dragged him from premises of Islamabad High Court despite the fact that he was "the most popular leader in Pakistan".

UN troubled by Thai opposition party ban

AFP, Geneva

The United Nations yesterday said the dissolution of Thailand's main opposition Move Forward Party was "deeply troubling" and seriously impacted fundamental freedoms.

The Constitutional Court, Thailand's top court, voted unanimously on Wednesday to dissolve the MFP, the vanguard of the country's youthful pro-democracy movement, and ban its executive board members from politics for 10 years.

"This decision seriously impacts fundamental freedoms of expression and association, and people's right to participate in public affairs and political life in Thailand," UN human rights chief Volker Turk said in a statement.

"No party or politician should ever face such penalties for peacefully advocating legal reform, particularly in support of human rights."

The MFP took first place in a general election last year after pledging to reform Thailand's strict royal defamation law.

Calling the court move "deeply troubling", Turk said UN human rights mechanisms had long expressed concern about Thailand's lese-majeste laws, saying they were inconsistent with the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights.

"I call on the government to find pathways to ensure a vibrant, strong and inclusive democracy that promotes and respects rights to freedom of expression and association, and end use of lese-majeste laws to suppress critical voices," said Turk.

Anarchy is our enemy the fresh air of freedom," he said, seeking cooperation from people.

"Secondly, our peace and discipline maintaining institutions will not be excluded from [enjoying] this freedom. The army, navy, air force, border guard, police, Ansar, Village Defence, and coast guards will not be left out. Like everyone else, each of their members is today free from the extralegal coercive orders of the dictator government. If there is deviation from this in the slightest for anyone, our celebration today will be tarnished," he added.

Alleging that the "cruel autocratic government" was in power by using these forces, Prof Yunus said the government would restore the previous glories of these forces.

"Those who were involved in wrongdoings will be brought to justice," he said, adding that the same applies to all ministries, agencies, and educational institutions.

"Every criminal will be brought to book," he said.

He called on everyone to join their respective offices and enjoy the freedom of independence.

Earlier, Yunus called upon all to save the country from chaos and violence. He said restoring law and order would be his first priority to take the country forward.

"Keeping faith in me, you have invited me; the students have invited me, and I have responded to that invitation. My appeal to the people: if you have faith in me and trust me, then ensure that no attack is carried out on anyone and anywhere in the country. This is our first responsibility," he told a crowded news briefing upon his arrival in Dhaka from abroad in the afternoon.

Flanked by the navy and air force chiefs, Chief of Army Staff General Waker-uz-Zaman received Yunus at the airport.

Some key organisers of the anti-discrimination student movement and representatives of the civil society were also present at the airport to welcome him.

Prof Yunus said, "Today is our day of glory. We have to move forward keeping in mind the revolution through which a new Victory Day has been created in Bangladesh today."

The microcredit pioneer expressed his gratitude to the young people who made it possible. "They have saved this country. They have given rebirth to our country. Our pledge is that we will take the country forward at a very fast pace after this rebirth."

In a choking voice, Prof Yunus paid tribute to Abu Sayed, the student who was among those killed first in police firing during the anti-discrimination student movement.

"I am remembering Abu Sayed. His image is etched in the mind of each Bangladeshi. No one will be able to forget it -- an incredibly courageous young man standing in front of guns. No young men and women accepted defeat after that, and they marched forward."

The movement then spread across the country and Bangladesh achieved independence for the second time, Prof Yunus said.

He said the people must protect this freedom. "We also have to make sure that the benefits of this freedom reach every citizen. Otherwise the freedom would be meaningless. So, we pledge to take the freedom to every home."

Prof Yunus said the elderly citizens have to make the young people understand that this country is in their hands. "You [young people] will build the country as you like. Since you could liberate the country, you will also be able to build it as you like. The whole world will watch you and learn how a young generation can change the country."

He said the people have no confidence in the government system as they think it to an instrument of repression.

"This cannot be a government system. The government will come forward to help and protect the people, and stand by them...We have to bring the confidence back to the people so that they join the government."

The Nobel Peace Prize winner said Bangladesh is a big family.

"We want to move forward unitedly. We want to overcome the hesitation and conflict. Those who have gone astray will have to be brought back on the right path so we can work together."

Speaking about vandalism and arson attacks on the religious minority communities and state establishments, Prof Yunus said those were carried out as part of a conspiracy.

"Our job is to protect them, protect everyone. Every human being is our brother and sister, and we have to protect them and restore discipline."

He said chaos and violence are the greatest enemies of progress. He urged all to stop violence and make a pledge not to take law into own hands and resort to repress anyone.

"Our law enforcement agencies should be built in such a way that we would feel secure about action to be taken against the troublemakers once they are handed over to them."

US PRESIDENTIAL POLLS

Biden, Harris warn of Trump threat to democracy

AFP, Detroit

US President Joe Biden said Wednesday he is "not confident" Donald Trump would concede peacefully if he loses the US election, as the Republican's rival Kamala Harris warned a Trump victory would usher in a lawless administration set on curtailing Americans' freedoms.

Trump has been impeached twice and indicted twice over various alleged attempts to cheat in the 2020 election -- which he still has not acknowledged he lost -- and was convicted of 34 felonies over a hush money scheme to deceive voters in 2016.

His false claims of widespread fraud in 2020 preceded the storming of the US Capitol -- and the wounding of more than 100 police officers -- by a violent mob determined to prevent the certification of his defeat.

"If Trump loses, I'm not confident at all," Biden told US network CBS after he was asked if he expected a peaceful transfer of power in 2025.

"He means what he says. We don't take him seriously," Biden warned. "He means it."

The president's remarks, which air fully on Sunday, came soon after Harris had sounded the alarm over Trump's conduct in the opposite scenario -- victory for the 78-year-old billionaire.

Speaking to a crowd in Eau Claire, Wisconsin as part of a multi-day tour of swing states, she used the former president's own words -- as well as his felony convictions -- to argue that a second Trump term would be a disaster for America.

She pointed to his vow to be a dictator "on day one," his threats to weaponize the Justice Department against his political enemies and his 2022 comment demanding the "termination" of constitutional provisions over his 2020 election defeat.

"Someone who suggests that we should terminate the constitution of the United States should never again have a chance to stand behind the seal of the president of the United States," Harris said, exhorting Americans to reject the "chaos, fear and hate" of Trumpism.

Harris reprised the theme hours later at a rally in Detroit, where she called herself and her new running mate, Minnesota Governor Tim Walz, "joyful warriors" in White House battle.

The 59-year-old vice president was on day two of a blitz of the most closely-fought election battlegrounds as she seeks to capitalize on a surging excitement since she replaced Biden atop the Democratic ticket in July.

Buddhadeb Bhattacharjee no more

AGENCIES

Buddhadeb Bhattacharjee, veteran Left leader and former West Bengal chief minister, died at his south Kolkata residence this morning. He was 80.

He had been unwell for a while and had been suffering from respiratory problems that led to his frequent hospitalisation in recent years.

Last year, he had to be put on life support after he contracted pneumonia. But the veteran CPM leader made a comeback.

He is survived by his wife Meera and son Suchetan.

Bhattacharjee, also a former member of the CPM's top decision-making body, Politburo, served as Bengal chief minister from 2000 to 2011, succeeding Jyoti Basu in the top post. Bhattacharjee led the CPM into the 2011 state polls when the Mamata Banerjee-led Trinamool Congress posted a historic win, ending the 34-year Communist rule in the eastern state.

Students form liaison committee to work with govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Anti-discrimination Student Movement yesterday announced a committee to liaise with the newly formed interim government, civil society, students, and stakeholders.

Formed on August 5, the six-member committee selected and recommended the names of the advisers for the caretaker administration in one of its first tasks, the movement's coordinator Nahid Islam announced at a press conference at Dhaka University Journalists' Association at 7:30pm.

> Nahid also said that the committee would hold dialogues with all stakeholders and make proposals for the new leadership of the government.

The size and scope of the committee's work will increase in future and it will be inclusive on the basis of dialogue with all parties, according to him.

Nahid also said that the committee would hold dialogues with all stakeholders and make proposals for the new leadership of the government.

Committee coordinator Mahfuz Abdullah said at the press conference, "It is the work of the liaison committee to present proposals based on discussions, consultations, debate and dialogue with all the stakeholders of the state."

The members are Nasir Uddin Patwari aka Nasir Abdullah, Akram Hussain, Bhuiyan Asaduzzaman, Mamun Abdullahil, Ariful Islam Adeeb – all students of Dhaka University.

Yunus-led interim govt takes charge advisers last night, but none could give an answer.

With almost the entire police force remaining absent after numerous attacks on police, law and order situation has sharply worsened across the country. Students and volunteers have been controlling traffic on roads.

Political analysts say the Yunus-led government must quickly ensure people's safety, restore law and order, and get the barely-functioning civil administration back to normal.

For years, the winner of the 2006 Nobel Peace Prize was subject to bitter criticism from Hasina and the Awami League. Hasina said Prof Yunus was behind the cancellation of World Bank funding for the Padma Bridge.

He was stalked by lawsuits that many said were aimed at harassing him. A labour court sentenced him and three other top officials of Grameen Telecom to six months in prison in a case filed over labour law violations.

On Wednesday, a Dhaka tribunal acquitted Yunus in the case.

Last night's ceremony attended by almost 700 guests began with the recitation from the holy Quran.

Leaders of the BNP, the recently banned Jamaat, chiefs of the three armed forces, journalists, and top civil and military officials attended the event.

The chief justice, election commissioners and Awami League leaders were not seen there.

The new advisers include Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud, two key organisers of the student movement that led to the fall of the previous government, are also advisers.

This is the first time in Bangladesh that university students are in the advisory council. At just 26, Nahid and Asif are the youngest people ever to have the status of a minister.

As the chief adviser, Prof Yunus enjoys the status of prime minister.

The other advisers include Salehuddin Ahmed, former governor of Bangladesh Bank; Asif Nazrul, law professor at Dhaka University; Adilur Rahman, secretary of rights organisation Odhikar; Hassan Ariff, former attorney general and adviser to a caretaker government; Touhid Hossain, former foreign secretary; Syeda Rizwana Hasan, chief executive of BELA; and Sharmeen Murshid, chief executive officer of election watchdog Brotee.

Besides, Faruk-e-Azam, a freedom fighter; Brig Gen (retd) Sakhawat Hossain, former election commissioner; Supradip Chakma, chairman of Chittagong Hill Tracts Development Board and former ambassador; Bidhan Ranjan Roy, a psychiatrist; AFM Khalid Hossain, nayeb-e-ameer of Hefazat-e-Islam and adviser to Islami Andolan Bangladesh; Farida Akhter, women rights activist; and Nurjahan Begum, trustee board member of Grameen Telecom are advisers.

Supradip, Bidhan, and Faruk have yet to be sworn in, said the cabinet secretary.

In her impromptu reaction, Sharmeen Murshid said, "The country has fallen apart, it is fragmented, and people are divided. Institutions have been destroyed. We need to rebuild these.

"Even if I were an ordinary citizen, I would still have to contribute to the efforts. Now I have the opportunity to contribute more. I believe we have a strong team of advisers."

Another member Syeda Rizwana Hasan said, "Many countries around the world have become democratic, established accountability, and upheld human rights. Why can't we do the same here?"

"Half of the country's population is young. But we never considered how important they could be in getting things done. Today, they have proven their relevance and importance."

Student protests demanding reform in quotas in government jobs began on July 1 and gradually gained strength despite the government's use of excessive force leading to over 300 deaths.

The movement climaxed in a people's uprising on Monday as the student organisers urged people to "march to Dhaka".

After the fall of military dictator Hussain Muhammad Ershad, Bangladesh saw an interim government headed by Justice Shahabuddin Ahmed in 1991.

In 1996, another interim government was formed under Justice Muhammad Habibur Rahman. The interim government system was included in the constitution in the face of a movement led by the Awami League.

Justice Latifur Rahman was the head of the 2001 caretaker government.

The then president, Iajuddin Ahmed, also served as the chief adviser to the caretaker government from October 2006 to January 2007.

Former central bank governor Fakhruddin took charge as the head of the caretaker government on January 12, 2007.

In 2011, the Hasina-led government abolished the caretaker government system.

Prof Asif Nazrul on August 6 said, "We are going to form the government in an extraordinary situation. There are different constitutional means and customs to legalise certain actions. We will do that."

Supreme Court lawyer Shahdeen Malik said it might not be possible to fully abide by the constitution in the context of such an extraordinary political upheaval.

The general elections held under Shahabuddin, Habibur, Lutfor and Fakhruddin were comparatively acceptable to the people.

Just after being sworn in, Prof Yunus visited the Dhaka Medical College Hospital to visit those injured in the anti-government clashes.

'Interim govt will play vital role in establishing peace, stability'

Hopes US State Dept

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

Washington thinks the interim government headed by Nobel Laureate Muhammad Yunus will play a vital role in establishing long-term peace and political stability in Bangladesh, said Matthew Miller, the US State Department spokesman.

"And as you heard the secretary say yesterday, any decision that the interim government makes should respect democratic principles, rule of law and the will of the Bangladeshi people," he said at a press briefing yesterday.

> "... Any decision that the interim government makes should respect democratic principles, rule of law and the will of the Bangladeshi people."
> Matthew Miller
> US State Dept spokesman

The US will continue to monitor developments in Bangladesh, he said.

"I have already spoken to the interim government in Bangladesh and what steps we want to see it carry out as it moves forward."

The interim government took oath last evening, three days after the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government following a mass movement calling for her resignation.

Meanwhile, some media reported that Hasina's US visa has been revoked.

Asked about this, Miller said visa records are confidential under US law, so he cannot comment on that in any way.

When informed that Hasina's son Sajeeb Wazed Joy, a US resident, was instrumental in the shut down of internet in Bangladesh during the recent students' protest, Miller said he does not have any comment on statements made by a private citizen.

Normalcy

Meanwhile, Gonoforum Emeritus President and eminent jurist Dr Kamal Hossain said, "The change that has come today [yesterday] was welcomed by everyone. There has been an extraordinary turnout at the event. Everyone feels that change has come.

"We hope they [members of the advisory council] will be able to address the new crises. People will expect a meaningful change -- let this be that change."

Speaking to The Daily Star last night, Barrister Sara Hossain said, "My main expectation from this government is that it will enable substantial reforms to institutions in Bangladesh and clear the path for truth-telling about what has happened not only in the immediate past or the past few weeks but even over the last 14 years and before that. The students' anti-discrimination movement was for reforms and against repression and these should be the interim government's main themes.

"What I perhaps am a bit troubled by is that, unlike previous years, there is no balance of political background and police. We obviously have no representation from Awami League. This absence of balance could cause a problem."

Bangladesh has a secular constitution, history and tradition, which has not denied any faith but encouraged pluralism, "But the swearing-in today did not reflect that and I hope that is not a sign of things to come."

The inclusion of students is of course unprecedented, she said, adding, "But I think it can only add energy to the whole process ... I believe they can be a part of keeping the interim government in the right direction and keep it within the demands of the students and general people. We need to remember that even post-Liberation in 1971, we had many young leaders."

Sara Hossain observed, "We are a secular country of diverse religions, beliefs, ethnicities, genders and sexualities but we have seen some parties such as Hefazat-e-Islam who are opposed to inequality and non-discrimination, and so, I question their inclusion in this current interim government."

Samina Luthfa, associate professor at Dhaka University, said, "While I welcome the interim government, it is to be noted that many of them are from non-government organisations and require a specific kind of skill set. However, there is much work to be done to reform the nation, whether they have the skills for that remains a question. I think including the students [leaders of the anti-discrimination student movement] in the government brings hope."

Asked whether minority and women representation were enough, she said, "I believe those could be higher. Many other women and actors from religious minority backgrounds are skilled and have been supporting the movement, they too could have been included. More people from these segments of society could have ensured a higher possibility of a 'discrimination-free' country."

She added that since the Jamaat-e-Islami was banned, the Hefazat Nayeb-e-Ameer may have been included to balance out participation from all religious backgrounds.

"We are in an extraordinary situation and of course, we cannot expect everything to be perfect already, it will all take time.

"However, at this moment, the first thing the interim government must look after is the safety of all citizens, justice, the economy, and restoring law and order."

Samina Luthfa added, "Institutions that valued justice, law, and culture were all destroyed and politicised in the previous [Hasina] regime. Meanwhile, university administrations, which are of utmost importance for the growth of the newer generations, were also negatively influenced. All of these need rational and logical reforms."

On the other hand, she believes social inequality, and lack of justice must be addressed, regardless of race, religion or merit.

Protests erupt at half a dozen banks

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Protests broke out at half a dozen banks yesterday as officials demanded the cancellations of illegal appointments, punishment for owners involved in money laundering and irregularities, and restoring the jobs of those who were terminated in the past several years.

Employees of Islami Bank, Social Islami Bank, United Commercial Bank, Bangladesh Commerce Bank, Rupali Bank and Sonali Bank demonstrated at their respective head offices.

A group of shareholders of United Commercial Bank voiced demands to restructure the board and remove former land minister Saifuzzaman Chowdhury's family members from its board.

The protesters displayed various banners and alleged that the former land minister was involved in money laundering and irregularities.

The shareholders also sent a letter to the central bank, alleging that although Rukhmila Zaman is the chairperson of the bank, her husband Saifuzzaman Chowdhury was playing the role in reality.

The letter further said that Chowdhury was acting as the chairman by wielding his political power, flouting central bank regulations.

The lender is nearing bankruptcy because of Chowdhury's irregularities and looting, the letter reads.

They also alleged the former land minister acquired assets worth Tk 1,888 crore in the UK by looting depositors' money. As a result, the asset quality of the bank has become weak, it added.

The bank's founder chairman was the late Akhtaruzzaman Chowdhury, an Awami League leader and the father of Saifuzzaman Chowdhury.

MA Hashem, founder chairman of Partex Group, was also at the bank since the beginning. But he and his family members, one of whom was the chairperson, were forced to leave the bank in 2017.

Afterwards, Rukhmila Zaman took charge as chairperson.

The Daily Star attempted to contact Arif Quadri, managing director of UCB, but he did not respond.

Elsewhere, a storm was brewing at Social Islam Bank.

Officials of the bank said former chairman Md Rezaul Haque, who was forced to resign in 2017 after S Alam Group acquired a majority stake in the bank, returned to office and demanded his directorship be restored.

Officials also demanded that the jobs of those who were sacked after the takeover in 2017 be restored.

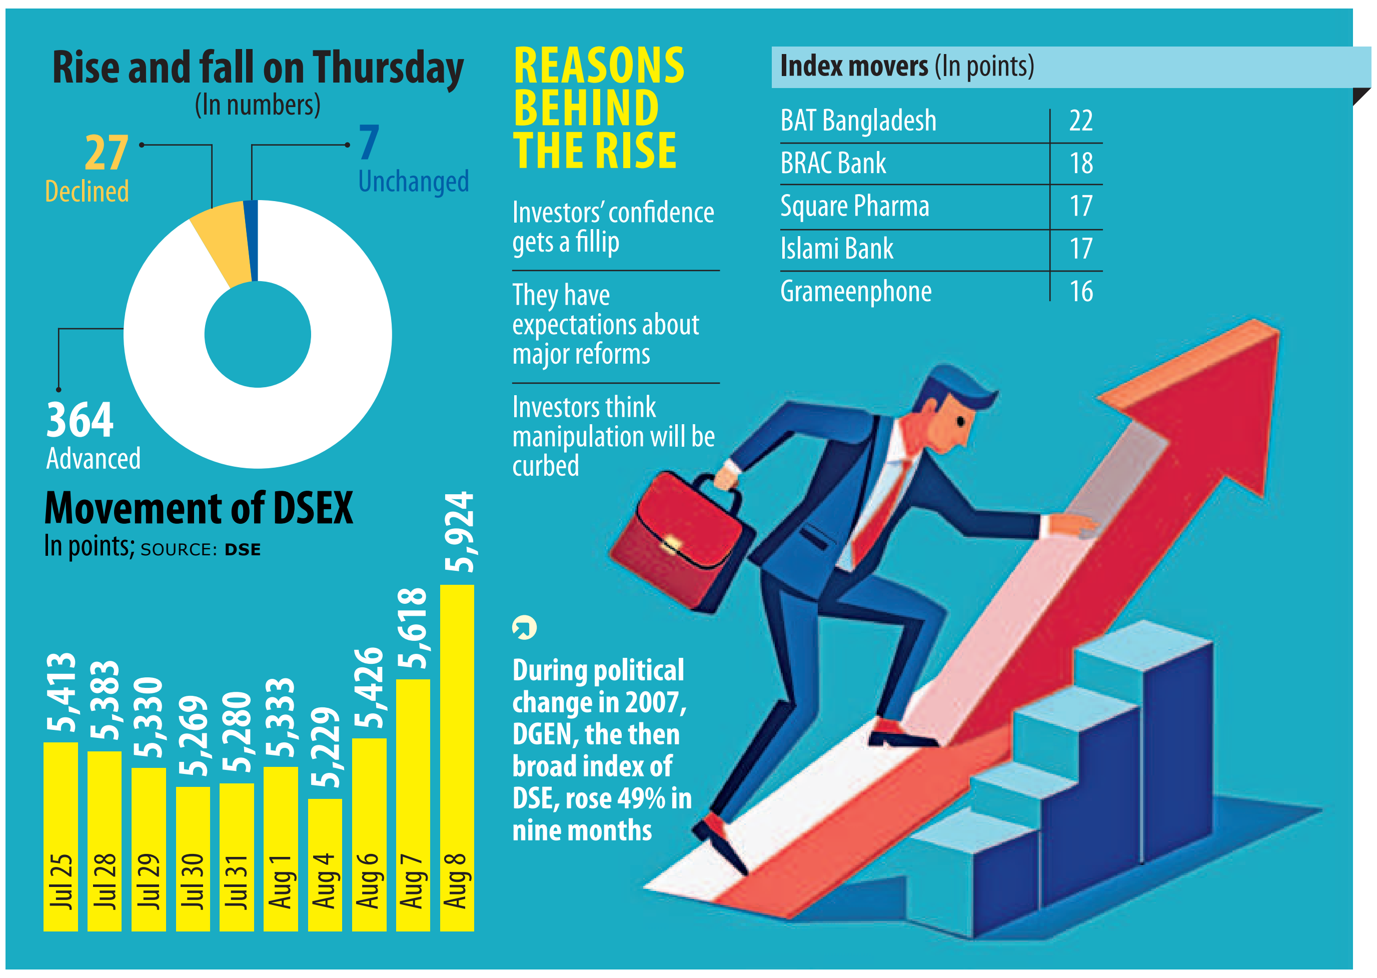
Zafar Alam, the bank's managing director, was absent yesterday.

A day prior, protestors had forced six senior Bangladesh Bank officials, including four deputy governors, to leave the central bank headquarters.

The demonstrating officials forced Bangladesh Bank Deputy Governor Saydur Rahman to resign and sought the resignation of Governor Abdur Rouf Talukder.

The Bangladesh Bank governor, four deputy governors, the head of the Bangladesh Financial Intelligence Unit and the central bank's policy advisor were absent yesterday.

Investors cheer as stocks soar



REASONS BEHIND THE RISE

- Investors' confidence gets a fillip
- They have expectations about major reforms
- Investors think manipulation will be curbed

During political change in 2007, DGEN, the then broad index of DSE, rose 49% in nine months

Share prices rallied for a third consecutive session yesterday, with the key index of Dhaka Stock Exchange (DSE) registering a 5.44 percent spike, the highest jump in four and a half years.

With yesterday's jump, the DSEX added 13 percent, or 695 points, in just three days after the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

"This rally is a reflection of the investors' upbeat mood," said Mir Ariful Islam, managing director and CEO of Sandhani Asset Management Limited.

"When there is a regime change, expectations run high that the new government will make some structural changes for the benefit of the market," he said.

The three-day gain coincided with the arrival of Nobel laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus, who was later sworn in as the chief of an interim government, ending a three-day power vacuum in what can be considered an unusual development.

Investors said they were happy since shares of healthy companies rose rather than that of companies with poor financials and business prospects, reflecting a lack of presence of manipulators.

This shows that institutional investors, who had been on the sidelines for many years, are now injecting funds into stocks.

Turnover at the DSE, which indicates the volume of shares traded, shot up 107 percent to Tk 1,606 crore yesterday.

"Investors are hopeful, so they are entering the market with fresh funds. They were unhappy year after year seeing the ailing stocks. Now, they are happy to see the dynamism," Islam said.

"I hope the market will remain good as the interim government has been formed with some economists who are being vocal for reforms in the financial sector," he said.

"The reform is necessary and this will send out a good message to institutional investors and foreign investors too," he added.

Yesterday, the DSES index, which represents Shariah-compliant companies, increased by 55 points, or 4.57 percent, to 1,274 points.

Similarly, the DS30 index comprising blue-chip stocks surged by 110 points, or 5.46 percent, to 2,132 points.

British American Tobacco Bangladesh made the biggest contribution with 22 points followed by BRAC Bank with 18 points, Square Pharmaceuticals with 17 points and Islami Bank with 16.7 points, according to LankaBangla Securities.

"Most share prices had reached their lowest due to the lack of investor confidence. So, the recent rise is not ensuring profits for many yet," said Md Sajedul Islam, a former vice president of the DSE Brokers Association of Bangladesh.

"Now, investors are coming to the market only because they regained some confidence, and they think they will not incur loss for manipulation," he added.

Citing how turnover grew even though banking activities were not fully operational and banks were not allowed to withdraw more than Tk 1 lakh, Islam said this indicates that investors injected hefty funds.

"This shows that if investors have confidence and think there will be profit, funds will come to the market. So, it proves that the market only needs confidence. No other support is needed if confidence can be boosted," he said.

"Actually, support is needed for the sick but none wants to invest in a sick market," he added.

Against this backdrop, Islam said the regulator should undertake reform measures in line with the government's overall reform initiative to retain investor confidence.

Shares of companies listed with Chittagong Stock Exchange (CSE) also rose yesterday as the Caspi, the broad index of the port city bourse, increased by 861 points, or 5.40 percent, to 16,799 points.

The market movement was driven by positive changes in the market capitalisation of bank, financial institutions, and food and allied scrips amid negative changes in the market cap of travel and leisure, paper and printing, and jute scrips, Shanta Securities said in its daily market review.

Almost all RMG factories reopen

Some textile mills yet to follow suit

REFAYET ULLAH MIRDHA

Almost all garment and textile mills have reopened after staying in limbo for four days as fears of vandalism and arson gripped the nation, industry leaders said yesterday.

Several factories were vandalised and set ablaze since Sheikh Hasina handed in her resignation from the post of prime minister and fled the country on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

Top businesspeople and leaders of different business and trade bodies on Wednesday demanded the immediate restoration of law and order to ensure safety at their factories.

They added that production is being hampered as goods are not being transported from the port to factories at present due to the lack of security on major roads.

Garment and textile mills were supposed to reopen on Wednesday but many decided to stay shut while others could not reopen, particularly in Ashulia, after rumours spread that they would be attacked.

However, almost all factories reopened yesterday, according to Khandoker Rafiqul Islam, acting president of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA).

> Garment factory owners and textile millers had no choice but to shutter their units under the threat of violence

He added that no untoward incident was reported afterwards, except for one in Ashulia. "But that was not a major incident," he said.

Similarly, Mohammad Hatem, executive president of the Bangladesh Knitwear Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BKMEA), said all member factories had reopened in Narayanganj and other areas.

"So, timely production and shipment can be expected if there is no further violence," Hatem added.

Mohammad Ali Khokon, president of Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA), said some factory owners opened their units but not all of them. The others may take a bit more time to reopen, he said.

Garment factory owners and textile millers had no choice but to shutter their units under the threat of violence after Sheikh Hasina fled the country in the face of massive student and civilian protests.

The protests, which began in early July, had also caused a prior four-day shutdown. On that occasion, fears of violence were accompanied by a five-day internet blackout, dealing the sector a double blow.

Other than safety concerns, many garment owners also expressed worries as some have already missed the lead times set by international retailers and brands.

Many more may have to provide discounts or go for costly air shipments if they cannot maintain lead times due to the recent spells of disruption.

July, August and September are the peak months for the shipment of goods for Christmas. They are also the prime months when work orders are placed for the following summer and spring seasons.

ICT industry sees hope on the horizon

MAHMUDUL HASAN

ICT entrepreneurs in Bangladesh, who faced uncertainties due to an internet blackout enforced by the government to suppress protests in recent weeks, are now brimming with hope following the fall of the dictatorial Sheikh Hasina-led government.

They now seek stability, good governance, democracy and reforms.

Just last week, there were fears that they might fail to attract foreign investments and lose foreign clients amidst the deepening political crisis and government crackdown on students.

Now, with the imminent positive changes expected from an interim government which is set to be formed, they anticipate good policies and a business-friendly environment.

"The transformational change we witnessed over the past few days, brings with it the opportunity to retell our story to the outside world, including global venture capital investors," said Fahim Ahmed, CEO of ride-sharing, food delivery and courier service platform Pathao.

"But for that story to be compelling, credible and executable, we must soon demonstrate meaningful steps towards building the institutions that can create a business environment that is open and transparent, and nurtures skill, innovation and enterprise," he said.

He said the first among such steps are the appointments to key positions at the institutions that will shape the trajectory for the economy, the financial system, and technology sector.

"Now more than ever, we must earn back the confidence of our promising young entrepreneurs, leaders, builders, coders, operators and professionals so that they choose to pursue their aspirations in Bangladesh," Ahmed said.

Morin Talukder, co-founder and CEO of online shopping platform Pickaboo, said: "Due to the internet blackout, we are now suffering from an image crisis."

"In the last few days, I spoke to some investors, and they are not interested in talking about business. They just ask if I am fine," he said.

"When I used to pitch to foreign investors, I would say we are a very stable country," he said.

"We have lost the trust of the international community. Our market was not good, the e-commerce industry was struggling to grow and now there is another blow," said Talukder.

He said the international investors prefer countries that have good policies, infrastructure and business environment.

"Now, we have to recover," he added.

Fahim Mashroor, CEO of bdjobs.com, said the ICT industry has gone through a very tough time in the last few years.

"Apart from the blow in the last few weeks, industry has been hit very hard because of a lot of issues, including Covid-19 and the Russia-Ukraine war. The government talked a lot about digital Bangladesh and Smart Bangladesh," he said.

"But very few things have happened. A lot of government money has been wasted. Political people looted government ICT funds," he said.

"I think all industry people are excited because they feel that corruption in the sector will come down. Also, democracy and stability will attract a lot of foreign investment in tech startups," said Mashroor.

"The local ICT market will also grow if governance and transparency are ensured," Mashroor added.

Waseem Alim, CEO of grocery e-commerce platform Chaldal, said the biggest challenge now was to regain the confidence of international investors.

"It will take some time to recover," he added.

The startup funding landscape in Bangladesh has already been experiencing a significant downturn.

In the first quarter of 2024, Bangladesh's startup sector secured only $7 million across four deals, according to the Bangladesh Startup Investment Report 2024 by LightCastle Partners.

This illustrates a 70 percent quarter-on-quarter decline in funding, a substantial drop from the surge witnessed in the fourth quarter of 2023, it said.

The decrease is even more significant when compared to the same period last year, representing an 82 percent drop.

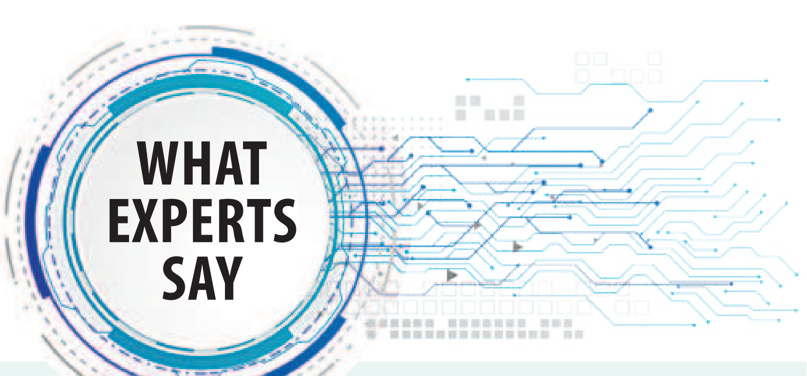
The government shut down mobile internet services on July 17 amid widespread violence over the quota reform protests.

A day later, on July 18, broadband internet was blocked, severely affecting public life and a wide range of economic activities, including utility bill payments, online banking, digital communications, digital commerce and clearance of goods from ports.

Mobile internet was restored on July 28 while social media platforms were unblocked on July 31. Mobile internet users were unable to access their Facebook and Messenger accounts for approximately 7 hours on August 2.

Mobile internet and Facebook were blocked again on August 4.

On August 5, mobile and broadband internet was blocked again for a few hours. However, the internet was fully restored after 2:00pm, when Sheikh Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister and fled the country.



- ICT entrepreneurs faced uncertainty due to internet blackout
- Internet outage caused image crisis among international investors
- Internet shutdown may hinder foreign investment
- Recent political changes may help improve business environment
- Credible, executable steps are needed now
- Key appointments vital for economic and technological advancement
- Fight against corruption and for democracy may help attract foreign investment

Currently there are little to no tourists in Cox's Bazar, which features the world's longest unbroken sea beach, for the deterioration of law and order situation since Sheikh Hasina resigned from her post as prime minister and fled the country on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

Holiday destinations devoid of tourists for security concerns

Hotels, resorts and motels in the country's holiday destinations are lying idle for a lack of tourists amidst the deterioration of law and order since Sheikh Hasina resigned from the post of prime minister on August 5 in the face of a mass uprising.

Vandalism and looting of business establishments, houses and places of worship of religious minorities have created panic, denting the flow of tourists to popular holiday destinations.

"Not a single tourist came to visit Sajek during the last three weeks due to instability and fear," said Suparna Debbarman, president of an association of the area's resort and cottage owners.

During the rainy season, tourists come to witness the beauty of the green hills and small waterfalls, but the prevailing situation is not favourable for travel.

He added that bus services connecting Dhaka and Khagrachhari are yet to resume in full swing.

According to him, there are at least 130 resorts and hotels and 16 restaurants in Sajek that can accommodate around 3,500 tourists.

These resorts and hotels employ at least 1,000 people, Debbarman said.

However, most staff are on leave with pay, which has helped reduce food costs for staff, he added.

Basically, people are panicking about the instability and rapid change in the political scenario, which has impacted tourism-centric businesses in Sajek and other holiday destinations, he said.

Echoing Debbarman's sentiments, Imranul Alam, owner of Tour Group BD, which offers houseboat services at Tanguar Haor in Sylhet, said the peak season for tourism in the region comes during the months of July and August.

He said the natural beauty of Tanguar Haor, the tea gardens of Sreemangal and the waterfalls of Jaflong attract many visitors but there were no such prospects in the foreseeable future.

However, the ongoing situation had affected their business.

According to Alam, there are at least 200 houseboats in Tanguar Haor passing idle times due to a lack of tourists.

Currently, there is little to no tourism-centric business at Cox's Bazar, which boasts the world's longest unbroken sea beach, due to a lack of tourists, said Selim Newaz, general secretary of the Cox's Bazar Hotel Motel Guest House Owners' Association.

"We are incurring huge losses every day...this prime tourist destination currently has almost no tourists. But we still have to bear our fixed costs," Newaz said.

"We don't know when normality will return and when we will get tourists," he added.

Since mid-July, hardly any tourists have arrived in Kuakata, which features another sea beach, said Rumman Imtiaz Tushar, president of the Tour Operators Association of Kuakata.

Many bookings have been cancelled since a curfew was first imposed by the government on July 20, he said.

There are around 140 establishments catering to tourists, including restaurants and tea shops, alongside people who rent out beach umbrellas and benches in Kuakata. They are all having to deal with potential business losses, he said.

There are no tourists in hotels, said Motaleb Sharif, general secretary of Kuakata Hotel-Motel Owners Association.

"The owners of the hotels are struggling to meet various expenses, including hotel maintenance costs and electricity bills," he added.

Economy recorded sharp contraction in July: PMI

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Bangladesh's economic activities suffered sharp contractions in July owing to disruption in production and overall businesses amid violence, internet outage and curfew imposed by the immediate past government to quell protests, according to the latest Purchasing Managers' Index (PMI).

The July reading of the Bangladesh PMI -- an index based on data compiled from monthly surveys of over 500 private sector enterprises -- dropped a hefty 27 points from the previous month to record a sharp contraction at 36.9 points, much below the mid-point reading of 50 that means 'no change'.

A PMI reading above 50 generally indicates 'expanding' and below that shows a 'contraction', according to the Metropolitan Chamber of Commerce and Industry (MCCI) and Policy Exchange Bangladesh, which developed the PMI.

The latest PMI shows contraction in all key sectors of agriculture, manufacturing, construction and services, said the MCCI.

> The Purchasing Managers' Index dropped a hefty 27 points in July compared to the previous month

"The recent events of widespread unrest that culminated in the eventual resignation of the prime minister and fall of the government, have also had an impact on the economy," the MCCI said in a statement regarding the PMI.

"All key sectors of the economy recorded sharp contractions as the previous regime resorted to extreme measures to regain control. Nonetheless, there appears to be a silver lining as the future business index of all key sectors posted expansion readings."

According to the index developed in 2024, the agriculture sector recorded a sharp contraction after six consecutive months of expansion.

The sector posted a sharp contraction rate for the indexes of new business, business activity, and employment. However, the input costs index posted a faster expansion whereas the order backlog index posted a slower expansion rate.

The manufacturing sector also posted a sharp contraction after seven consecutive months of expansion, according to the index.

The sector recorded a sharp contraction rate for the indexes of new orders, new exports, factory output, and supplier deliveries, whereas the employment index recorded a slower expansion.

However, faster expansion rates were recorded for the indexes of input purchases and input prices, and the finished goods index reverted to an expansion.

Congestion at Ctg port clearing up

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The congestion of import and export containers at the Chattogram port is slowly clearing, with port activities ramping up since yesterday morning.

The backlog had accrued as container handling at the country's premier seaport came to a halt after the government enforced public holidays to quell the unrest stemming from a nationwide student movement.

The movement, which claimed more than 591 lives till yesterday according to The Daily Star's count, climaxed on August 5, when Sheikh Hasina resigned from her position as prime minister and fled the country.

According to the Chattogram Port Authority (CPA), importers are slowly clearing their goods in a bid to minimise risks amid security concerns.

CPA data shows that around 3,924 twenty-foot equivalent units (TEUs) of containers were released as of 8:00am yesterday, with 3,039 TEUs being export-oriented.

However, 41,581 TEUs of import containers are still awaiting release in port yards.

CPA officials say container congestion is gradually decreasing as port activities are returning to normal.

Omar Hazzaz, president of the Chattogram Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said traders are still delaying the clearance of import and export cargo in fear of theft as there has been no police presence along the highways for at least two days now.

"But the situation is slowly returning to normal," he added.

Hazzaz also hoped port activities would move ahead at full steam after the interim government is sworn in.

Students paint over vandalised walls, GIVE DU NEW LIFE

In the absence of the city's usual traffic management, a group of students have taken matters into their own hands. From directing vehicles to repainting the urban landscape, the young students are transforming Dhaka's streets in unexpected ways.

Different student-led groups have taken the initiative to revitalise the walls of Dhaka University and adjacent areas.

The walls have now come alive with powerful messages, rebel poetry, and artistic expression. While the quality of the graffiti varies, the shared purpose is clear– to inspire change and elevate the spirit of the community.

Some murals display technical mastery, their striking visuals demanding attention. Others convey raw emotion through simple strokes. One graffiti painted in the Dhaka University area is particularly striking, as it conveys the message of a secular Bangladesh. The graffiti features quote from Abdul Hamid Khan Bhashani. Another graffiti has been dedicated to the martyr Abu Sayed, who was brutally killed by police during the quota reform protests.

Together, these student-led initiatives have transformed the cityscape, injecting it with renewed energy and purpose.

Buddhadeb Bhattacharjee no more

Known for his simple lifestyle, Bhattacharjee breathed his last at the two-bedroom flat at Palm Avenue from where he once ran the state. His organs will be donated for medical research as per his wishes.

His body will be kept in the CPM headquarters for his followers to pay respects and the last journey will take place tomorrow.

An alumnus of Presidency College, Kolkata, Bhattacharjee was a school teacher before he joined politics full-time. After serving as an MLA and a state minister, he was elevated to deputy CM before Basu stepped down in 2000. As chief minister, he led the CPM to Assembly poll victories in 2001 and 2006.

During Bhattacharjee's tenure, the Left Front government adopted a relatively open policy towards business as compared to the Jyoti Basu regime. Ironically, this policy and land acquisitions related to industrialisation paved the way for the Left's stunning defeat in the 2011 election.

Trinamool Congress, which won just 30 seats in the 2006 elections, led the movement against the Tata Motors plant in Singur. Eventually, in 2008, Ratan Tata decided to shift the project to Gujarat and cited the movement by Mamata Banerjee as the reason. This was a big setback to Bhattacharjee's government. Equally damaging was the violence in Nandigram where police action against a group protesting against land acquisition for a chemical hub project led to 14 deaths.

Banerjee's Trinamool Congress reaped the political dividends of the anti-incumbency of the Left Front rule and the negative perception of the state government's land acquisition policies, winning 184 seats in the 2011 election. The Left's defeat in the 2011 polls started a decline it is yet to recover from. Over the next decade, the BJP overtook it as the main opposition and the Left now is reduced to a minor force in the state it once ruled unchallenged for decades.

President Droupadi Murmu wrote on X, "Saddened to learn that former West Bengal chief minister Buddhadeb Bhattacharjee is no more. The veteran leader personified dignity and was an epitome of principled politics. He will be long remembered for dedication to the welfare of the people of West Bengal. My heartfelt condolences to his family and followers."

Prime Minister Narendra Modi said he was saddened by the news. "He was a political stalwart who served the state with commitment. My heartfelt condolences to his family and supporters. Om Shanti," the PM tweeted.

In her condolence message, Mamata Banerjee said she had a decades-long association with the veteran Left leader. "I am very upset. My condolences to Meera di, Suchetan and to all supporters of CPM. We have already taken a decision that we shall give him full respect and ceremonial honour during his last journey and rites," she said.

Leader of the Opposition, BJP's Suvendu Adhikari, said he is "deeply saddened" by the news and expressed his condolences to Bhattacharjee's family and admirers.

Nahid, Asif make history the DB office on July 30 protesting their detention and the brutal crackdown on students nationwide.

The student movement soon resonated with the ordinary people and the protest ended the Awami League's rule.

Nahid is a master's student of sociology at Dhaka University. He is also the member secretary of Ganotantrik Chhatra Shakti, a group formed by breakaway members of Chhatra Odhikar Parishad, led by Nurul Haque Nur, a former vice president of Ducsu.

Asif, another coordinator of the quota reform movement, is a master's student of linguistics at the same university.

A friend of Nahid, Asif is the convener of Ganotantrik Chhatra Shakti.

After taking oath as advisers yesterday, both Nahid and Asif said they will now fight for the people's voting rights and work for restoring democracy and eliminate discrimination and injustice from the society.

"People relied on the young people and took to the streets. The young people shed blood and the countrymen also did so. If the people think that the young citizens should take the top positions of the state, the young people would be ready to do so," he said replying to a query.

Nahid said the interim government has been formed with representatives from the young and experienced people from all opinions.

"The participants of anti-discriminatory student movement will not only work in the government but will also remain on the streets. Together, we will lead the country to prosperity.

"The people of Bangladesh have been deprived of voting rights for a long time. The main objective of the interim government is restoring democracy by ensuring voting rights," he said.

It is not possible to ensure a free and fair election unless reforms are made to the structure of the state as well as to the Election Commission, he observed.

Speaking to reporters, Asif said they are ready to take on the challenge to serve as the youngest advisers to an interim government.

"All the state institutions were made dysfunctional under the fascist Awami League government. We aim to eliminate fascism by reforming these institutions."

Though the major political parties could not unseat the autocratic government in the last 17 years, the students managed to do so in just four days after announcing their one-point demand, he said.

"We will prove that the members of the younger generation can also serve the country with passion and patriotism," Asif said.

Stern action to be taken to end anarchy

IGP Mainul Islam on Wednesday evening instructed all police personnel to return to their respective police lines, offices, and barracks within 24 hours to ensure law and order.

Yesterday morning, the Police Headquarters said people from all walks of life, leaders of political parties, and students were extending all-out support to ensure the safe return of police members to their work.

Witnesses said a small number of police personnel were seen going to Rajarbagh Police Lines in plain clothes. They were seen signing on the attendance book and chatting.

However, they were not going to their posts, like in police stations, out of security concerns.

While visiting police stations and other police establishments in Dhaka, other metropolitan cities, and districts, it was found that most stations hardly had any police personnel in them.

There were almost no police activities as the police personnel either did not join work or had left the station out of security concerns.

A few policemen reported to police lines and offices of different police units in Dhaka, Chattogram, Sylhet, Rangpur, six districts under Rangpur range, Bogura, Noakhali, Shariatpur, Gazipur, Kushtia, Jhenidah, Patuakhali, Noakhali, Jamalpur and Natore, report our correspondents.

Students and Ansar members were seen guarding the capital's Mirpur and Pallabi police stations, which were attacked by mobs. Only eight Ansar members were seen guarding Kafrul and Bhashantek police stations.

Many policemen are scared of being at the receiving end of public wrath and further violence since the police had opened fire on protesters and people at the fag end of Sheikh Hasina's rule.

More than 400 people, including police personnel, were killed in violence centring protests by students against discrimination.

Sources said many police personnel loyal to the outgoing Dhaka Metropolitan Police Commissioner Habibur Rahman were yet to join work. Many of them were in hiding, they claimed.

A superintendent of police said some top police officials ordered the firing on people and that they were still conspiring to prevent police personnel from returning to work.

"They have taken refuge in secure locations but are spreading propaganda to instigate police personnel. These culpable officers should be brought to justice," the SP told The Daily Star.

A constable, preferring anonymity, said, "We are in a dilemma over joining work and risking our lives."

Another official said, "We do not want to be used for political purposes. We want reforms to the police force and a change of uniform before we join."

Police personnel of different ranks met the IGP and made various proposals yesterday. The IGP assured them of taking steps in the shortest possible time.

Later, an eight-member committee, led by Assistant Inspector General Nazmul Islam, was formed for making recommendations on compensations for the families of deceased policemen, treatment of the injured, and implementations of other proposals.

The committee is composed of an SP of police hospital, an additional SP, an assistant commissioner, an inspector, a sergeant, a sub-inspector, and a constable.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Retired Police Officers Welfare Association yesterday said, "Some unprofessional and biased policemen on behalf of the dictatorial government have tortured, oppressed and killed innocent students." It demanded that those be brought to book.

The association also appealed to the people to create a safe working environment for the police force.

It demanded reforms to the force and urged policemen to return to work.

interim government.

"India remains committed to working with Bangladesh to fulfill the shared aspirations of both our peoples for peace, security, and development."

Sheikh Hasina resigned on August 5 and went to India following an uprising.

During Hasina's 15-year rule, Bangladesh and India deepened relationship, especially in the areas of connectivity. Bangladesh supported India in ensuring security in India's northeast.

In the wake of Hasina's resignation, India sealed its borders with Bangladesh.

Meanwhile, our New Delhi correspondent reported that hours before members of the interim government took oath, India said it was too early to evaluate the situation in Bangladesh and the "interests and well-being" of the people of Bangladesh is New Delhi's primary concern.

At a weekly media briefing in New Delhi, Randhir Jaiswal, spokesperson for Indian Ministry of External Affairs, was repeatedly asked what stand India would take on the interim administration in Bangladesh.

He said, "As far as we are concerned, the expectations and the interests of the people of Bangladesh are on top of the mind of the government and the people of India."

Earlier in the day, UK Foreign Secretary David Lammy spoke to Indian External Affairs Minister S Jaishankar and discussed the developments in Bangladesh and West Asia.

"Received a call from UK Foreign Secretary @DavidLammy today [Thursday]. Discussed the situation in Bangladesh and West Asia," Jaishankar said in a post on his official X.

Asked at the media briefing if the issue of Hasina's possible asylum in the UK figured during the conversation, Jaiswal said, "I don't have any information on that."

Responding to a query about Hasina's plan and whether she would continue to stay in India or seek asylum in any other country, he said, "We don't have any update on that. It is for her [Hasina] to take forward her plan."

On attacks against the minorities, their properties, and temples in Bangladesh, Jaiswal said India has noted how individuals and groups under different banners have come out to protect the minorities and their set-ups.

"It is the responsibility of every government to ensure proper law and order and take care of its people. The restoration of law and order as early as possible is in the interests of both the people of Bangladesh and the region at large."

The Indian visa centres in Bangladesh will open once normalcy returns, he said.

Jaiswal said India is in talks with Bangladesh authorities about the safety and security of its high commission and assistant high commissions so that they can discharge their work.

CHILD RIGHTS

Safeguards under the Children Act 2013

QUOTA REFORM MOVEMENT IN CONTEXT

BIVA MOSHARRAF & H.M. FAZLE RABBI

Amid the quota reform protests, A juvenile court in Dhaka rejected bail petition of a 17 year old Dhaka College student Hasnatul Islam Faiyaz. Below is a general analysis on the legality of treating children in contact and in conflict with law.

Firstly, coming to the question of who a child is, section 4 of the Children Act 2013 categorises a child as anyone under the age of 18, which is consistent with the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child 1989 (CRC). The preamble of the Act also mentions that it was enacted to implement the CRC.

Section 3 of the Act stipulates that "notwithstanding anything contained in any other existing law, the provisions of this Act shall prevail." This overriding clause ensures the Act's primacy over all other laws concerning offenses committed by children and other specified matters within the statute. Moreover, section 17 of the Act provides that in any case where a child in conflict with the law or a child in contact with the law is involved under any law whatsoever, the children's court shall have the exclusive jurisdiction to try that case. The reality, however, paints a far different picture, showcasing a glaring disconnect between our law's noble intentions and its actual implementation.

The rights and legal safeguards guaranteed under the 2013 Act and the CRC are there for a reason. When these principles are violated, it serves as a stark reminder that even the most well-crafted laws are powerless without genuine commitment to their enforcement.

When a child is tried at a normal court as opposed to a children's court, it constitutes a direct violation of the Children Act. Additionally, by not transferring the case to the children's court, the court fails to adhere to the essential principles of child protection and justice. The overarching aim of the Children Act is to ensure that children in conflict with the law are treated with dignity and provided with the opportunity for rehabilitation, rather than punitive measures designed for adults. It is important to adhere to this principle as general courts are ill-equipped to address the unique needs and rights of a child.

JUVENILE JUSTICE

Section 28 of the Act explicitly prohibits the publication of any material that could identify a child involved in judicial proceedings. Under the provisions of the Children Act 2013, in any case under trial before the children's court involving a child, no photograph or description of the child may be published in any print or electronic media or on the internet that could directly or indirectly identify the child, unless the court determines that such publicity will not harm the child's interests. Needless to say, when a child is not tried at a children's court, this provision is not complied with. As a result, it not only contravenes the protections outlined in the Children Act but also raises significant concerns about the treatment and rights of children within our legal system.

Our High Court Division (HCD) and Appellate Division (AD) of the Supreme Court play a crucial role in protecting children's rights and overseeing the juvenile justice process in the country. In numerous cases, the Supreme Court has actively contributed to the development of children's rights and ensured awareness of the judicial process. In Ridoy v State (Criminal Appeal No. 7533), the HCD, presided over by Justice Enayetur Rahim and Justice Mostafizur Rahman, identified several conflicting legal provisions between the Children Act 2013 and other significant legislations. These conflicts pertain to the cognizance, trial procedures, and bail hearings. Recognising the critical need for a coherent legal framework, the HCD recommended amendments to the Children Act 2013 to eliminate these contradictions and ensure the protection and fair treatment of minors. The HCD also issued seven directives for magistrates and children's courts to follow until the recommended legislative amendments are enacted to protect children's rights in the judicial system and highlight the judiciary's proactive role in advocating for legal reforms to improve child justice in Bangladesh.

In The Children Act 2013: A Commentary, Honorable Justice Imman Ali observed, "No child shall be arrested or detained under any law relating to preventive detention". At first, as per section 44(3) of the Act, the real age of the child needs to be determined. The same provision also mentions that no child shall be hand-cuffed. Section 52 of the 2013 Act highlights the need for special care and treatment of minors and outlines specific provisions for granting bail to children. If a non-adult is produced before the children's court, the court has to release him on bail or order his custody/detention in a safe home or a Child Development Centre.

The rights and legal safeguards guaranteed under the 2013 Act and the CRC are there for a reason. When these principles are violated, it serves as a stark reminder that even the most well-crafted laws are powerless without genuine commitment to their enforcement.

The writers are both graduates from Department of Law, University of Dhaka.

RIGHTS AND REMEDIES

Revisiting the Quota Reform Movement and police powers

BIBSWAN DEB BISWAS NIR

Amidst the turbulent circumstances arising from the recent Quota Reform Movement, a significant number of allegations were brought against the actions of the police forces. Along with the reports of deaths and injuries, overwhelming number of arrests and detentions without prior explanation, stops and searches, and custodial tortures were reported this time, while the authorities consistently branded such actions as countermeasures to internal political turmoil.

Bangladesh's legal system guarantees transparency, accountability, and preservation human rights, including the prohibition of torture and the protection of privacy. However, the police conduct reveals a gap between the law and its enforcement, emphasising the vital need for reform to preserve fundamental rights and uphold the rule of law.

Firstly, Section 54 and 167 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898 (CrPC) gives wide powers to the police to arrest anyone without warrant or even prior explanation, on reasonable suspicion concerning a cognizable offence. However, Article 33(1) of the Constitution contradicts (and prevails over) that by putting a condition that an arrestee should be informed of the grounds of arrest in the shortest time possible.

In the landmark BLAST v Bangladesh (2003) case, the High Court Division pointed out these nuances between provisions of the Code and the Constitution. The court further addressed the vague ambit of 'concerned' cognizable offence under section 54 of the Code, which in turn gives unhindered power to a police officer to arrest any person under arbitrary suspicion, even potentially going against the fundamental rights of life and liberty. The court also chalked out guidelines for the police including necessitating disclosure of identity while making arrests, explaining grounds of arrest and letting the accused to consult a suitable lawyer.

In Saifuzzaman v State (2004) the court further scrutinised arresting powers by emphasising on expressions such as 'reasonable suspicion' and 'credible information' and providing guidelines on documenting the arrest to stop harassment of the citizens. Therefore, the recent instances of indiscriminate arresting are not lawful as not only they were against the demonstrators' constitutional right to life, liberty, as well as peaceful assembly, but also the relevant laws hold the police accountable for their deeds.

Secondly, there has been complaints and reports against the police and its detective branch regarding torture on the detained demonstrators. In fact, police here have a long-standing vile culture of inflicting third degree method on detainees. Not only does the law not empower them to do so, but also the law condemns such actions punishable under the Bangladesh Penal Code.

Our nation has both domestic and international obligations to condemn custodial torture. Article 35(5) of our Constitution prohibits torture or cruel, inhuman, or degrading punishment or treatment to any person. Bangladesh has also ratified the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman, Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT) on 5 October 1998, which codifies an absolute prohibition of torture. While Article 2(2) of the CAT prohibits every kind of justification of torture, despite the existence of exceptional circumstances such as war or a threat of war, internal political instability or any other public emergency, Article 13 of the same empowers the victims to such torture with the right to complain and fair trial before competent authorities.

Furthermore, despite the protection provided by Section 197 of the CrPC to public officials like the police from getting convicted for their offences committed in an official capacity, Section 12 of the Prevention of Torture and Custodial Death Act, 2013 renders such excuses for torture inadmissible. This provision is in conformity with Article 2(2) of the CAT. Further in compliance with the CAT, the act prescribes trial and punishment for the delinquent officers under Sections 14 and 15. Ultimately, the plea of a superior's order or internal political unrest is not a defence for delinquent officials liable for custodial torture.

Thirdly, albeit the practice of stop and search being a commonplace for police all over the globe and statutes like The Police Act 1861, the Dhaka Metropolitan Police Ordinance 1976, the Penal Code 1860 and even the Digital Security Act 2018 in fact vest the police in Bangladesh with such power, police operating phone searches on students and pedestrians is a gross misuse of this power and violation to the constitutional right to privacy.

Article 43 of our Constitution provides safeguard against forceful house entry, search and seizure and ensures privacy of correspondence and other means of communication. Article 17 of the ICCPR also enshrines this right. Although reform to police search and seizure is still a long overdue in Bangladesh, constitutional remedy is available to the victims under Articles 44 and 102 of the Constitution.

Bangladesh's legal system guarantees transparency, accountability, and preservation human rights, including the prohibition of torture and the protection of privacy. However, the police conduct reveals a gap between the law and its enforcement, emphasising the vital need for reform to preserve fundamental rights and uphold the rule of law.

LAW OPINION

ICJ's Advisory Opinion on Israel's Presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory

ARAFAT IBNUL BASHAR

On July 19, 2024, the International Court of Justice (ICJ) issued its advisory opinion in Legal Consequences arising from the Policies and Practices of Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory, including East Jerusalem. The proceeding was initiated by the General Assembly of the United Nations, under the Resolution A/RES/77/247 adopted on December 30, 2022.

ICJ was requested to render an opinion regarding the legal consequences arising from the ongoing violation by Israel of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination, from its prolonged occupation, settlement and annexation of the Palestinian territory occupied since 1967, and regarding how the policies and practices of Israel affect the legal status of the occupation, along with the legal consequences that arise for all States and the United Nations from such status. ICJ was of the opinion that Israel's continued presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory is unlawful, that Israel is under an obligation to bring to an end its illegal presence in the occupied territory as rapidly as possible, that Israel is under an obligation to cease immediately all new settlement activities, and to evacuate all settlers from that territory, and that Israel has the obligation to make reparation for the damage caused to all the natural or legal persons concerned in that territory.

ICJ put the responsibility upon the General Assembly and the Security Council to determine the modalities required to ensure an end to Israel's illegal presence in the Occupied Palestinian Territory and ensure the full realisation of the right of the Palestinian people to self-determination. A corresponding duty was placed on all states to cooperate with the United Nations to put such modalities into effect. While it is not for other states to solve this conundrum, they are now under an obligation to cooperate to bring an end to this crisis through lawful means, and also not to render any aid or assistance to Israel that may help maintain the unlawful situation. This position is consistent with the court's previous observations in the Separation of the Chagos Archipelago from Mauritius opinion and the Construction of a Wall in the Occupied Palestinian Territory opinion. Again, the court has called upon the states to distinguish in their dealings with Israel between its own territory and the Occupied Palestinian Territory, i.e., the obligation to abstain from treaty relations, or entering into economic or trade dealings, or establishing diplomatic missions with Israel, or to take steps to prevent trade or investment relations that assist in the maintenance of the illegal situation created by Israel in the Occupied Palestinian Territory or a part thereof.

State cooperation to promote and ensure self-determination in this case, might require that the UN put forth the modalities for such purpose through the General Assembly and the Security Council. And the major obstacle behind this is the veto politics in the Security Council. However, in the past, the Security Council did prohibit aid or assistance in maintaining the illegal apartheid regime in South Africa and Portuguese colonies.

States could, however, halt and prohibit economic and trade activities that occur in the occupied territory. Some recent official documents procured from the Dutch Foreign Ministry expressed doubts that almost every Israeli business has a connection to the illegal settlements. Thus, through necessary implications, it can be understood that sanctions and countermeasures, including economic restrictions, arms embargoes and the cutting of diplomatic and consular relations, should be the immediate response of the states if Israel fails to immediately and unconditionally withdraw armed forces and close military administration in the occupied territory. In recent times, cases have been filed in Netherlands and Germany regarding export of arms and military equipment. The Dutch Appeals Court already ordered the government to block the delivery of parts of fighter aircrafts to Israel over concerns of violation of International Law. Pursuant to the observation of this advisory opinion, states must do their part to bring an end to this prolonged illegal occupation.

Much depends on how we act today

Nation expects a lot from the interim government

We extend our heartiest welcome to the interim government that begins its journey during an extraordinary time in our history. The swearing-in of advisers last night comes days after a student-led mass uprising overthrew the iron-fisted government of Sheikh Hasina, creating a power vacuum that led to a massive disruption in law and order, civil service, and not to mention, public life. We expect things to get back to normal now that the interim government has taken over the reins, and chief adviser Nobel laureate Dr Mohammad Yunus' first message after landing in Bangladesh on Thursday was one of hope, reconciliation, and peace—exactly what citizens need at this moment.

Given the unprecedented violence that occurred both before and following Hasina's fall on Monday, the first order of business for the government would be to de-escalate any potential for further violence. Dr Yunus, too, stressed that restoring law and order will be his first priority. For that, it is crucial to ensure that the 2-lakh-strong police force are back on active duty, resolve the complications facing them, and operationalise all police stations destroyed or damaged in post-uprising attacks. Overhauling and depoliticising the force should also be on the agenda. Moving ahead, we would like to see police in control of regular law enforcement activities, without needing to depend on the army or other security forces.

The last four weeks of deadly clashes and vandalism have also caused massive economic losses, disruptions, and reputational damage for Bangladesh. The economy was already in a tough spot before the start of all this, so putting it back on a path of recovery will be a top priority. Two crucial sectors disrupted by the recent events are import-export and garment industry, which must be resumed in full swing. The government should also focus on containing the inflation, stabilising exchange rates, and bringing down prices of food. As things stand, our economy is disastrously unbalanced, with persistent inequalities and a stagnant private job sector. These too must be addressed.

The education sector is another main victim of the recent unrest. What the students have done in recent weeks will be remembered for generations, but as future nation builders, we need them back in classrooms. We urge the new administration to ensure that all schools, colleges and universities are reopened immediately. But it is vital that the crippling influence of party-based student politics is not tolerated again, especially in public university campuses and dormitories. The government should also focus on ensuring good governance. Which means unravelling the politicisation of key institutions like the civil service, judiciary, and electoral system, and establishing a culture of professionalism and accountability. On the diplomatic front, the government should signal to all our partners that all bilateral and multilateral relations will be normalised without delay.

Finally, we should start the process of establishing justice for the over 500 people who died in recent weeks. We need closure but also reconciliation so we can move ahead as a nation. It is time for an international independent commission headed by the UN to conduct thorough and impartial investigations into each of the killings. In the end, however, it should lead to us mending the flaws in our political system. Otherwise, the huge sacrifices that went into making this uprising successful will have been for nothing.

A tragic assault on our history

We must collectively protect our cultural, historical assets

The recent torching of Bangabandhu's historic residence, destruction of many archaeological sculptures, statues, and murals, and attacks on cultural hubs are distressing, to say the least. After the resignation of Sheikh Hasina and amid nationwide protests on Monday, a mob decided to take their rage out by vandalising various structures, including Bangabandhu's house turned museum. With the burning down of this historic building, the country lost a great deal of artefacts of national significance.

We understand that people experienced a range of emotions after the end of Awami League's 15-year-long authoritarian rule. Many were nursing pent-up anger and resentment for the injustices done to them. But to direct their anger at objects and memorials that had nothing to do with their suffering is unacceptable, especially when they are of such great value. Moreover, Bangabandhu's house in Dhanmondi was not a symbol of AL; it signified our nation's independence struggle, which we must not dishonour. Similarly, the Shadhinata Sangram Bhashkarjo at Fuller Road, the sculpture of Shilpacharya Zainul Abedin in Mymensingh, and the Mujibnagar Liberation War Memorial Complex in Meherpur were all symbols associated with peoples' struggle for independence, equality and justice. As we begin a new journey in pursuit of the same objectives, the loss of these national assets is a tragedy indeed.

Alongside these, miscreants also damaged or destroyed the Madhusudan De Smriti Sculpture in front of Madhu's Canteen in Dhaka University, the 144-year-old Venus sculpture in front of Shashi Lodge, and many other structures. They also attacked Joler Gaan frontman Rahul Ananda's home, a once vibrant cultural hub, and looted and burnt the place. Fortunately, Ananda and his family were left unharmed. However, the destruction of his collection of over 3,000 musical instruments, which he had designed and made over the years, is a huge loss. These attacks have truly dampened the celebratory mood of the country, and risks pushing it back towards the same senseless violence that the students sought to save us from.

We condemn all such attacks disrespecting our nation's culture and history. We hope that the people will once again come together to prevent any more national and cultural assets from being damaged or destroyed. And we hope that once the interim government starts working, those responsible for these attacks will be held accountable. Meanwhile, we urge the law enforcement authorities to step up their efforts to prevent any further acts of vandalism.

The opportunity to reform Bangladesh must not be wasted

We Bangladeshis have a special strength, which enables us to form mass uprisings and put up resistance. There is a saying that rebellion against injustice is justified. In Bangladesh's context, we can also say that rebellion against injustice is irresistible. Time and again, our people have risen against injustice, bringing victory. Then again, what is worrying is the defeat of the purpose that follows. We saw this in 1971, in 1990, and it is a matter of concern even now.

This movement was definitely a mass uprising. Though students started it, we saw everyone taking part in it—from children to the elderly. Parents of the students joined in, their teachers joined in; journalists, lawyers and ordinary citizens in the cities as well as remote areas joined in, coming out to the streets. This is a remarkable feat. A key characteristic of this uprising was that it was not led by any political party, unlike the movements in 1969, 1971 and 1990. Political parties did support the movement. The left democratic parties expressed support from the beginning. The BNP said they supported the movement a lot later on. But none of them were the leaders. This movement was truly led by the students, under the banner Students against Discrimination. This name is beautifully significant. The fascist government had spread its roots so deeply that no other political party deemed it possible to remove it. The strength that was displayed by these inexperienced students to make it possible, I think, is the inherent strength of Bangladesh.

In every country, whenever an autocracy falls, severe uncertainty follows. This is because they ruin the state institutions and the democratic system. Then different groups emerge and try to fulfil their own agendas. We witnessed this on August 5 as well. When we learnt at around 2pm that Sheikh Hasina was leaving, the leaders of Students against Discrimination could not be found for a few hours. This created a situation of vandalism, looting, and communal violence, which continued well into the night. There was no leadership, no direction. The military assumed authority, but it didn't seem like they had any preparation to deal with a situation like this. As a result, we witnessed events that marred this victory.

The presence of the leaders of Students against Discrimination, who later that night called for stopping the violence, destruction, and communal violence, is very important. The Bangladesh that we dream of is where our state institutions function properly, a democratic system is in place, and everyone plays their roles responsibly. Ensuring this is critical.

During the 90s, we know that the three coalitions each had an outline, none of which was realised. Jamaat-e-Islami was also in the movement with Awami League and BNP, after which it became a partner of BNP. We now know how many actions took place against our national interest. In 1991, under Prof Rehman Sobhan, a task force was created in which a lot of influential thinkers participated and planned how the future of Bangladesh would be. I had written a book in Bangla with a summary of it. None of this was paid heed to by the subsequent elected political parties. The path created by military dictator Ershad was followed by the same parties that brought him down. Neither the education and health goals nor the national interests were realised.

Whenever the people, whose power is needed and used to bring down an autocracy, are deprived of their power and rights, it leads to an accumulation of powers who work for their own benefits. This includes both national and international groups. We experienced this in the 1990s and should remember that now.

Now, the Students against Discrimination are a key stakeholder. Along with them, the Left Democratic Alliance, the teachers' network, journalists, lawyers, writers, artists, and singers all participated. I believe all of these groups need to play an active, united role now. Otherwise, our state will be occupied again. Now is the time to prevent that occupation.

Already signs of occupation are visible. We were all surprised to see the meeting at Bangabhaban with the president, the current legal head of the nation, where there were no representatives from the Students against Discrimination. Instead, political parties who had nothing to do with the movement, and already have accusations of wrongdoing, participated in the first crucial meeting. It was said that meetings would be held with the political parties, but the Left Democratic Alliance, which has always been active in this movement, has not been called to these meetings. I believe these deviations are a reason behind the unwanted events that occurred across the country.

There were three kinds of attackers. The first were those who have suffered over the past decade and more. They have been outraged for a long time. The state should have given them hope that those who had done them wrong would be brought to justice. The second kind were opportunity seekers. They look for any opportunities to loot and gain monetary benefits. We see them even when there is a road accident. Some people go forward to help any victims, and there are some who go to steal. The third were communal attackers who committed heinous crimes on vulnerable communities that sent a wrong message to everyone about the movement, those who participated in the movement, and about Bangladesh as a whole to the international community.

The student leaders have spoken out against it. We, from the Bangladesh University Teachers' Network stood up, and later on, some political parties also sent positive messages. I am assuming that no further events that can stigmatise this movement will take place anymore.

The prime minister has resigned, the ministers' cabinet has been dissolved. The president has dissolved the parliament. He will now give another election. According to the constitution, he is the main person, the last resort. To support him in doing this, for the time being, he can form a government. The constitution does not have any restriction against that. This interim government is very important for changing the future of Bangladesh. The main duty of this interim government is to hold the election. But there are some requirements that need to be fulfilled before that, which are reforming our state institutions. Our government agencies are flooded with corruption. Even the court is now dysfunctional.

The constitution itself needs reform. It has become autocratic, power-centralised, and communal. Anyone who comes to power with this constitution will turn into an autocratic government. So, to reform the constitution, a national consensus needs to be created. Then there are the megaprojects and mega-development trends in the financial sector. It is a centre of mass corruption. Our rivers, water bodies, forests, and hills are occupied. In the name of development, there were many projects such as Rampal and Rooppur power plants that are just bad for us and our future. Wealth has been centralised. A small segment of the population has accumulated a massive amount of wealth. All of this should be investigated. At the very least, the pathway must be created to change the trend of all our economy, resources, and political power going into the hands of a few. We cannot go back to the same place we just came from. We cannot allow a repeat of all of this considering the hundreds of students and innocent people who have given their lives to get us this opportunity now. So reforming the state institutions, the constitution, and the policies needs to be done.

But I do believe that the aspiration that was behind this movement cannot be fulfilled without the active participation of Students against Discrimination and everyone who stood beside them. If the ordinary citizens stop their own active participation, thinking that some people are going to go forward and develop and reform the country, that will be a mistake. This thought has doomed us in the past. Awami League, BNP, Jatiya Party—everyone has shown that when in power, they completely forget the people's interests. So we have to be alert to ensure it ourselves.

Those who want to gain personal benefits and want wealth centralisation actually want an autocratic government in Bangladesh. It becomes easier for them to deal with this government for the sake of their own financial gains. This type of government benefits some foreign parties too. We know India has multiple projects in Bangladesh that are harmful to us, such as Rampal and some projects by Adani. Russia has given us loans for Rooppur. We cannot even properly fathom what kind of catastrophe we are heading towards because of this. The US has multiple contracts about oil that don't go in our favour. China's big contracts with Bangladesh lack clarity. So, for these national and international groups, it is better if there is no democratic system in place in the country. No matter how much these countries preach about democracy, when it comes to other nations, they will always prioritise their own financial benefits over democracy.

Among the powerful stakeholders in the Bangladesh government, we find brokers for China, the US, India, and Russia.We just don't see a person truly representing Bangladesh's interests. Now is the time to truly find people who will negotiate with all these parties with Bangladesh's interests in mind over everything else. We have to work towards this and ensure it ourselves. These are long-term objectives. For the interim government, the first thing to ensure is the security of the nation's citizens, especially all the minorities including Hindus, the Indigenous groups, and even the Muslim minorities such as Ahmadiyyas.

No one should come under attack because of their identity either. Just because someone is a police member, does not mean that attacking them is justified. It doesn't mean they are a wrongdoer. Just because someone is a member of the Awami League doesn't mean they are a bad person. Those who have committed crimes, of course, need to be brought to justice. The police who have shot at the students, of course, need to be tried in court. But based on the identity of the police or Awami League, they cannot be attacked outside of the law. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's statue or his museum should not have been vandalised. This was not the goal of the movement. The goal was to remove the autocracy and the torture of a corrupt system. It is the responsibility of us all to ensure the movement isn't tarnished by actions like these.

This is a big responsibility on the shoulders of the students. The 2018 Road Safety Movement by students of schools and colleges was an amazingly joyous event for us to witness. The disciplined manner in which the students conducted the movement and the courage that they showed us then truly gave us faith in them. They have grown up since then, and a lot of them are now here in this movement. A lot of the seniors that we had before had perhaps given up, sold themselves, turned into fossils, let go of themselves. It is now the rest of us seniors' duty that this youth doesn't lose track. We should guide them with whatever resources we have and the organisations that are in place to support them. We should stand beside them to make sure that the blood that has been shed by the youth, and the friends that they saw die beside them, is not wasted by destroying the opportunity they have created by sacrificing so much.

In every country, whenever an autocracy falls, severe uncertainty follows. This is because they ruin the state institutions and the democratic system. Then different groups emerge and try to fulfil their own agendas. We witnessed this on August 5 as well. When we learnt at around 2pm that Sheikh Hasina was leaving, the leaders of Students against Discrimination could not be found for a few hours. This created a situation of vandalism, looting, and communal violence, which continued well into the night. There was no leadership, no direction.

How to get out of the constitutional gridlock teaches law at the University of Dhaka and is in charge of Law Desk at The Daily Star.

Psymhe Wadud

PSYMHE WADUD

Bangladesh witnessed arguably the largest student movement since its independence and as an outcome, the government led by the former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina is no more in power. However, in the face of what we can term as "lack of objectively suitable conditions for dialogue," the transition is not going to be plain sailing. The lack of forethought for a smooth transition has also brought forth further violence, mayhem, and terror. Indeed, the process of transitioning into a new order is hanging in the balance. The interim government is expected to hold general elections for a smooth democratic transition. There is also this "academic" debate going on, on having a constitution-making or constitution-amendment episode—I seek to address both.

One of the motivations behind the discussion on a new constitution-making episode is the fact that the "interim" government will have to operate beyond the constitutional scheme since the current one does not endorse an interim or caretaker government. Indeed, an interim government will have to be seen as a revolutionary breach of legal continuity. However, installing an interim government will potentially be a difficult, if not impossible, academic and judicial exercise. In any case, in order to come out of the gridlock, I do not see a new constitution-making episode as a solution, particularly because, among others, there was no such demand emanating from the movement to begin with. With the parliament now dissolved, there is no possibility of forming an interim government with members of the parliament either, as was suggested by some scholars.

Social movements are now a growing area of study within the paradigm of constitutional law. Particularly, in studying constitutionalism in Asia, social movements are relevant more than ever. Such movements often frame their strategies based on the texts of the constitution or to address the disharmony between the constitution and the lived realities of citizens at large (the Indian movement against 2019 Citizenship Amendment Act and the 2004 South Korean sex workers' movement are illustrative here). At times, social movements call for instating or redefining new structures or institutions within the constitution (the 1993 Indian movement for recognition of local self-government is an example). At other times, movements call for new and different interpretations of the texts of the constitution; differently again, certain movements call for revision or annulment of constitutions as well.

Ours was not a movement that explicitly relied on the texts of the Constitution of Bangladesh, although it did touch upon equality clauses. The hasty (judicial and executive) outcome of the movement has not really been a reflection of substantive equality (as it gravely fell short on protecting rights of women, Indigenous minorities, persons with disabilities, and gender-diverse populations). However, the initial demands did not call for something that goes or operates beyond the constitutional scheme. Later claims were political in nature (including the last one calling for the resignation of the then incumbent prime minister); however, those too did not call for remaking the constitution or challenging its basis.

It is reductionist to try to underscore an "essentialised" or "one true" purpose underlying social movements. Just as social movements are discursive bottom-up instances of mobilising, so are the purposes for social movement actors' engagement. However, at least the demands that surfaced were not ones that disregarded the constitutional framework. The movement certainly made certain "academic" discussion points to come to the front (including constitutional provisions to ensure firmer checks and balances among different institutions and limiting prime-ministerial/political term limits). These may in the longer run prove to be immensely useful to prevent perpetuation of power; however, whether they require a new constitution-making episode is an important question to ask.

Indeed, bringing in a new constitutional framework for a society divided along multiple axes (including religion, ethnicity, sex, and gender) requires time, labour, and massive efforts. In the current world order, wider public involvement is also deemed key to a legitimate constitution-making effort which can prove to be immensely cumbersome in the present context in Bangladesh. Also, in the shifting geopolitical reality, it may also prove to be difficult to withstand the pressure of interested international actors. Any haste would only prove to be counterintuitive in the longer run, particularly for failing to adequately address and accommodate concerns and needs of the non-dominant voices and minority communities.

The interim government may decide to go for substantive constitutional amendments for a smoother transition into and functioning of democracy. However, in such cases, there will be legitimate constitutional questions as to how an unelected "interim government" can exercise "derivative constituent power" and go on to amend the constitution. To stretch the revolutionary breach of legal continuity to such a point may also fail to withstand the constitutional test of time. Therefore, it would ideally be wiser to leave the task of amending the constitution to the next government. Alternatively, the interim government may formulate certain principles to potentially guide the constitution amendment episode by the next parliament.

In any case, for an inclusive society, I would want a steadfast commitment to secularism and as a feminist, commitment to equal rights between men and women in all spheres of life—instead of "in all spheres of state and public life" as appears in Article 28(2) that (unknowingly perhaps) calls for a rather conservative interpretation of women's right. However, for these changes in particular, amends need to be brought to the entrenchment of the basic structure doctrine (i.e., unamendability of certain provisions and parts of the constitution)—the process of doing so is the subject of a different constitutional discourse altogether.

We also need to be mindful to one of the core demands of the movement: of bringing an end to the culture of impunity and expediting the adjudicating processes for the brutal killings committed over the quota reform movement. Any attempt to bring in a new constitution would inevitably delay the process of serving justice to all those who were killed and tortured—both at the hands of the state apparatus and at the hands of other political elements at play.

Polities need to have certain non-negotiable ideals and values to stand by—the overwhelming deaths, including of children, over the quota reform movement, made me realise this the hardest way. Experiencing two nights without a government with news of condemnable brutality against police personnel, vandalisation of Hindu minority houses, and arson violence on Bangabandhu's historic Dhanmondi 32 residence, made me internalise it. My major scholarships have so far only critiqued our constitution. Nonetheless, the constitution we have does seem like a document that we should stand by firmly. Let's not lose out on the "constitutional moment" we had in 1971; because indeed, creating one is not as easy as we may theoretically assume. Also, a constitution can only do so much—we need a system that works.

INTERNATIONAL DAY OF THE WORLD'S INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Will the interim government be truly anti-discriminatory?

Muktasree Chakma

MUKTASREE CHAKMA

The state reform that is being undertaken now needs to ensure recognition of Indigenous populations. The Indigenous populations have been involved in liberation struggles from long before, whether it was the Liberation War of 1971 or the fight against the British or even before the British empire came into existence. They were also a part of the movement against authoritarianism. For ages, Indigenous populations and their contributions have been invisibilised. We do not want to go through such invisibilisation again. We want to be recognised by our identity and for our achievements.

At this critical juncture of this country, we need to ask if the 2024 protests are truly respectful of differences and anti-discriminatory, or if this is turning into a majoritarian movement. In 2018, we saw that with the abolishment of the quota system, the quota for Indigenous populations was wholly cancelled as well by the former prime minister. Then, in 2024, we saw that the 5 percent quota reserved for ethnic minorities was reduced to 1 percent by the court.

In addition, another matter worrying the Indigenous people is the upsurge of violence directed towards minorities since the resignation of the former prime minister. We urge the student movement to be cognisant of the insecurity facing minorities in the country and provide support.

One of the convenors, Asif Mahmud, used the words "khudro nigoshti" when describing indigenous communities. We expect our convenors to understand the politics behind words such as prantik jonogoshti, upojati, tribal, and other such terms to describe ethnic minorities, and we expect them to realise that the use of such terms is not befitting of any group that claims to be anti-discriminatory.

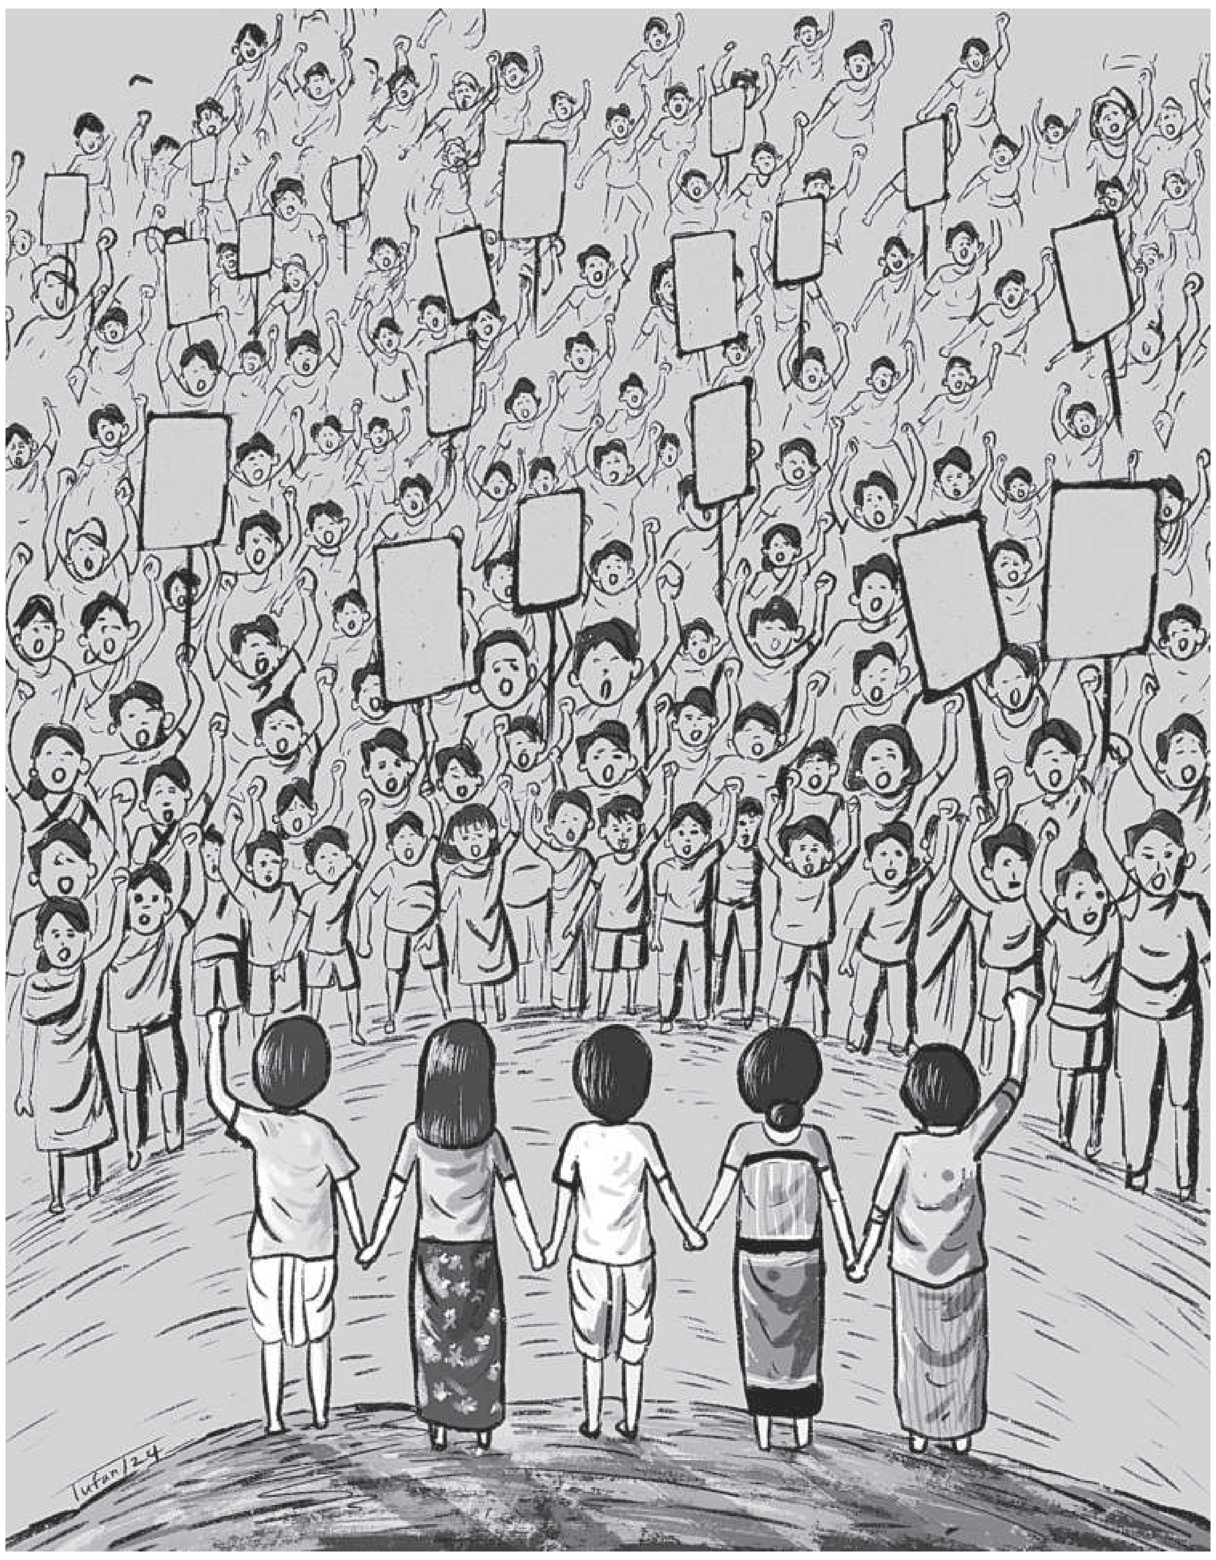
Another grievance among ethnic minorities has been the fragmentation in our regional parties since August 5. As many may know, in Chittagong's JSS (Jana Samhati Samiti)-backed Hill Women's Federation, two women have been kidnapped allegedly in the presence of the army. We can thus see that at each point, the repercussions of student politics deserves our attention. We need to ensure that this does not devolve into a majoritarian movement that is not inclusive in reality. Student politics is clearly showing us the direction of state reform, and when discussing state reform, we need to ensure that all groups are represented regardless of their positionalities. Under no circumstances can this be a state for one ethnicity, one language, and one religion.

We expect that those who form the interim government will respect difference–be it of gender, religion, ethnicity, or language. I also hope that instead of being swayed by popularity, the interim government acknowledges and appoints the people who have actually worked for different communities and brings their concerns forward. There are many different lists currently making rounds on social media. Some of those people have played a significant role in militarisation of hill districts. Moreover, there are also people in those lists who have attempted to enforce Bengalisation. We do not want such people. In my view, people who cannot value differences should not be in the interim government.

Another matter that I believe requires emphasis is freedom of speech. In the myriad mediums for expressing our thoughts, whether on social media, a conference, or any form of gatherings, we would often engage in self-censorship. I expect the interim government to give us the space to speak, show our stories and share about our lives, livelihoods, and experiences, even if we are in disagreement.

We saw a massive corrosion of freedom of speech under the past regime. Under no circumstances do we want this from the interim government. At the very least, give us the platform to speak. It is not necessary for us to always be in agreement, nor do we accept the interim government or any government to always accept our demands. We do not want any erosion in the opportunities for speaking. We have seen that it was not only the government restricting freedom of speech, but also workplaces that required employees to not post on social media regarding certain matters. We do not want such monitoring and surveillance, and we wish for the interim government to take steps to ensure this.

Lastly, I want the interim government to be inclusive, so that each group has representation, whether it is women or the students, the disabled community, or the Indigenous populations.



The importance of giving Indigenous people a platform cannot be understated.

Jayawickrama charged over match-fixing approach

REUTERS

Sri Lanka spinner Praveen Jayawickrama has been charged with three counts of anti-corruption code breaches for failing to report an approach to fix matches and obstructing an investigation, the International Cricket Council (ICC) said on Thursday.

Jayawickrama, 25, was approached to fix international matches and was asked to approach another player to fix matches in the 2021 season of the Lanka Premier League.

"Reportedly, the Sri Lanka bowler was found to have deleted messages related to the approach for conducting corrupt practices," the ICC said in a statement. "Jayawickrama has 14 days from 6 August 2024 to respond to the charges."

Sri Lanka Cricket and the ICC have agreed that the ICC will take action concerning the charges.

Jaywawickrama made his international debut in April 2021, taking 11 wickets in his first test against Bangladesh. He has not played for Sri Lanka since June 2022.

Tigers hopeful of beginning practice from tomorrow

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh national cricket team's official practice session was deferred to Saturday, a Bangladesh Cricket Board official told The Daily Star yesterday.

The training camp was initially scheduled to begin yesterday but that did not stop a few of the players from turning up for individual sessions. Test skipper Najmul Hossain Shanto was amongst the few who trained alongside members of the Bangladesh 'A' team.

"We will take a break on Friday and hope to begin practice on Saturday. There were no security concerns. The national team stars and A team players for the second four-dayer practised together today [Thursday]," a BCB official told The Daily Star.

The national team's panel of foreign coaches, including head coach Chandika Hathurusingha, did not attend the session as BCB exercised caution before beginning the official training camp.

While the national team's foreign coaches were unavailable, Richard Stonier, Bangladesh U-19s' strength and conditioning coach, oversaw the players' training session at Mirpur's Academy Ground.

Several embassies had advised their nationals to limit their movement due to the current unrest in the country following Sheikh Hasina's resignation as prime minister.

Bangladesh 'A' vow to keep focus on cricket

SPORTS REPORTER

As the country deals with the aftermath of the fall of the Awami League government, the Bangladesh 'A' team have the difficult task of blocking out all outside noise and focus on their upcoming tour of Pakistan.

"Our job is to play cricket. The players, the coaching staff are all professionals. We are more focused on our matches than anything else," Bangladesh 'A' coach Mizanur Rahman Babul told reporters in Mirpur on Thursday.

The first batch of Bangladesh 'A' team contingent, which consists 15 cricketers and nine support staff, will leave Dhaka today to play two four-day and three one-day matches against Pakistan A, scheduled to be held at the Islamabad Club.

They were initially scheduled to travel to Islamabad on August 6 but after Sheikh Hasina resigned as prime minister on August 5 in the face of widespread protests, their travel plan as well as the fixtures had to be deferred.

According to the revised schedule, the first four-day game will begin on August 13 and the second one on August 20. The red-ball matches will be followed by three one-dayers on August 26, 28 and 30 respectively.

Players like Mushfiqur Rahim, Mominul Haque and Mahmudul Hasan Joy, who are expected to feature in Bangladesh's upcoming two-Test series against Pakistan later this month, will also accompany the team as they will feature in the opening four-day match.

The remaining members of the second four-day squad and one-day side will travel to Pakistan next week.

Although Bangladesh 'A' team's last phase of preparation was hampered quite a bit by the unrest, Babul claimed that they are well-prepared for the tour.

"We were waiting for a tour like this for a long time. We were in Chattogram for a long time, preparing for this 'A' team tour. We practiced there and played two practice matches.

"I don't think the current situation will affect us too much. Everyone is ready for these matches. Everyone is eager for it, the players were always asking when they will leave for the tour, the BCB has always said that the tour will happen. So, we are ready for the tour," Babul said.

Meanwhile, Anamul Haque Bijoy, who will lead Bangladesh 'A' in the four-day series, sees the team's tour as an opportunity for the national team players to prepare for their upcoming Test series against Pakistan.

"This tour will be followed by our national team's tour. I think the preparation will help the national team a lot. We know that the wickets in Pakistan mainly help the batters. Both teams get equal opportunity. Bangladesh are going to play Tests after a long time. I hope we will achieve fruitful results from the series," he concluded.

Sacked for helping protestors, Bithi gets reinstated

Former cricketer and coach, Arifa Jahan Bithi, confirmed that she has been reinstated as the manager of the women's cricket team in the Rangpur division. Bithi was dismissed from her position after helping the students in their anti-government movement that led to the fall of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, who fled the country after resigning on August 5. "Alhamdulillah, I have been given back my post as the manager of Rangpur divisional women's cricket team with dignity," Bithi confirmed through a Facebook post on Wednesday.

Messi to miss fifth consecutive match for Miami

Lionel Messi will miss a fifth consecutive match for Inter Miami on Thursday when the defending champions host Toronto in a Leagues Cup knockout-round opener. The 37-year-old striker suffered a right-ankle injury in Argentina's victory over Colombia in last month's Copa America final. Rafael Nadal to skip US Open Rafael Nadal has decided not to participate in the US Open due to concerns about his fitness, the Spaniard said on Wednesday while adding his next event will be the Laver Cup in late September.

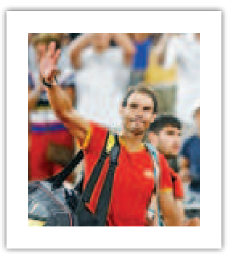
For Nadal, who won the most recent of his four US Open titles in 2019, this marks the second consecutive year he has sat out the year's final Grand Slam.



"Writing today to let you guys know that I have decided not to compete at this year's US Open, a place where I have amazing memories," the 38-year-old said in a post on X.

"I will miss those electric and special night sessions in NYC at Ashe, but I don't think I would be able to give my 100% this time."

Nadal added that his next event will be the Sept. 20-22 Laver Cup in Berlin.

The 22-times Grand Slam winner competed at the Paris Olympics where he lost to eventual champion Novak Djokovic in the second round of the singles competition and reached the quarterfinals of the doubles with Carlos Alcaraz.

"Rafa is a tremendous champion and he will be missed during the 2024 US Open by the fans and all those associated with the tournament," US Open Tournament Director Stacey Allaster said in a statement.

"We wish him all the best and look forward to having him back at the USTA Billie Jean King National Tennis Center."

The 38-year-old former world number one has fallen to 159th in the rankings after struggling for two years with injuries and against Djokovic at the Olympics, suffered one of his worst losses.

Sabina, Maria excited for WCL journey

SPORTS REPORTER

Having completed the official formalities with Royal Thimphu College (RTC) FC of Bhutan, four of the country's top female footballers are poised to make history in the inaugural AFC Women's Champions League (WCL).

More Bangladeshi female footballers could have participated if local clubs had entered the competition, but Sabina Khatun, Maria Manda, Monika Chakma, and Ritu Porna Chakma earned an unexpected chance to play due to their strong performances in recent FIFA friendlies against hosts Bhutan.

Ahead of their scheduled departure on August 12, Bangladesh captain Sabina and her deputy Maria expressed their excitement about participating in the AFC WCL, vowing to give their best for RTC FC.

"Firstly, I want to thank the RTC team for giving us the opportunity to play in the AFC Women's Champions League," Sabina told The Daily Star yesterday. "It's a great moment for us to be part of such a prestigious tournament. We will do our best for them," she added.

For Maria, get the chance to play in this tournament has been "a significant achievement" in her career after making the cut in the national side.

"For Monica, Ritu, and me, this is our first time going abroad to play for a club. It's an amazing feeling to get such an opportunity outside the country.

"I had hoped to play abroad, and some of us once received offers from Indian teams, but we couldn't make it happen due to international commitments," said the midfield orchestrator.

In the preliminary stage of the competition, RTC FC will play their Group D opener against Bam Khatoon of Iran on August 25 before taking on Kitchee SC of Hong Kong on August 28 in Thimphu.

Maria is expected to pair with Monica at the heart of the midfield, replicating the chemistry they've developed while playing for the national team over different age levels.

"We definitely have a good understanding, but RTC will decide who plays where. Both of us will try our best to be in the starting eleven and put on a good show for RTC," said Maria.

Initially, Bangladesh's football authorities were reluctant to release the four players for RTC, preferring they focus on preparations for the upcoming SAFF Women's Championship in October. However, they eventually agreed, allowing their key players to gain valuable experience ahead of the regional women's football extravaganza.

In light of SAFF Championship preparations, Sabina said, "Only four of us will play in the Champions League, but we have to think about the whole Bangladesh team. I think we should play at least three or four practice matches ahead of the SAFF Women's Championship."

Real Madrid's most sought-after player in recent times, Kylian Mbappe joined Los Blancos' training session for the first time on Wednesday since being presented as the club's new number nine at the Santiago Bernabeu in mid-July. It was the reigning La Liga and Champions League winners' second training session of the pre-season, in which, according to the club's statement, the full squad had reported to training with the return of the players who had taken part in Euro 2024 this summer.

Rouwendaal dedicates gold to her pet dog Rio

AFP, Paris

Sharon van Rouwendaal of the Netherlands made a late surge to win gold in the women's 10k marathon swimming at the Paris Olympics on Thursday.

Van Rouwendaal won with a time of 2hr 03min 34.2sec, with Australian Moesha Johnson taking silver 5.5 seconds behind and Italy's Ginevra Taddeucci claiming bronze.

The race took place on the River Seine with the Eiffel Tower in the background after water pollution levels were deemed sufficiently safe for competition.

It was the third straight Olympic medal in the event for Van Rouwendaal, the gold medallist in Rio in 2016 and silver medallist in Tokyo, who made her move past Johnson around a pilon coming under the Pont des Invalides bridge.

The 30-year-old Dutchwoman, who was also world champion in Budapest in 2022, never looked back as she powered her way to the finish.

Van Rouwendaal said her victory was dedicated to the memory of her pet dog Rio, who died in May.

"Swimming is my everything, but so was he. When there were complications in May, he died shortly afterwards. Then my world stood still and I wanted to swim for him one more time," she said.

"My father said: swim one more time and do it for him. And that's what I did," she added.

It was a crushing blow for Johnson who had led from the half-way mark onwards and was out front with the top three having broken well clear of the field going into the final lap.

But the Australian said she had no regrets about her approach to the final stages when victory slipped from her grasp.

Formidable Spain aim to deny France

AFP, PARIS

Thierry Henry's France are hoping a home crowd at the Parc des Princes can drive them on to win Olympic men's football gold but an impressive Spain side will attempt to deny them in Friday's final.

Henry, a France legend as a player, has led his country to the brink of their second football gold medal, 40 years after they won the title in Los Angeles.

That victory over Brazil came just a few weeks after the full French national team lifted their first major trophy by beating Spain on home soil in the final of Euro 84.

Just like then, the nations will meet at a packed Parc des Princes on Friday when a hostile home support will try to spur France on to victory.

They have already effectively fulfilled their objective by being guaranteed a medal, with Henry succeeding in moulding together a cohesive team after initially being met by a series of rejections from clubs unwilling to release their players.

They won all three group games without conceding a goal, before seeing off Argentina 1-0 in a fiery quarter-final and then showing great character to come from behind and beat Egypt 3-1 after extra time in the last four.

This may be the Paris Games, but so far Henry's team have played all their matches elsewhere around the country, in Marseille, Nice, Bordeaux and Lyon.

Spain, meanwhile, began their campaign with a 2-1 win over Uzbekistan in Paris. After easing past Japan in Lyon in the last eight, they had to come from behind to beat Morocco 2-1 in their semi-final in Marseille.

That victory in front of a hostile crowd, achieved thanks to goals by the outstanding Barcelona midfielder Fermin Lopez and the substitute Juanlu Sanchez, will give Spain confidence that they can handle the crowd and the pressure in the French capital.

Coached by the former Atletico Madrid defender Santi Denia, Spain are aiming for a second men's football gold after triumphing in Barcelona in 1992 with a squad including Pep Guardiola and Luis Enrique.

They were silver medallists in Tokyo three years ago, but Spain's record more recently across the board in international football is remarkable.

As only a handful of policemen returned to work, the chiefs of police and Rab yesterday met the chiefs of three services and discussed making all police stations operational within 24 hours with the help of army personnel.

Despite a call by newly appointed inspector general of police to join work, only a small number of police personnel reported to duty yesterday. Many were waiting for security assurances before returning to their posts.

Yesterday's meeting decided to take strict measures to stop anarchy, arson, and destructive activities across the country, according to the ISPR.

Never before students became interim government members

History was made yesterday when two university students in their mid-20s were sworn in as the youngest ever advisers to an interim government.

Nahid Islam and Asif Mahmud Shojib Bhuyain, both aged 26, are students of Dhaka University. They are also involved in student politics.

The two brave young men along with a few other determined students led the quota reform protests since July 1. The protests soon spread across the country and eventually turned into a mass upsurge. It forced Sheikh Hasina to resign as prime minister and flee the country on August 5.

However, continuing the movement was an uphill task for them as they had to endure torture after being picked up by law enforcers last month.

Nahid and Asif along with four other protest organisers were taken into custody by the Detective Branch of Dhaka Metropolitan Police. They started a hunger strike at

Students' reps to work with ministries

Decides first meeting of advisers

BAHARAM KHAN

The interim government led by Prof Muhammad Yunus plans to engage more student representatives to assist the advisers and make efforts to immediately improve the law and order situation.

The students are likely to be appointed as "assistant advisers" or something similar, officials said, adding that the details of their involvement in the government would be finalised later.

"The student representatives of the movement will be involved with the advisers in carrying out ministry duties," Syeda Rizwana Hasan told reporters after an unscheduled meeting of the advisory council yesterday, the first day of the government.

"Everyone wants reforms to the system. But people from all walks of life must be consulted before doing that. We will discuss the matter with representatives from all professions, including journalism," said the adviser to the environment, forest and climate change ministry.

The meeting was held in the afternoon at Chief Adviser Prof Yunus' current residence, the state guest house Jamuna in the capital. Earlier in the day, the cabinet division distributed portfolios among the chief adviser and advisers.

Nahid Islam, who was given the charge of telecommunications ministry, said, "The decision to engage more students has been made so that the students can give input and know what the ministries are doing.

"The students have a voice now and they are advocating for state reform. We believe the general public will continue to have faith in young leaders."

The 26-year-old Dhaka University student said the student protests culminated in a mass uprising, resulting

Police back to stations partially

STAR REPORT

A total of 361 out of 639 police stations in the country partially resumed operations yesterday after a three-day halt, thanks to the assistance of the armed forces and Border Guard Bangladesh.

General diaries were filed and some internal works were completed at the police stations. However, police did not start patrolling and managing traffic as of yesterday.

The police stations that were vandalised and set on fire during the recent violence across the country have not yet reopened.

Yesterday, many cops were concerned about further violent retaliation from the civilians for opening fire on the protesters under Sheikh Hasina's regime. The Awami League government was toppled on August 5 through a mass uprising, leading to then prime minister Hasina fleeing the country.

No doubt elections will be fair: Khasru

Terming the fall of the Sheikh-Hasina-led government a "second independence", BNP's Standing Committee Member Amir Khasru Mahmud Chowdhury yesterday said that there is no doubt that the next election will be free and fair.

"We've achieved independence for the second time with strong support from the people and the international community, especially the United Nations," Khasru told reporters after a meeting with UN Resident Coordinator Gwyn Lewis at the BNP Chairperson's office in the capital's Gulshan.

After the meeting, Gwyn Lewis told reporters, "The United Nations will continue to assist in the development of Bangladesh under this new interim government until the next election."

She also emphasised investigating all incidents in the last few weeks to understand what happened.

Army deployed in 58 dists

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The Bangladesh Army has been deployed in 58 districts and set up 206 camps across the country to provide overall security to lives, properties, and important government installations.

Two teams of law enforcement agencies, led by the army, intercepted escaped prisoners from Jamalpur Central Jail and Chattogram Central Jail on Thursday and yesterday and recovered looted arms and ammunition kept in the jails, said a press release issued by Inter-Services Public Relations (ISPR) yesterday.

In addition to preventing multiple incidents of vandalism and looting in different areas of the country, the army thwarted an attack by miscreants on a temple in the Noakhali district to ensure the safety of minorities, the release said.

Additionally, army personnel have been deployed to provide security in the camps of forcibly displaced Myanmar nationals located in Cox's Bazar and are conducting joint patrols with other law enforcement agencies, the release added.

The army has already been deployed in 417 police stations across the country, including 29 police stations in the capital, which will expedite the operation to recover the lost arms of the police, it stated.

22 killed as Israel launches fresh assault into Khan Younis

AGENCIES

Israeli troops yesterday launched a new assault into the southern Gaza city of Khan Younis, as American, Qatari and Egyptian mediators renewed their push for Israel and Hamas to reach a ceasefire deal.

IDF attacked some 30 sites after issuing new evacuation orders for exhausted residents who have already been displaced multiple times.

Thousands of Palestinians have begun fleeing areas in Khan Younis since Thursday, carrying essentials like small gas cylinders, mattresses, tents, backpacks and blankets.

Officials from Israel and the United States have said they believe Yahya Sinwar, Hamas' newly named top leader, could be hiding in tunnels under Khan Younis.

The military said yesterday its warplanes struck 30 Hamas targets in the city, including fighters and weapons storage sites. It said troops were searching for Hamas tunnels and other infrastructure while engaging in combat "above and below ground."

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office confirmed later on Thursday that it would send negotiators to talks that mediators have called for on August 15, to be held in either Qatar's capital of Doha or Egypt's capital of Cairo.

There was no immediate response from Hamas, which announced Tuesday that Sinwar, the group's leader in Gaza, would replace Haniyeh as the group's top leader.

More than 39,700 people have been killed and 91,722 wounded in Israel's offensive in Gaza. The toll includes 22 deaths in the past 48 hours, according to the Gaza health ministry figures.

Three newspapers halt publication following attacks

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Publication of three daily newspapers and a news portal, owned by Nayeemul Islam Khan, press secretary to former prime minister Sheikh Hasina, have been suspended for an indefinite period following vandalism at the offices on August 5.

The broadsheets and the portal are daily Amader Notun Shomoy, daily Amader Orthoneeti, daily Our Time and amadershomoy.com. Nayeemul is their emeritus editor.

Saleh Biplob, executive editor of Amader Notun Shomoy and coordinator of the three other organisations, yesterday announced the temporary closure."It is uncertain as to when these will reopen," he said.

The offices located at a building in Tejgaon were attacked and ransacked on August 5, hours after the resignation and departure of Sheikh Hasina.

Biplob said it was not possible to keep the organisations running because of the damage done to the equipment and financial constraints.

Nayeemul was appointed as the press secretary to Hasina on June 6.

Yunus, who was sworn in as the chief adviser of the interim government on Thursday.

The letter was unveiled at the Nasrul Hamid Auditorium of Dhaka Reporters Unity (DRU).

Nirmal Rosario, one of the three presidents of the unity council, said, the situation was deteriorating and urged the interim government's chief to resolve the crisis by giving it top priority and putting an end to the violence.

"We seek protection because our lives are in a disastrous state. We are staying up at night, guarding our homes and temples. I have never seen anything like this in my life. We demand that the government restore communal harmony in the country."

The open letter welcomed Yunus as the leader of a new era born from the unprecedented student- and public-led mass uprising aimed at establishing an equitable society and reform.

The organisations also offered condolences for the deaths and injuries that occurred during the uprising and demanded that the interim government ensure that the families of the victims receive the necessary support.

"When people's victory is advancing towards its destination, we, with sorrow and heavy hearts, observe that a vested quarter is hatching a conspiracy to tarnish this achievement by carrying out unprecedented violence against minority communities," the letter said.

The ongoing communal violence that started on August 5 has caused widespread fear, anxiety, and uncertainty among minorities in Bangladesh. This unrest has also resulted in international condemnation, the letter added.

"We demand an immediate end to this situation."

The letter said the organisations have tried to inform the president, army chief, protesting student leaders, and political party leaders about the situation, who have also called for an end to such violence.

"But it's a sad truth that the situation has deteriorated further in the last three days."

The letter was signed by Bangladesh Hindu Buddhist Christian Unity Council General Secretary Rana Dasgupta and Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishad President Basudev Dhar.

Kajal Devnath, a presidium member of the unity council, said, "One does not leave their home, temple, or Tulsi tree unless compelled. Many Hindu community members are now taking refuge in others' homes.

"I, too, am forced to stay at a friend's house," he said.

"Those involved in attacking minorities must be brought to justice. If a minority individual is attacked for political reasons, it is still unacceptable. Anyone who commits a crime should be judged, but burning homes and looting will not lead to justice," he added.

Replying to a question, Kajal said the exclusion of readings from other religious texts at the swearing-in ceremony of the interim government's advisory council members contradicts the spirit of the constitution, the Liberation War, and anti-discrimination values.

"We hope that in future state functions, readings from all major religious texts will be included," he added.

Another presidium member, Subrata Choudhury, said, "We've heard about ending attacks on minorities many times before, but we have not seen any effective measures.

"Our national heritage and assets are being destroyed, which is unacceptable."

The event was also attended by another president of the unity council, Professor Neem Chandra Bhowmik, and presidium member Ranjan Karmakar, among other members of the Puja Udjapan Parishad.

DEMOS IN THE CAPITAL

Meanwhile, hundreds of people staged demonstrations in the capital yesterday, demanding that all attacks on minority communities be stopped and the perpetrators be held accountable.

They also demanded that a ministry be formed to establish a minority protection commission and that 10 percent of parliamentary seats be reserved for minorities.

One of the demonstrations was held under the banner of "Conscious Sanatani Citizens of Bangladesh" in front of the Jatiya Press Club in the morning.

Later in the afternoon, several thousand people from another group of minority communities gathered at the Shahbagh intersection to demonstrate.

STUDENTS MEET HINDU LEADERS

A team from the Anti-Discrimination Student Movement visited Dhakeshwari Temple in the capital yesterday and met some leaders of minority groups.

"We spoke with the leaders of the Hindu community and heard their demands," Sarjis Alam, a coordinator of the student movement, said in a statement.

"It is our responsibility now to convey their demands to the interim government."

in the fall of an autocratic regime -- something the political parties failed to do.

At yesterday's meeting of the advisers, it was decided that cases filed against the student protesters and the politically motivated cases would be reviewed.

They also discussed holding trials in a transparent manner for the killings during the movement so that no such incident would recur in the future, Rizwana said.

"There was a long discussion on how to quickly improve the law and order situation. Everything may not be fixed overnight, but maximum effort is being made to this end," Rizwana said.

The home affairs adviser has been working to normalise the situation in consultation with the inspector general of police and other officials, she added.

Minority communities are still being attacked in some places. Religious groups and locals are being engaged to stop this.

"We all should stand by the police. A force cannot function with a broken morale. Our student representatives, advisers, and police will meet soon."

The chief adviser will bring the family members of the victims of violence during the mass uprising to Dhaka and talk to them.

"The government will assist the families bear the expenses for treatment of the injured," she said, requesting information on such victims.

Prof Yunus, Nahid and Asif will go to Rangpur's Pirganj upazila today to visit the family of Abu Sayed, who was killed in police firing during the quota reform protests on July 16.

She promised necessary measures to resume activities of the judiciary as soon as possible in consultation with senior judges and lawyers.

She said the government would discuss making legal amendments, including to the Cyber Security Act, so that such laws cannot be used to suppress dissent and freedom of expression.

She said educational institutions would be reopened as soon as the law and order situation reaches a satisfactory level.

Resuming the HSC exams will be considered after the reopening.

The meeting also discussed resuming financial activities, bringing changes to the top positions in the sector, and making sure businesses can function in full swing.

Asked about the interim government's tenure, she said they would first need to identify the kind of reforms to be made.

"This interim government will take as much time as it needs to prepare for the beginning of a democratic journey."

Talking about the challenges facing the government, Nahid said the students and the general public need to be united in order to rebuild and reshape Bangladesh.

"The system has largely collapsed. It can be rebuilt if the general people work alongside the administration. These challenges can be overcome quickly."

Earlier in the day, Prof Yunus and other advisers placed wreaths at the National Memorial in Savar and the Central Shaheed Minar.

Police back to stations partially

Police personnel did not show up for work since August 6 as the chain of command in the force broke down after cops were attacked by protesters and mobs during clashes.

Meanwhile, a meeting between senior police officials and the cops staging demonstrations to press home their 11-point demand ended abruptly at the capital's Rajarbagh Police Lines yesterday afternoon after a ruckus broke out.

During the meeting, police personnel expressed their anger and frustration as they put forward their demands, said sources.

The ruckus broke out when newly appointed Inspector General of Police Md Mainul Islam started speaking. At one stage, the IGP and senior officials left the meeting venue.

The protesting policemen said they would not resume work until their safety was ensured. They also called for reforms to the police force, including changing its name and uniform, and demanded the police high-ups apologise to the people for the previous mistakes.

Rab Director General AKM Shahidur Rahman and DMP Commissioner Mainul Hasan, among others, joined the meeting.

Brig Gen (retd) M Sakhawat Hussain, home affairs adviser to the interim government, was supposed to be present at the meeting. However, he could not join.

More than 400 people, including police personnel, were killed in violence centring the Anti-discrimination Student Movement. Videos showed that law enforcers shot unarmed people dead at close range.

The newly appointed inspector general of police on Wednesday asked all police personnel to return to their posts within 24 hours. This call was repeated by the armed forces on Thursday afternoon.

Yesterday morning, 29 out of the 50 police stations in the Dhaka metropolitan area resumed operations.

Visiting Kafrul Police Station around 3:00pm, this correspondent found army personnel were guarding the entrance. The officer-in-charge and several other policemen were present.

"We have started working on a limited scale. We will resume full operations soon. Many of our colleagues, who reside in nearby areas, will join work soon," said an officer.

Three GDs were filed at Tejgaon Police Station until 1:00pm after it resumed work yesterday morning in the presence of army personnel.

Tejgaon Police Station OC Mohammad Mohsin said, "We should remember that many of our colleagues are no longer with us. Now my heart is heavy. I have been serving the police department for 23 years. Just a few days ago, we were working together at this police station. But now they are no more."

He said the entire police family is traumatised.

"We work to meet the people's needs. However, on many occasions we cannot explain our failure to the people. We have rejoined work today to meet the needs of the people."

Mohsin urged the people to have faith in police. "We will not deny that the current situation is a result of our mistakes and failures. My colleagues and I will try to continue providing services so we can overcome this situation and our force can truly work for the people."

HM Azizul Haque, deputy commissioner (Tejgaon Division) of Dhaka Metropolitan Police, said three of the six police stations under Tejgaon Division were operating at full capacity. The stations that were attacked are working on a limited scale, he added.

Shahbagh Police Station OC Mustafizur Rahman said all their members have joined work. He said several GDs were filed yesterday.

Meanwhile, the Inter-Services Public Relation (ISPR) Directorate in a statement said army personnel have already been deployed to 417 police stations across the country, including 29 in the capital. This will expedite the operations for the recovery of the police's lost arms.

Operations of 21 police stations in the border areas under Rangpur and Khulna ranges resumed yesterday under the supervision of the Border Guard Bangladesh, according to a BGB press release.

Services in 14 of the 16 police stations under Chattogram Metropolitan Police resumed yesterday on a limited scale.

Five police stations in the CMP area were vandalised and set on fire by mobs on August 5.

Services of all police stations and the offices of the deputy commissioners under Rangpur Metropolitan Police resumed yesterday, reports our district correspondent.

In Dinajpur, 12 police stations resumed partial operations yesterday, said Dinajpur SP Shah Iftekher Ahmed. He said they were hopeful of starting the activities at full capacity in a couple of days.

Police stations in Bogura, Natore, Satkhira, Gaibandha, Sirajganj, Pabna, Gazipur, Nilphamari, and Kushtia have also resumed partial operations.

In Bandarban and Kushtia, a section of police personnel boycotted work to press home their 11-point demand, including not using police to implement political agenda, ensuring the security of cops and punishment for those who killed and wounded cops.

Policemen are gradually rejoining their workplaces. The photo was taken at Hatirjheel Police Station in the capital yesterday.

‘May peace come back to my golden land at any cost’

Says Rahul Ananda

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Even a week ago, the 140-year-old house in Dhanmondi, named “Bhangabari,” was surrounded by greenery and innocuous paraphernalia. There, you could hear birds sing at will.

Lanterns with wicks, hurricane lamps, old letterboxes, plants, and various artworks hung on the long veranda.

In another corner of the veranda of the single-story house, there were various artistic items made of brass and wood.

A dotara also hung there.

All of this is now history.

Rahul Ananda, the frontman of the popular folk band Joler Gaan, had been the tenant of this house for many years, which, until the morning of August 5, was a haven for his wife, son Tota, and his bandmates.

Rahul’s house was torched by mobs on the afternoon of August 5. Around three thousand musical instruments in his home were reduced to ashes.

Actor Farhana Hamid, who is also the business partner of Rahul Ananda’s wife Urmila Shukla’s “Khut”, posted regarding the incident yesterday. The post was also shared on Joler Gaan’s verified Facebook page.

According to her, “The fire was not set with the intent to harm Rahul Ananda’s home, nor was there any looting or vandalism directed at it. The fire was set at a location within the Dhanmondi 32 area, specifically targeting the Bangabandhu Museum and its future expansion plans.”

She also said, “The fire at Rahul da’s house had nothing to do with his religion, ethnicity, caste, or culture. Therefore, I urge everyone not to spread such rumours. In the

Some relief in kitchen markets

Aside from onion, prices of essentials drop due to supply increase

SHAHEEN MOLLAH and MD ABBAS

Prices of daily essentials, aside from onions, have started falling in the capital’s kitchen markets over the last three days due to an increase in supply.

The prices of rice, pulses, potatoes, oil, flour, and other goods that need to be imported remain unchanged.

However, consumers hope that the current government will break all the syndicates in this sector and bring the prices of all daily essentials to a tolerable level for low, middle, and fixed-income people.

Ifran Hossain, a private service holder, while speaking to this newspaper at Ibrahimpur Kitchen Market, said the main failure of the Sheikh Hasina-led government was that they could not control the prices of daily essentials.

“We expect that the current government will do everything, including waiving the taxes for imports of essential goods, to bring down the prices of daily essentials, considering the low, middle, and fixed-income people,” he said.

Additionally, prices for all types of vegetables, fish, chicken, and eggs have gone down in the capital’s kitchen markets.

This was the picture this newspaper saw when visiting the Shewrapara, Kazipara, Ibrahimpur, and Karwan Bazar kitchen markets yesterday.

Students transforming Bagerhat town

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Bagerhat

Like elsewhere in the country, students armed with shovels, sacks and brooms have taken to the streets to clean up key areas such as Market, Sadhana Mor, and the Bus Stand in Bagerhat town.

They have also taken up the role of traffic management in absence of police.

Over the past few days, their efforts have paid off, as the once cluttered and dirty areas have been transformed.

Gone are the heaps of trash that once littered the streets, and in their place is a cleaner, more organised environment. Local residents have taken notice, with many expressing their gratitude and admiration for the students' hard work.

Shahid Sheikh, a local, could hardly contain his amazement at the changes. "It feels like we are in a foreign country. The students are changing the face of our town," he remarked.

Hasib Sheikh, a rickshaw puller, echoed this sentiment, praising the students' conduct and dedication. "Their behaviour is exemplary. The country is safe in their hands," he said. However, he also voiced concerns about ongoing fears of robbery at night.

The students themselves are motivated by a deep sense of civic duty. One of the volunteers said, "We believe that by cleaning up our town and ensuring the safety of our community, we are contributing to a better future for everyone."

"We also patrol the streets at night to protect our community from robberies," said another student.

CCC restarts cleaning operation in port city

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Much to the relief of the residents, conservancy workers of Chattogram City Corporation have restarted waste removal activities in the port city following a four-day break on Thursday.

According to CCC sources, about 10,000 tonnes of garbage were accumulated in the city in four days between Sunday and Wednesday as CCC conservancy workers were unable to work.

CCC Chief Executive Officer Sheikh Muhammad Touhidul Islam supervised the activities at the field level by going to different wards along with CCC acting Chief Conservancy Officer Abul Hashem, said sources.

"We have not been able to work at full pace for the past few days, for which around 10,000 tonnes of garbage have accumulated in the city," said the CCC CEO.

"We are facing challenges in cleaning operations, as every ward office has been affected in one way or another," he said, adding, "The equipment used in cleaning activities are kept in the ward office and about half of those were vandalised and torched."

"A total of 12 ward councillors' offices were vandalised on Monday, while 12 CCC vehicles, including four from the conservancy department, were damaged," said Tauhidul.

"However, our manpower is intact. We are working with the equipment we have left. We expect to be able to clean the city within a few days," he added.

In a meeting with heads of various CCC departments, instructions were provided to ensure the presence and performance of CCC employees, said Tauhidul, adding that steps were being taken to speed up CCC's activities.

Meanwhile, residents in different areas of the city felt relieved as the cleaning operations restarted in the port city.

"The city corporation's workers have finally started cleaning activities after four days. It has brought massive relief to us, as we faced difficulties in walking through the roads with piled up garbage," said Tahmina Begum, a resident of Askar Dighir Par area.

Nazrul Islam, a resident of the city's Battery Goli area, also expressed satisfaction as the CCC conservancy workers started cleaning activities.

"We could not walk on the road, as malodour used to come from the garbage accumulated by the road. Now most of the garbage has been removed from the area," he added.

Meanwhile, CCC Mayor Rezaul Karim Chowdhury was not present at the office on Thursday as well.

He could not be contacted over the phone as his cellophane was found to be switched off.

Earlier, the CCC CEO said as there is no security provided by police at CCC, the mayor is not coming to office.

The city corporation's workers have finally started cleaning activities after four days. It has brought massive relief to us, as we faced difficulties in walking through the roads with piled up garbage.

Implement a roadmap for state reform

TIB urges interim govt

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Transparency International Bangladesh (TIB) yesterday called upon the interim government to develop and implement a strategic roadmap for state reform towards a "new Bangladesh".

This will enable to build a well-governed country that is distinguished by transparency, accountability, justice, and the protection of human rights, it said in a press statement.

TIB wished to give its full cooperation in this endeavour. It urged the public and students to serve as protectors of minorities, maintain communal harmony, and preserve the historical monuments and memories of the Liberation War.

TIB Executive Director Dr Iftekharuzzaman, said, "Fearless students and ordinary citizens have defeated the force that was unaccountable, blinded by the arrogance of power, and threatened the dream of a society based on human rights and non-discrimination through unprecedented sacrifice. A magnificent opportunity has emerged to reconstruct Bangladesh in the spirit of the Liberation War, and the new government is likely to take this chance."

He said it is imperative to quickly improve the law-and-order situation, which requires a thorough restructuring of police force's management and infrastructure for a more people-friendly force.

All state institutions were continuously used as tools for the misuse of power by the fallen government, the statement said. However, this does not justify the abhorrent acts of random killings and violence against law enforcement and government personnel, which have to end right now.

Dr Iftekharuzzaman said, "Despite the night vigils of students and the general public, attacks continue on the homes, businesses, and temples of minorities. Similarly, attacks are taking place on monuments and structures that symbolise the nation's hopes and inspirations. This is really inappropriate behaviour."

"Everyone must step up and fulfil their responsibility in ensuring that genuine criminals are prosecuted in accordance with the law."

awareness and put forward the demand to protect gas and other national resources.

He was at the forefront of the movement to protect the Sundarbans by raising voices against the construction of a coal power plant near the world's largest mangrove forest. He also led the movement against open-pit mining of coal at Phulbari in Dinajpur.

Several parties, including the Communist Party of Bangladesh (CPB) and Ganasamhati Andolon, expressed condolences over his demise.

"Bangladesh lost one of its best souls. The nation will remember him for his role in protecting national resources," said CPB.

"His contribution to the progressive movement in Bangladesh is enormous," it added.

In a Facebook post, Ganasamhati Andolon said, "We are deeply shocked. You (Shahidullah) will live in the people's struggle for freedom, emancipation, and protection of national wealth."

During the Liberation War, Shahidullah was arrested by the Pakistani military for supporting the nation's independence struggle, said Firoz Ahmed, a leader of Ganasamhati Andolon, in a Facebook post.

Shahidullah left four sons and three daughters.

Born in Khulna's Daulatpur, Shahidullah will be buried in the US, said his son Shamim.

Vegetables were being sold for at least Tk 10-40 less compared to last week.

Bitter gourd and long beans are now available at Tk 70-80 per kg, down from Tk 100-120 per kg. Pointed gourd, ladies' fingers, radish, snake gourd, and luffa are now being sold at Tk 30-50 per kg, compared to Tk 50-80 last week.

Each piece of gourd is being sold at Tk 50-60, down from Tk 80-100, and papaya is now available at Tk 30 per kg, down from Tk 50-70 per kg.

Meanwhile, the price of onions has increased by Tk 10 per kg.

Onions are now available at Tk 120-130 per kg, up from Tk 110-120.

Several traders attributed the good supply of products in the markets to the lifting of the curfew, which has brought about some stability in the country.

Additionally, the prices of all types of fish have decreased by Tk 20-200 per kg within one week.

Sukkur Ali, a fish trader at Karwan Bazar, said that the supply of fish was not adequate in the markets due to the imposition of a curfew and unrest in the country.

"As the curfew has been lifted and the situation is improving, the supply in the markets has increased. Most importantly, it is the season for some fish, especially hilsa, which has led to the decrease in prices," he said.

Furthermore, the prices of chicken and eggs have decreased by Tk 10-20 per kg within one week.

Broiler chicken is now being sold at Tk 170-180 per kg, down from Tk 180-200 per kg, while Sonali chicken is available at Tk 260-290 per kg, down from Tk 280-300 per kg.

A dozen eggs are now being sold at Tk 150-155, down from Tk 160-165.

political forces, including BNP, for all heinous crimes.

Fakhrul specifically pointed out that an identified quarter is exploiting social media platforms and news channels from a neighbouring country for this purpose.

He stated, "Places of worship and assets belonging to Hindu, Buddhist, and Christian communities have been deliberately targeted. Their current plan is to sow discord and incite communal riots. They are also determined to create divisions among all the victorious forces and the people."

He expressed hope that the interim government, the administration, and all citizens are vigilant regarding these issues.

"Our party, the BNP, is already taking every possible step to address the situation," Fakhrul said.

He also warned that strict organisational and legal action will be taken against anyone who engages in such malicious activities under the BNP's name.

"Sensing the gravity of the current situation, I want to alert all relevant local and foreign supporting forces, as well as the country's citizens, about this conspiracy being orchestrated by the deposed dictator and its allies," Fakhrul said.

He also urged the members of the minority communities to raise social awareness and resist this conspiracy from their respective positions.

The BNP leader also called upon the country's people, the interim government, the patriotic Armed Forces, as well as the administration, police, BGB, and Ansar forces to support the minority communities with an aim to build a democratic Bangladesh.

current situation in the country, any rumour can take on a dangerous form. Let's stay vigilant."

This incident left many cultural activists and people devastated.

"Rahul da and his family are shaken and have taken shelter in a secret place known to only a few," said Saiful Islam Jarnal, one of Joler Gaan's founding members, to The Daily Star on August 6. "It wasn't even his house; it was a rental he had been living in for decades."

Ziaur Rahman, the bassist of Shironamhin, wrote on Facebook, "Where do I hide this shame! An artist's home was attacked. Instruments that were created and nurtured over a long time were all looted. I saw many of these instruments being made right before my eyes. We will not forget this injustice."

Musician Arnob wrote, "I just can't accept it! We are truly sorry. Rahul, we stand with you."

In September last year, French President Emmanuel Macron visited Rahul's "Bhangabari", making the vintage house the talk of the town. It even made headlines in international media, crossing beyond the borders of Bangladesh.

Mentionable, following the state of lawlessness during a power vacuum triggered after Sheikh Hasina's fall, reports of attacks on minorities and cultural heritage started coming from various places across the country.

Contacted, Rahul told Prothom Alo on August 5 , "May yet peace come to my golden land, at any cost. If that cost is the ashes of my golden home or the burnt remains of my musical instruments, I have no regrets. I love Bengal and the people of Bengal; I sing in Bangla."

"I'm not in any state to speak. Almost three thousand musical instruments have been reduced to ashes. They were like my children. I was able to bring out one child alive. The rest have burned or been looted."

Former JU VC Prof Anwar attacked

According to the press release, Prof Anwar had been highly critical of the government's indiscriminate attacks on students, which led to the loss of hundreds of innocent lives. This stance had made him a target.

Describing the attack, Ayesha said, "On Monday afternoon, my son decided to go to Shahbagh, where students had gathered, to join his friends and colleagues. We decided to join him. My husband wanted to witness the unprecedented mass uprising of the students."

As they reached the airport, an unknown man, around 40 years old, approached Prof Anwar and began shouting, "I have recognised you. You're the professor who was against Jamaat [Jamaat-e-Islami] at the tribunal [International Crimes Tribunal]. We saw you on television."

The man attempted to drag Prof Anwar down a narrow lane opposite the airport, but family members intervened. Almost immediately, three or four more people surrounded them, shouting "Naraye Takbeer".

One of them threatened, "You spoke against Jamaat. We're going to slit your throat." They attacked him with various objects, shouting, "Hit him on his head. Kill him."

The attack continued for several minutes, during which Ayesha, her son, and her daughter-in-law shielded Prof Anwar with their bodies, sustaining injuries themselves.

Eventually, they managed to drag him across teh Airport Road towards an army barricade with the help of two civilians. He received emergency treatment after entering the airport premises.

Ayesha Hossain expressed concern over the lawlessness and anarchy engulfing Bangladesh in the absence of a stable government. She said vested interests, including far-right extremists, have taken advantage of the chaos to unleash indiscriminate, targeted attacks on religious minorities, individuals opposing religious extremism, and symbols of the Liberation War.

She also termed the destruction of murals commemorating freedom fighters, the statue of Themis at the Supreme Court, and Rabindranath Tagore, as well as the arson attack on Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman's residence at Dhanmondi 32, an ominous sign.

In the press release, she said, "We waited to release this statement until the formation of the interim government led by Nobel Laureate Professor Muhammad Yunus, with the hope that it shall now take immediate steps to protect my husband and my family from further attacks."

Ayesha also urged the government to ensure the safety, security, and human rights of all who have been attacked and remain at risk, saying "Too many people have sacrificed their lives in recent weeks. We demand justice for all."

Waste piles up across Khulna

Local households are also dumping waste in various KCC areas, which remain uncollected for days.

KCC reports that approximately 1,200 tonnes of waste are produced daily across 31 wards, with only 800 to 850 tonnes collected. The remaining waste stays on the streets.

Visits to spots including PTI mor, Nirala mor, Notun Bazar, and Boyra mor, this correspondent saw half of the main roads are piled with garbage.

Professor Anwarul Kadir, an educationist and civic leader, emphasised the necessity of consistent waste management services, regardless of political unrest, to prevent increasing suffering.

Md Anisur Rahman, Chief Conservancy Officer of KCC, said they are ready to resume work. "We are being attacked, but if given a chance, we will clear the waste immediately," he said.

Waste piles up across Khulna city

Waste piles up on a road in Khulna city.

Heaps of waste are piling up in various corners of Khulna city as the city corporation's conservation workers have stopped working following the power vacuum after Sheikh Hasina's fall.

Authorities said KCC trucks and vans have ceased operations due to vehicles being vandalised by agitators. Several vehicles have already been damaged while collecting garbage.

Meanwhile, a massive pile of garbage has made the KDA Avenue, stretching from Shibbari intersection to MM City College Junction, unbearable. At least four garbage spots were noted along the two-kilometer stretch. It is one of the busiest roads in Khulna and hosts over a dozen bank branches, commercial establishments, and Rasheda Memorial Hospital.

Locals and business owners, including Akbar Hossain, a mobile shop salesman, and Abul Fazal, a resident of ward-6, said they are suffering due to the stench.

Fazal said people are using alternative routes and keeping their windows closed due to the nuisance created from unattended wastes.

Rafiqul Islam, a KCC worker, said garbage from wards 19 and 20 is typically dumped at a designated point on KDA Avenue. However, due to political unrest, they have been unable to clear the waste.

Sheikh Shafiq Ahmed, a garbage van driver, said agitators have attacked and thrown bricks at garbage collectors, preventing them from performing their duties.

The situation is similar at 26 Secondary Transfer Station (STS) plants.

Stay vigilant against AL's blueprint for revenge

Says Fakhrul

UNB, Dhaka

BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday called upon everyone to remain vigilant as the autocratic Awami League, which was ousted in the face of a student-led movement, is now active with a blueprint of revenge.

In a statement, he said, "We have learned from various reliable sources that the deposed regime and its allies are active in the field with a blueprint to exact revenge on the interim government and the victorious students."

At the same time, Fakhrul said social media is being widely used to tactfully unfairly blame all the democratic

DHAKA-MAWA EXPRESSWAY

Madrasa students replace nameplate

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Munshiganj

A group of local madrasa students removed the nameplate of the "Father of the Nation Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujibur Rahman Expressway", commonly known as the Dhaka-Mawa Expressway, at the Dhaleshwari toll plaza in Munshiganj.

They replaced it with a banner reading "Father of the Nation Hazrat Ibrahim (AS) Expressway."

Eyewitnesses reported that the group broke the plaque on Thursday noon.

Maulana Obaidullah Kashemi, vice principal of Jamia Islamia Halimia Madhupur Madrasa and a Hefajat Islam leader, confirmed the act, saying they plan to rename another toll plaza in Bhanga.

Munshiganj Road and Highway Executive Engineer Dewan Abul Kashem Mohammad Nahin Reza said names of state infrastructures cannot be changed without a government gazette.

Toll collection has been halted since August 5, and the damaged toll plaza is expected to be repaired within four to five days if the law and order situation improves, he added.

Three Jubo Dal leaders expelled

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Lalmonirhat

Three Jubo Dal leaders from Lalmonirhat have been expelled from the party for violating party discipline.

The Lalmonirhat District Jubo Dal confirmed their expulsion in a notice yesterday.

They are Maidul Islam Abbas, joint convener of Aditmari Upazila Jubo Dal; Shah Alam Mandol, president of Panchagram Union Jubo Dal; and Saidul Islam, senior vice president of Panchagram Jubo Dal.

Lalmonirhat District Jubo Dal President Anisur Rahman Anis said swift action was taken due to their actions against party rules during the ongoing situation of the country.

BNP's Rangpur Divisional Organising Secretary and Lalmonirhat District BNP President, Asadul Habib Dulu, said the party is working to maintain peace in the region.

Protect human rights in Bangladesh: HRW

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Bangladesh's interim government, led by Nobel Laureate Muhammad Yunus, should urgently act to protect human rights, said Human Rights Watch on Thursday.

Soon after Hasina resigned and left, tens of thousands of Bangladeshis celebrated the end of her repressive rule. However, celebrations turned violent in some places, with hundreds killed or injured as demonstrators sought reprisals against those perceived to have supported Hasina's government, said Meenakshi Ganguly, deputy director of the New York-based global rights watchdog's Asia division.

"Rioters burned down historical structures and targeted members of Hasina's Awami League party. In several districts, members of the Hindu community, which is generally considered to have largely backed the Awami League, were violently attacked, their homes torched, temples vandalised, and shops looted. There were also reports of attacks against the Ahmadiyya Muslim community and ethnic minorities," she added.

In many places, Muslim clerics, students, and community leaders came out to protect Hindu temples and Christian churches, while political leaders, as well as protest organisers, called for calm.

Rioters have frequently targeted and attacked police members, who are widely disliked for repeated abuse of human rights over the years.

However, the new Inspector General of Police Mohammad Mainul Islam publicly apologised for "unprofessional officers" who "did not follow the accepted principles of applying force and violated human rights".

Authorities should ensure minorities are protected and the rule of law is respected. They also need to ensure that the police and other law enforcement agencies do not escalate or contribute to the violence, stressed Meenakshi.

"The interim government should take up the UN offer to establish an independent investigation to identify and prosecute those responsible for past human rights violations as well as violations during the recent violence."

BRAZIL PLANE CRASH

All 62 on board killed

REUTERS, Sao Paulo

A regional turboprop plane carrying 62 people crashed near Sao Paulo in Brazil yesterday, killing all on board, local officials near the crash site said.

Video shared on social media showed what appeared to be the ATR-made plane spinning out of control as it plunged down behind a cluster of trees near houses, followed by a large plume of black smoke.

City officials at Valinhos, near Vinhedo, said there were no survivors and only one home in the local condominium complex had been damaged while none of the residents were hurt.

Airline Voepass said the plane, which had taken off from Cascavel, in the state of Parana, bound for Sao Paulo's main international airport, crashed in the town of Vinhedo, about 80 km (50 miles) northwest of Sao Paulo.

The unlisted airline said it could not provide further information on what caused the plane, which had a PS-VPB registration, to crash.

The aircraft was listed by flight tracker FlightRadar24 as an ATR 72-500 turboprop. ATR is jointly owned by Airbus AIR.PA and Italian aerospace group Leonardo LDOF.MI.

ATR did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Multiple attacks target ship off Yemen: agency

AFP, Dubai

A series of attempted attacks using missiles and a sea drone targeted a merchant vessel off areas of Yemen held by Iran-backed Houthi rebels, a maritime security agency said yesterday.

A rocket-propelled grenade exploded Thursday near the ship off the city of Mokha, which overlooks the strategic Bab al-Mandeb Strait linking the Gulf of Aden to the Red Sea, it said.

A missile also exploded close to the same vessel, which later reported an attempted attack by an uncrewed surface vessel that was shot down by armed security team on board.

CROSS-BORDER OFFENSIVE

Ukrainian drones strike Russian airbase

AFP, Kyiv

Ukraine pressed on with a major cross-border incursion into Russia yesterday, also launching a significant air attack on a Russian airfield hundreds of kilometres behind the front lines.

The Ukrainian offensive into Russia's western Kursk region, launched Tuesday, appears to be the most significant attack on Russian soil since Moscow invaded in February 2022.

Russia said around 1,000 Ukrainian troops and more than two dozen armoured vehicles and tanks were involved in the initial attack, though it has since claimed to have destroyed many more pieces of hardware.

Moscow said yesterday it was moving more troops and weapons to the Kursk region.

Kyiv has not officially taken responsibility for the operation, but Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky said in his evening address on Thursday that Russia needed to "feel" the consequences of its invasion.

Moscow transfers reserves to western Kursk region, issues evacuation orders

Ukraine said yesterday it had carried out a massive air strike on a Russian military base in the Lipetsk region, around 280 kilometres (175 miles) from the Russia-Ukraine border.

The local Russian governor Igor Artamonov reported a "massive" drone attack overnight and Russian state news agencies said the airfield was on fire.

"Last night, the Ukrainian Defence Forces attacked the Lipetsk airfield," Ukraine's General Staff said in a post on Telegram.

It said it had struck "warehouses containing guided aerial bombs and a number of other facilities" and that a "massive fire broke out" with "multiple detonations."

Artamonov cancelled several public events in the region and issued evacuation orders for districts close to the air base.

Russia's defence ministry said it destroyed 75 Ukrainian drones overnight, including 19 over the Lipetsk region and seven over Kursk, where Ukraine's four-day incursion has focused.

Trump, Harris to debate on ABC Sept 10

REUTERS, Detroit

US Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump and Democratic opponent Kamala Harris will debate on September 10 on ABC, setting up the first face-to-face match-up between the rivals in what polls show is a close race.

In a news conference, Trump said he wanted additional debates on September 4 and September 25 that would air on Fox and NBC. Harris said in a post on X that she was looking forward to the September 10 debate after Trump "finally committed."

She told reporters after a campaign stop that she was open to discussing more debates, but a campaign official reiterated their position that a Sept 4 Fox debate is off the table.

UK 'on high alert' for more far-right rallies: PM

AFP, London

Prime Minister Keir Starmer warned yesterday that UK authorities must "stay on high alert" in the coming hours and days, amid fears of further far-right riots in English towns and cities.

His comments followed consecutive nights of relative quiet across England, after a week of near daily unrest in more than a dozen places in the wake of a deadly knife attack that killed three children.

Disturbances have continued unabated in Northern Ireland, however, where police have blamed pro-UK loyalist paramilitaries for fuelling nightly violence in Belfast.

Speaking during a visit to the headquarters of London's Metropolitan Police, Starmer said "swift justice" dispensed on rioters by police and the courts in recent days had acted as a deterrent to more disorder in England.

"I'm absolutely convinced that having the police officers in place these last few days, and the swift justice that has been dispensed in our courts have had a real impact," he told UK broadcasters.

"But we have to stay on high alert going into this weekend because we absolutely have to make sure that our communities are safe and secure."

PHILIPPINES COURT

Rappler wins appeal to overturn shutdown order

REUTERS, Manila

Philippine Nobel laureate Maria Ressa's news website Rappler won an appeal to restore its corporate licence after a court overturned a regulator's decision to shutter the media company.

The Court of Appeals, in a July 23 decision made public yesterday, had ruled the Philippine Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) overstepped its authority in ordering Rappler's shutdown in 2018.

"Like a bull seeing red, the SEC ... plowed through law and jurisprudence to reach its mark – the death of Rappler," the court said in its ruling.

The SEC declined to comment, saying it has yet to receive a copy of the decision. Ressa had welcomed the decision, saying it was a "vindication after a tortuous eight years of harassment".

"Journalists are not the enemy," Ressa told a news conference hours after the ruling went public.

Rappler's operating licence was rescinded in 2018 for violating foreign equity restrictions on media firms when it sold depositary rights to a US-based company.

Int'l community ready to work

The EU, which imports products worth $24 billion annually, looks forward to engaging with the new administration.

It also pledged to support this critical transition which should be part of a peaceful and inclusive process underpinned by good governance, democratic values, and respect for human rights, Borrell said.

China also welcomed the interim government.

Beijing values its relations with Bangladesh, and stands ready to work with Bangladesh to promote bilateral exchanges and cooperation in various areas and further advance the comprehensive strategic cooperative partnership, said Chinese foreign ministry spokesperson during a press briefing yesterday.

"China strictly follows the principle of non-interference in other countries' internal affairs," the spokesperson said.

He said China respects Bangladesh's independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity and the development path independently chosen by the Bangladeshi people.

"We stand firmly by our policy of good neighborliness and friendship with all people of Bangladesh. The friendship between China and Bangladesh runs long and deep."

The UN in Bangladesh is encouraging the process of making sure that Bangladesh's transition to democracy on the ground is peaceful.

In a briefing in New York on Thursday, UN Secretary-General's Deputy Spokesperson Farhan Haq said they made it clear they want to make sure that the violence that has been occurring in Bangladesh in recent weeks is tamped down.

"Certainly, we stand against any racially based attacks or racially based incitement to violence," he said.

The UN earlier had said it was ready to send a fact-finding team in the wake of massive violence and killings.

Asked on that, Farhan Haq said, "We'll see what kind of formal request we get from any new government that is formed. We, of course, stand ready to support the government and people of Bangladesh in any way that they deem is necessary."

Pakistan Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif offered heartiest congratulations to Prof Yunus and wished him great success in guiding Bangladesh towards a harmonious and prosperous future.

"I look forward to working with him to deepen cooperation between Pakistan and Bangladesh in the days ahead."

West Bengal Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee offered sincere congratulations and best wishes to Prof Yunus and those who have taken up their duties in Bangladesh.

"Hopefully, our relationship with them will improve," she wrote on X.

She wished for Bangladesh's development, peace, progress, and betterment of people from all walks of life.

"Hopefully, the crisis will end soon, peace will return. Let peace come back to this world of love of yours and mine. If our neighbouring states are doing well, we will be doing well too."

UK High Commissioner Sara Cooke said she was privileged to witness the oath-taking ceremony for Prof Yunus and members of the interim government of Bangladesh on Thursday night.

"The start of a new chapter for the country to chart a peaceful, prosperous and democratic future in the interests of all Bangladeshis," she wrote on X.

German Ambassador to Bangladesh Achim Troester congratulated the interim government and offered best of success.

"Germany will support its well-chosen priorities: restoration of security, full investigation of all crimes, re-establishment of the rule of law, structural reforms and smooth transition to real democratic representation," he said in an X post.

Bangladesh origin UK MP Rupa Huq wrote on X, "Good luck Muhammad Yunus back in Bangladesh from exile having assembled a diverse cabinet, including students and women."

"Would have never believed this earlier this year when he addressed MP and peers in Westminster. Hopefully genuine elections on the way."

US Congressman Raja Krishnamoorthi urged all government officials, the new administration and police chief, and the people of Bangladesh to do all they can to end the violence that has emerged across the country, including the brutal targeting of the country's Hindu minority, their homes, businesses, and their temples.

"The violence must stop and those responsible must be brought to justice to help the people of Bangladesh move forward as a nation. I will continue to closely monitor developments in Bangladesh in coordination with the US State Department," he said in an X post.

BB governor steps down

Sheikh Hasina resigned as prime minister and fled the country in the face of an uprising.

On Wednesday, more than 100 BB officials staged protests in front of the governor's office demanding his resignation.

Rouf, the 12th governor of the central bank, has been absent from his office since then.

The Daily Star could not reach the governor over the phone for comments as he did not respond to calls.

A former senior secretary at the finance ministry, Rouf joined as the central bank governor in July of 2022 when Bangladesh was facing the challenges of rising inflation, falling forex reserves and depreciation of taka.

His team had been unsuccessful in arresting the fall in the forex reserves, stopping the depreciation of taka, containing the increase in defaulted loan and above all fighting inflation, which hit 9.7 percent in the FY24, the highest in 12 years.

Economists said this was because of the central bank's failure to timely let the market forces to determine the interest rate and exchange rates.

Rouf, who was close to the former prime minister, faced criticism from different quarters after he had taken the initiative to merge weak banks with strong ones in a bid to salvage the vulnerable lenders and improve the image of the banking sector which was suffering from confidence crisis because of high defaulted loans, irregularities and weak governance.

He came under criticism again a few months ago when he imposed restrictions on the entry of journalists to the central bank.

The BB relaxed the restrictions after the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government.

challenged in court".

Wazed also said Hasina's Awami League party would contest the next election, which he said must be held within three months.

"I'm confident the Awami League will come to power. If not, we will be the opposition. Either way is fine," he said.

He said he was encouraged by a recent statement from Khaleda Zia, chief of the main opposition Bangladesh Nationalist Party (BNP) and a Hasina foe, that there should be no revenge or vengeance after Hasina fled.

"I was very happy to hear Mrs Khaleda Zia's statement that let bygones be bygones," Wazed said. "Let's forget the past. Let us not pursue the politics of vengeance. We are going to have to work together, whether it's a unity government or not."

He said he was "willing to work with the BNP ... to have democratic elections in Bangladesh and restore democracy and to work with them to ensure that going forward, we have peaceful democracy where there will be free and fair elections".

"I believe that politics and negotiations are very important," he said. "We can argue. We can agree to disagree. And we can always find a compromise."

Asked whether he would be the Awami League's prime ministerial candidate, he said: "My mother was going to retire after this term anyway. If the party wants me to, maybe. I will definitely consider it."

He said his mother was ready to face trial back home, as demanded by students who led the uprising.

"The threat of arrest has never scared my mother before," he said. "My mother has done nothing wrong. Just because people in her government did illegal things, did not mean my mother ordered it. That does not mean my mother is responsible for that."

He did not say who in the government was responsible for allowing the shooting of people during the protests.

"A government is a big, big machinery," Wazed said. "Those who are responsible, they should be brought to justice. My mother absolutely did not order anyone to commit violence against the protesters. The police were trying to stop the violence, but some police officers used excessive force."

"Our government immediately, and I was part of those conversations, I also told my mother, we need to immediately tell (our students wing) not to attack, stop the violence," he said.

"We suspended the police officers that shot at students. We did everything we could."

He said he would return home when he liked.

"I have never done anything illegal. So, how is anyone going to stop me?" he said. "The political parties are not going anywhere. You cannot wipe us out. Without our help, without our supporters, you are not going to be able to bring stability to Bangladesh."

Interim govt formed

The Daily Star yesterday.

On Thursday, President Shahabuddin administered oath to Chief Adviser Prof Muhammad Yunus and the advisers to the interim government.

Bhuiyan said the full Appellate Division bench headed by Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan gave the opinion after the president sought it through the law ministry.

The other six judges of the bench are Justice M Enayetur Rahim, Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam, Justice Md Abu Zafor Siddique, Justice Jahangir Hossain Selim, Justice Md Shahinur Islam and Justice Kashefa Hussain.

The Appellate Division said in its opinion that the president can form the interim government in the current situation as there is no parliament now and the prime minister earlier resigned from office, SC Registrar General Bhuiyan said.

He also said the Appellate Division's opinion was based on Article 106 of the constitution.

The article says, "If at any time it appears to the President that a question of law has arisen, or is likely to arise, which is of such a nature and of such public importance that it is expedient to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court upon it, he may refer the question to the Appellate Division for consideration and the division may, after such hearing as it thinks fit, report its opinion thereon to the President."

The SC registrar general said the president sent the reference seeking the SC opinion as there is no constitutional provision on the formation of an interim government.

He, however, did not clarify whether the judges physically or virtually sat on the bench to deliver their opinion to the president.

The functions of the Appellate and High Court divisions of the SC were closed on Thursday.

Jail Superintendent Abu Fattah disclosed the deceased's names yesterday, reports our district correspondent.

They are Arman, Shyamal, Jasim, Fazle Rabbi Babu, Raihan Miah, and Rahat Miah.

According to jail sources, the inmates set fire to the prison and held the jailer hostage.

On information, firefighters rushed to the spot and doused the fire. The situation was brought under control around 7:00pm, said Fattah, adding that army personnel surrounded the jail during the incident.

Injured prison guard Rukunuzzaman was sent to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital. The other injured, including five prisoners, are undergoing treatment at Jamalpur General Hospital.

On Tuesday, 104 prisoners fled from the Kushtia District Jail.

On Monday evening, an unidentified number of prisoners escaped from the Satkhira District Jail. However, at least 200 of them surrendered to the authorities a day later, according to jail sources.

The same evening, a mob stormed the Sherpur District Jail, leading to the escape of 518 inmates.

On July 19, at least 826 prisoners fled the Narsingdi District Jail. During the jailbreak, around 85 arms and 9,000 bullets were looted.

However, around 598 prisoners surrendered later, and 51 arms and 1,085 bullets were recovered.

Army deployed

The release also mentioned that the Bangladesh Army is engaged in the security of various important installations in the country, including Bangabhaban, the Prime Minister's Office, and the Mohakhali Data Center.

"Efforts are underway to create panic among the public by spreading rumours through various social media platforms", the release said, requesting the public not to panic over such rumours and to use their judgment when communicating with army camps.

The Bangladesh Army is, and will always be, by the side of the people and always work for the nation's interest, added the release.

Artistes should question power, not fear it

Celebrities are now emerging from their shells to advocate for the people—a much-needed phenomenon to strengthen the cultural backbone of the nation.

SHOWBIZ DESK

"We were afraid of the government, but the students gave us courage – so we owe it to them to protest the brutality inflicted upon them," said Cryptic Fate's vocalist, Shakib Chowdhury, on August 3, just two days before former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina resigned and fled the country amidst a mass uprising led by students in Bangladesh. The irony lies in the fact that many of these students were inspired by Cryptic Fate's "Cholo Bangladesh," as documented by numerous social media edits.

On that very day, the nation witnessed musicians marching towards the Central Shaheed Minar in solidarity with the people—the most unprecedented act of defiance by celebrities since the Awami League came to power. Throughout the quota reform movement, which escalated from July 15 onwards, celebrities cautiously offered their heavily censored condolences with statements such as "We don't want bloodshed" or "Let peace return to the country," all the while ignoring the harsh reality that armed forces were firing upon unarmed students, instead of working to de-escalate the situation.

Once regarded as the beacons and mirrors of society, entertainment stars had, regrettably, been tamed, censored, and coerced into partisan silence over the past fifteen years. It became common knowledge that national honors, film awards, and even relevance in the industry depended on a celebrity's proximity to the ruling party. While many argue that fear was the primary motivator for this silence, one cannot ignore the role greed may have played. Consider the National Film Awards, where merit often took a backseat to how well one could lobby for recognition.

"You've left, but you could have given the national awards to artistes who were oh-so inclined," wrote Sadia Ayman, a young actress who had vocally supported the student-led uprising while senior celebrities remained silent. She referred, of course, to a recent government-backed all-star biographical film that seemingly guaranteed accolades for its participants, regardless of the quality of their performances. Sadia also spoke out when a select group of cultural elites visited the BTV premises on August 1, lamenting over the vandalized building while hundreds of students had already lost their lives. "Shame on you," she wrote in a Facebook post.

As the student movement reached its zenith, actress Zakia Bari Mamo resigned from Actors' Equity Bangladesh in protest of their statement, which contradicted the students' demands. "We are a free nation; anyone is free to support any political party, but blind devotion leads nowhere," she asserted.

On August 1, several bands boycotted the annual Joy Bangla Concert, held on March 7. "There is no question of performing in the Joy Bangla Concert after what has transpired in the past two weeks," Nemesis announced on their social media platforms. The band had been vocal on behalf of students since the 2018 Road Safety Movement, and this time was no different. Their songs, "Gonojowar" and "Joyoddhoni," flooded social media and graffiti across the country. Furthermore, they were seen cleaning the streets in the days following the mass uprising.

Celebrities are now emerging from their shells to advocate for the people—a much-needed phenomenon to strengthen the cultural backbone of the nation. It would be remiss not to mention the iconic stance taken by Prince Mahmud, who wrote, "It takes time for the culture of fear to end. Not all forms of protest are the same. We should welcome the culture of asking questions."

Cultural figures, some without even being directly involved in the movement, fueled the protest with their music, art, and philosophy. As the fire of resistance raged on, the veil of fear was lifted, and more voices joined in. We can only hope that today's celebrities learn to question power rather than remain subservient to it.

WHAT'S ON THE GRAM

Azmeri Haque Badhan

Actress Azmeri Haque Badhan, who has been an ardent supporter of the student-led quota reform protest since its inception, recently shared this photo on Instagram.

She joined in the merrymaking associated with welcoming a new Bangladesh and expressed her joy at seeing the students' demand for the former prime minister's resignation being met.

In a recent interview with TV9 Bangla, she emphasised the need to join forces with everyone for a secular and harmonious nation. She stated, "The students who are making the crucial decisions today, regarding the appointment of Muhammad Yunus to lead the interim government, are our future. They are advocating for a reformed system, and rightly so."

TV TALKIES

'Shōgun' delivers a gripping tale of power and intrigue in Feudal Japan

The series Shōgun is visibly an impassioned storytelling material, taking place against the backdrop of Japan's looming civil war in 1600. Created by Rachel Kondo and Justin Marks, it ambitiously and respectfully brings James Clavell's iconic 1975 novel of the same name to the screen.

Considering that the original book spans over 1,000 pages, it's remarkable that they've successfully distilled it into just 10 episodes. The outcome is a visually striking and captivating series.

Shōgun has been in development for several years, first being announced in 2018 has proven to be deserving of the wait.

The story centers on English sailor John Blackthorne (Cosmo Jarvis) arriving in feudal Japan, where he allies with Lord Yoshii Toranaga (Hiroyuki Sanada), who is vying for power. Their paths intersect through Mariko (Anna Sawai), an outcast and Blackthorne's translator. These intertwined narratives of political intrigue form a tightly woven tale of ambition.

The series is mainly in Japanese, with some English for Portuguese scenes, but it's surprisingly easy to follow. However, it demands your full attention—one can't casually multitask with this one.

Keno

Shironamhin's latest single, Keno, is a haunting reflection of the current turmoil in Bangladesh. The track captures the nation's anguish and confusion amid ongoing violence.

The lyrics evoke powerful imagery, questioning the senselessness of suffering and the inevitability of chaos. The melancholic blend of instruments—bass, cello, violin, and guitar—paired with emotive vocals, intensifies the song's impact. Part of their upcoming album Batighor, Keno stands as a moving tribute to the students and lives lost, urging listeners to confront the unsettling realities of our time.

Penned by Ziaur Rahman and music by Kazy Ahmad Shafin, the song asks, "Why are the birds of this city flying aimlessly like the blind all night? In the scorching heat, why does the red sun still burn in the sky, turning everything to ashes?"

Stern action vital to prevent robberies

Residents in many areas are having to spend nights in fear

We are worried about the surge in attempted robberies in recent times, with the residents in many neighbourhoods in Dhaka spending sleepless nights. According to a report by this daily, there has been a marked increase in such incidents in the capital's Uttara, Dhanmondi, Mohammadpur, Basila, Adabor, Mirpur, Zigatola, Gulshan, Badda, Jatrabari, Old Dhaka, etc. Since Monday, when a mass uprising ousted the Sheikh Hasina government, each night came with robbery alerts on social media as well as reports of residents, led by students, patrolling their neighbourhoods with sticks in hand and even driving away criminal gangs wielding knives and machetes. Many robbers were also held.

This is but one fallout of the breakdown of law and order that was caused by the widespread attacks on police, and police stations, both before and following the government's fall. The resultant panic led to the entire police force vanishing from the scene, with its ripple effects also felt in traffic and fire services. However, attempts to restart all closed police stations and resolve the issues brewing within the force have begun to show results, especially after the interim government finally took over the reins, ending a four-day power vacuum. In Dhaka, 29 police stations resumed their services yesterday. Officers are returning to duty. But many stations still remain shut. Clearly, residents are not out of the woods yet.

They will expect a dramatic improvement given the toll this protracted uncertainty over security is taking on them. This is further underscored by another report that says that, in the past two weeks, there have been over 100,000 complaints of theft, robbery, and looting across the country. In many areas, people are relying on mosque announcements and grassroots vigilante efforts to protect themselves from criminals. The Bangladesh Army, Border Guard Bangladesh (BGB), and other armed forces have stepped up efforts to provide some measure of security, but those have been insufficient in the face of the huge tide of criminal activities. That said, restoring law and order completely will not be possible with law enforcement measures alone. We need the political parties and community leaders to help in this regard by sending strong messages of stability and calm.

People in Dhaka—and indeed Bangladesh—deserve better than to live in fear, especially after an uprising meant to protect them from the shackles of lawlessness. They deserve to sleep soundly in their homes, and to trust that their safety is in capable hands. It is, therefore, imperative that the law enforcement authorities take all steps necessary to fully operationalise the entire police force and re-establish rule of law.

Recent jailbreaks call for urgent steps

Authorities should address security lapses, undertake prison reforms

At a time when we are concerned about the overall law and order situation in the country, particularly with most police stations still non-functional and large abstention in the force, the repeated incidents of jailbreak attempts have raised further concerns. The latest incident occurred in Jamalpur jail on Thursday, in which six inmates were killed. Earlier, on Tuesday, a total of 209 prisoners fled from the Kashimpur High Security Jail in Gazipur after holding prison guards hostage during a demonstration. Six inmates were also shot dead then. On the same day, around the same time, at least 94 inmates fled from the Kushtia jail. In both these cases, the army took control of the situation later. But the question remains: why was the security of our jails not beefed up after the first incident of jailbreak in Narsingdi on July 19, in which 826 inmates including nine militants had escaped? Such incidents have also occurred in several other districts, including Chattogram, Sherpur and Satkhira.

Clearly, there are security lapses in our prisons, but an equally worrying development has been the escape of some hardened criminals, including militants and terrorists. For instance, in Narsingdi, inmates belonging to some militant groups escaped. Three of the six inmates who were shot dead were also militants. According to the jail superintendent, militants and ordinary prisoners together started the demonstration that day, demanding their release. This brings to the fore another crucial issue that needs immediate attention: the keeping-together of militants, terrorists, and general inmates in jails. This cannot be allowed because it increases security risks as well as the threat of radicalisation of ordinary prisoners.

Moreover, many of the jails in the country remain overcrowded with prisoners, even after the recent releases following the fall of the Sheikh Hasina government. Overcrowding is a long-standing issue in our jails. For example, according to a report published in July, the Chattogram Central Jail has a capacity to house 2,249 inmates, but is having to house twice as many prisoners. Also, hardened criminals and militants are kept in the same wards as general inmates in the prison, increasing its security risks.

We, therefore, urge the authorities to conduct a comprehensive evaluation of security risks in all our prisons, address their vulnerabilities, and increase their security, taking help from other security forces if necessary. Also, urgent measures should be taken to track down the escapees who are still traceless. These recent incidents also serve as a call to undertake prison reforms, which have been long overdue.

THIS DAY IN HISTORY

Operation Ranch Hand launched

On this day in 1961, Operation Ranch Hand was launched by the US army, which involved spraying approximately 20 million US gallons of defoliants and herbicides in South Vietnam. Sprayed over rural areas, this was done to destroy the food and vegetation covers of the Viet Cong.

The power of education in 'Bangla Bashanta'

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND

Dr Shamsad Mortuza is professor of English at Dhaka University.

SHAMSAD MORTUZA

The latest wave of student-led uprisings in Bangladesh, widely referred to as the "Bangla Bashanta" (Bangla Spring), symbolises a profound sociopolitical awakening. This seasonal metaphor, akin to the Arab Spring, represents the blossoming of collective consciousness and the quest for meaningful change. The Bangla Bashanta channels the frustrations and aspirations of a generation yearning for educational reform, resistance, and democratic renewal—much like the socioeconomic grievances and demographic pressures that fuelled the Arab Spring.

At the heart of this movement lies a youth bulge—an entire generation of young people who, despite having access to education, find themselves underemployed and dissatisfied with the status quo. These youth, who constitute 28 percent of the population, have become the vanguard of the movement, driven by the paradox of being educated yet unemployable. The frustration is evident: official records indicate that 12 percent of university graduates are unemployed, a figure notably higher than that of individuals with only primary or secondary education. Last year's data estimated that 800,000 graduates were without jobs, unable to enter the informal sector due to the so-called prestige associated with higher education. This stark mismatch between educational attainment and employment opportunities underscores the systemic issues plaguing the nation's education system.

Interestingly, it was a generation whose education failed to prepare them for the rapidly evolving demands of the global job market that spearheaded this revolution—rather than organised political parties led by the educated elite. The movement, although centred at the country's oldest university with its historical track record of successful employment, spread like wildfire across the nation. Students from private universities also joined with revolutionary zeal, despite being less likely to pursue public sector jobs. This widespread discontent is a direct result of years of neglect in the educational sector, where the government, in its pursuit of populist numbers, has compromised on quality, spreading resources thin. While previous administrations have made strides in enrolment and access, the quality and relevance of education have not kept pace, leaving graduates in a prolonged state of "waithood"—a term that encapsulates the limbo between graduation and employment.

The students of Bangladesh have spoken through their movement, giving us an opportunity to fix the systemic issues in our education system and pave the way for a more prosperous, equitable, and democratic future for the country.

Pervasive inequities and the low quality and irrelevance of education further exacerbate this frustration. Employers frequently lament the basic competencies of graduates, despite years of formal education. This has led many private organisations with an international outlook to rely on expatriate staff, further shrinking the already limited job market for local graduates and putting additional pressure on the national economy. Efforts to replace rote learning with more creative curricula have faltered due to poorly trained teachers, resulting in conflicting education policies that fail to align with the needs of the modern workforce. The overemphasis on securing government jobs—a shrinking sector—has further stymied the potential of the youth, limiting their prospects in an increasingly diversified global economy.

Moreover, the glass ceiling remains a significant barrier for female students, particularly in the tertiary education system. Despite progress, educational inequities persist, with girls and children from disadvantaged backgrounds continuing to struggle with access to quality education. However, it is worth noting that female students, who played a bold and prominent role in the movement, called for an end to the quota system, driven by their confidence in their ability to shoulder equal responsibilities in society. This highlights a generational shift in attitudes, where young women are increasingly demanding the same opportunities and recognition as their male counterparts.

Identity and ideology politics also played an essential role in brewing the Bangla Bashanta. The overemphasis on a monolithic history has backfired. Generation Z has actively recycled slogans from the Liberation War to redefine their identity and advance nationalist perspectives that are conscious of protecting sovereignty and freedom of expression. They sought to reclaim and reaffirm the national identity forged in 1971, ensuring that their education serves not just as a pathway to employment, but as a means of preserving and propagating the core values of the nation. This ideological shift underscores the role of education in shaping not only the economic prospects of the youth, but also their cultural and political consciousness.

The Bangla Bashanta thus serves as a clarion call for a new educational compact in Bangladesh—one that prioritises quality, relevance, and equity while embracing the identity and ideological dimensions of education. Education should not only be about access, but also about equipping students with the skills and knowledge necessary to navigate the complexities of the 21st century. Drawing from the global discourse on education, Bangladesh must embrace the principles of the Global Compact on Learning, which advocates for a comprehensive approach to education that includes early childhood development, basic literacy and numeracy, and access to relevant post-primary education.

To achieve this transformation, we need visionary leadership and collective action. Just as the Global Compact on Learning emphasises international cooperation, Bangladesh must mobilise its resources—across government, the private sector, civil society, and international partners—to prioritise learning outcomes. This will necessitate not only increased funding, but also the effective use of resources and a commitment to measuring and improving learning outcomes. One hopes that the interim government will increase budget allocations for the organic growth of education. The impressive deliberations by our leaders on talk shows must now be put into action to achieve real change. This change must come with a reassessment of our young generation, for whom education is designed. For a long time, we have underestimated this generation, thinking that they are not equipped to bring about any change, either for themselves or for society. Yet, here we are, learning from their creativity and innovation—from their use of technology and cyber-activism. Incorporating recent experiences into curriculum redesign is crucial to enhancing the overall educational ecosystem.

Advocacy and public opinion will play a critical role in holding the government accountable for these results. Youth have historically led change in Bangladesh, so they must be actively involved in this process to ensure that their voices and needs are heard. The Bangla Bashanta is more than just a moment in time; it is a movement that can be used to transform education into a powerful tool for resistance, reform, and democracy.

The students have spoken. The unmet aspirations of youth are now out in the open. By addressing the systemic issues in the education system—quality, relevance, equity, and the integration of identity and ideology—we now have the opportunity to harness the potential of our youth and pave the way for a more prosperous, equitable, and democratic future. The success of this movement will ultimately depend on our collective ability to reimagine education as a catalyst for meaningful and lasting change.

The winds of change

As the euphoria and exaltation slowly subside, as the smoke clears over the horizon of a new Bangladesh, people are slowly coming to grips with the grim reality confronting them. A government of 15-plus years dissolved. The head of government has escaped abroad, fearing for her life. A teetering economy, an uncontrolled law and order situation. A witch hunt of political opponents is going on. Killings, burning, looting, vandalising have become the order of the day.

All this came about due to the ineptness of the ruling class in handling a very simple matter: the quotas. Kudos to our young and determined students of universities and colleges who started a simple non-violent protest, which snowballed into a historic revolution and unseating of Sheikh Hasina government, a result mainly of uncalled for brutal force and the barbaric killing of over 400 unarmed people. The resilience, bravery and sacrifices of our gallant students and citizens have written a new chapter in the annals of non-violent protests.

During the latter part of the movement, disparate political party activists joined the students, seeking their own political gains, as said by many. Some speculate that they were the ones who mainly carried out the attacks, vandalism and killings post the government's fall.

Students were seen in the streets directing traffic and returning looted property. Some sense of normalcy in public life has started to return. Students and the army have unanimously selected Prof Muhammad Yunus, a Noble laureate, to lead the interim government, which will oversee public affairs as well as pave the way for a free and fair election.

But what does the nation have in store? Can we expect better governance from the other political parties in the country? Sad to say, their track record is equally unsatisfactory as the AL. Can we expect honesty, integrity, impartiality, from them? Do they have the will and the gusto to build a new, vibrant Bangladesh, free from corruption and dirty politics?

Corruption has eaten up the vitals of our society. It's rampant in all walks of life. The nation needs to do some soul-searching, instead of pointing the finger at Hasina alone. Our politicians, bureaucrats, technocrats, doctors, teachers, business people, shopkeepers, etc—all need to take a solemn vow to uphold honesty at all levels of life. Without honesty, sincerity and morality, we will fail as a nation.

We can identify the corrupt, but what about the corrupters? Who bribe, peddle influences, and in the process line their own pockets? They, too, must be sought out and meted with exemplary punishment. The anti-corruption authority must be strengthened and be given free rein to identify the corrupt and the corrupters.

The ombudsman system must be installed, which no government has dared to install in the past. People must focus on voting for good, honest representatives. Only then can the dream of Sonar Bangla, for which we fought and sacrificed, can be achieved.

Vision 2050 for the valiant sons and daughters of the soil

Prof Syed Munir Khasru

SYED MUNIR KHASRU

Dear victorious student community of Bangladesh,

The recent triumph of your protests, culminating in Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina's resignation and departure, marks a pivotal moment in our nation's history. This watershed event echoes the transformative upheaval of 1990 known as "90's Anti-Authoritarian Movement," reminding us of the power of collective action and the enduring spirit of youth. Your passion, determination, and unwavering commitment to seek fairness and justice have once again proven to be a formidable force for change, placing you in a proud lineage of student activists and leaders who have repeatedly altered the course of our nation's history, starting from the Language Movement of 1952, culminating in the birth a new nation in the map of the world in 1971, i.e., Bangladesh, and then the restoration of parliamentary democracy in 1991.

As we reflect on this momentous achievement, we must recognise a fundamental truth about our national character. We Bangladeshis are emotional people, quick to ignite with passion, but unfortunately sometimes lacking in the sustained effort required for long-term transformation of those noble ambitions and positive aspirations which also brought you in the very first place to the streets as you fought to have a fair opportunity in government jobs. The tragic loss of innocent young lives, who died for a cause whose benefit they will never enjoy, is the ultimate sacrifice one can make for which the nation will remain indebted forever. The challenge that lies before you has now moved beyond the abolition of the quota system. It is time to channel today's emotional energy and patriotism into concrete actions of tomorrow for achieving a lasting positive change in Bangladesh for which you have sacrificed so much in such a short time.

The triumph of the protests led by students, culminating in Sheikh Hasina's resignation and departure, marks a pivotal moment in Bangladesh's history.

It is crucial to note that your movement in 2024 stands apart from its predecessors, and in a significant way, as it mostly includes ordinary and non-political students. Unlike 1990, when Chhatra League and Chhatra Dal, the student wings of Awami League and BNP, respectively, played major roles, you have transcended party affiliations to be representative of all students, irrespective of their personal beliefs and political ideologies. You became something larger than life by serving as the conscience and voice of the nation as opposed to representing any particular political camp or ideology. This independence is both refreshing and commendable as it gives us hope to expect greater things to come from you that are driven by genuine love for the country, as opposed to petty partisanship and personal interests only.

Your protest and revolt are a testament to the power of technology in mobilising forces for positive change. Unlike the communication methods available in the 1990s, during the last student movement which led to the ouster of the corrupt and immoral military dictator Gen HM Ershad, you have harnessed social media and digital platforms to amplify your voices and coordinate your efforts. As we look back on the 1990 protests, we must never forget the sacrifice of those who came before you. Approximately 100 lives were lost in the struggle for democracy during that tumultuous period.

Reflecting on the period since 1991, when parliamentary democracy was restored, we see a mixed legacy of progress and missed opportunities for Bangladesh. Our GDP has grown from $31 billion in 1991 to $437 billion in 2023, a testament to our economic resilience. Life expectancy has increased from 54 years in 1991 to 74 years in 2022, reflecting improvements in healthcare and living standards. We have dramatically reduced poverty, with rates falling from 42 percent in 1991 to around 5.01 percent in 2022. Our infrastructure has seen remarkable improvements, with electricity access rising to almost 100 percent by 2022.

Alongside these achievements, we have also fallen short in several critical areas. Our democratic institutions remain fragile, with press freedom deteriorating to the point where Bangladesh now ranks 165th out of 180 nations in the 2024 World Press Freedom Index. Human rights conditions have worsened, and corruption continues to plague our society, with Bangladesh scoring its lowest in 12 years on the 2023 Corruption Perceptions Index. Perhaps most concerning for your future is the rise in youth unemployment, which has increased from 5.51 percent in 1991 to 15.74 percent in 2023, despite our economic growth.

The commercialisation of politics has seen the nefarious rise of an elite group of businessmen-turned-politicians as politics has become the best business in town to make quick money with very little genuine entrepreneurial work and hardly any accountability behind it. You have been unfairly deprived of good role models in both politics and business, as is evidenced in the beneficiaries of this malicious culture, some of whom are now desperate to leave the country with their ill-gotten money, both at home and abroad, and stopped in the airports and borders. We have hardly succeeded to provide you with good examples to be inspired from—either in politics or in business. So, set examples, in both politics and business, that puts us to shame and makes your next generation proud of your achievements and successes as well as your character and integrity.

Your role, dear students, extends far beyond this moment of protest. You are the architects of Bangladesh's future, which I would like to label as "Vision 2050," and your responsibilities have only just begun. Engage deeply in policy discussions, pursue excellence in your chosen fields, and hold leaders accountable not just for today, but in the years to come. Let your actions be guided not just by emotion, but by a clear vision of the Bangladesh we can become. Cultivate the skills and knowledge needed to lead our nation into the future, whether in politics, public service, business, technology, arts, culture or sports.

As we look towards 2050, I urge you to envision a Bangladesh that has learnt from its past and boldly faces its future. Aspire to build a nation that stands in the world as a beacon of democracy, prosperity, and social justice. This vision should include a fully developed economy that has diversified beyond the ready-made garment sector, embracing technology and fostering innovation across various industries. Technology must play a central role in this vision. Your protest has already demonstrated how digital tools can be leveraged for social change. Now, imagine how these same technologies can be applied to governance, transparency, and accountability as well as entrepreneurism and enterprise.

To realise "Vision 2050," we must confront the shortcomings that emerged after 1991. Political polarisation, weak institutions, and rampant corruption have hindered our progress. To move forward, we need comprehensive reforms across various sectors. Constitutional changes must strengthen our democracy and prevent power concentration. Significant investment in digital infrastructure is crucial, not only for economic growth but also to enhance governance, transparency and efficiency. Robust anti-corruption measures, backed by stringent accountability systems, are essential.

> It is crucial to note that your movement in 2024 stands apart from its predecessors, and in a significant way, as it mostly includes ordinary and non-political students. Unlike 1990, when Chhatra League and Chhatra Dal, the student wings of Awami League and BNP, respectively, played major roles, you have transcended party affiliations to be representative of all students, irrespective of their personal beliefs and political ideologies. You became something larger than life by serving as the conscience and voice of the nation as opposed to representing any particular political camp or ideology.

Strive for an independent judiciary that ensures the rule of law and equal justice for all citizens, regardless of their social or economic status or political ideology. Transparent governance should be at the core of our political system, with robust mechanisms in place to promote accountability at all levels of government. Social equality must be more than just a slogan, with concrete steps taken to eradicate discrimination and ensure equal opportunities for all Bangladeshis, regardless of gender, religion or ethnicity. You fought for meritocracy whose one of the underlying principles is equal and fair opportunity to all, not for the few privileged only. Be vigilant to preserve and protect what you have earned with so much sacrifice.

Our education system demands a thorough revamp to meet challenges of the evolving global knowledge economy. Since the establishment of Bangladesh's first private university in 1992, we have witnessed a proliferation of higher education institutions, with over 100 private universities now operating nationwide. This rapid expansion, averaging more than three new universities annually, has undoubtedly increased access to tertiary education. However, this quantitative growth has not been matched by qualitative improvements. The quality of teachers has gone down at a much faster rate than the quality of students. As a result, the quality of education has, in many instances, deteriorated, failing to equip graduates with skills and knowledge demanded by the modern job market. In the 2024-25 global academic rankings, encompassing 2,250 top universities from over 100 countries, only five Bangladeshi institutions have secured notable positions, reflecting our weak standing in the competitive international higher education landscape and underscoring the need for improvement in the nation's tertiary education sector.

This misalignment between educational outcomes and industry requirements has contributed significantly to the rising unemployment rate among our youth. To address this critical issue, we must pivot towards an education system that emphasises critical thinking, problem-solving, and digital literacy. Our curriculum must be dynamic, continuously adapting to global best practices and anticipating future workforce needs at a time when skill sets have an average shelf life of three years as technology continues to challenge our intellect and abilities at breakneck speed. By fostering innovation, entrepreneurship, and practical skills alongside theoretical knowledge, we can better prepare our students to thrive in the 21st century global economy and reverse the trend of increasing youth unemployment. You, the students, deserve much better support from the country and its educational establishments.

In the health sector, while we have made significant strides in family planning, immunisations, and reducing maternal and infant mortality rates, the 2023 healthcare index places Bangladesh at 94th out of 94 countries, highlighting persistent challenges. Urban-rural disparities and systemic issues continue to hinder progress. We must prioritise reforms and investments for improving quality healthcare services accessible to all.

As we progress towards 2050, we must prioritise climate change adaptation and sustainability. Bangladesh, being one of the most vulnerable countries to climate change, must lead by example. Envision a future where sustainable practices are not just encouraged, but are the norm. From green urban planning to renewable energy adoption, from sustainable agriculture to eco-friendly industries—let Bangladesh be a model of sustainable development. Remember, a sustainable lifestyle is not just an environmental imperative, but an economic one. By embracing sustainability, we can attract green investments, create new jobs, and position Bangladesh as a leader in the global green economy. Our economic planning must prioritise sustainable, inclusive growth that transcends political cycles and benefits all citizens.

As you embark on this journey, remember that life has a way of challenging our ideals. As you grow older, you may find that the purity of your thoughts is tested by new challenges and adversities, unexpected uncertainties and risks. The fervour of youth may be tempered by the complexities of adulthood. However, just as age is just a number, your youthful energy is more in your mind than in your body. I implore you to keep alive and agile the passion and determination to build a nation great in its humanity and fierce in its ambitions.

Let the idealism and patriotism that fuel you today be the compass that guides you through the challenges ahead. Please remember that everyone loves to be with the winner, which you are today. I have seen how some of the student leaders and heroes of the glorious student movement of 1990 got lured into the trap of greed and lust at the expense of their values and morals. Today, some of them are no less pathetic than the evil forces against which they fought valiantly at some point in their lives that resulted in the ouster of a corrupt and immoral military dictator in 1991, who was subsequently restored by our political parties with their marriage of convenience devoid of values and principles. In the process, they betrayed the likes of well-known protester Noor Hossain and Dr Milon, who made the ultimate sacrifice with their lives during those turbulent days.

Again, salute to you, the students, who time and again have shown the politicians what selfless acts of patriotism look like. However, the irony and lesson of history is that politicians in our country, except a few exceptions, hardly learn and seldom change until they are forced to do what they are supposed to do: love and serve the country selflessly. So, be vigilant and know how to discern between right and wrong, good and bad. Please remember that the choices you make today will shape the future that you aspire for tomorrow. Equally important is not to compromise your dignity for your destiny, as then it is not worth it.

> As you stand at this crossroads, do not repeat the mistakes of the past that many of your predecessors did. The euphoria of change must be matched with the diligence of nation-building. By 2050, let Bangladesh stand as a model of what can be achieved when a nation harnesses the energy of its youth and the wisdom of its experience. Build a country where democracy thrives, where the economy provides opportunities for all, where education opens doors to success, and where every citizen can live with dignity and hope.

The path to 2050 is long and fraught with challenges, but with your passion tempered by wisdom, idealism coupled with pragmatism, you can build a Bangladesh that not only fulfils the dreams of our Liberation War, but exceeds them. Let this moment be the catalyst for a new era of progress, where the spirit of 1971 is finally realised in a truly free, fair, and prosperous Bangladesh where everyone—irrespective of social, economic, religious or ethnic identity—thrives on his/her merit and hard work, honesty and integrity, character and compassion, and last but not the least, an unflinching patriotism that neither gathers dust nor rots with the passage of time.

The future is in your hands, dear students. Shape it with an unwavering commitment to the greater good of our beloved nation. Your journey begins now, and with it, the promise of a brighter, more prosperous Bangladesh for generations to come. Where we failed, you will succeed for sure. We can't afford any more time wasted, or another generation lost as the euphoria subsidies and reality starts to kick in.

Finally, never be afraid to dream big and aspire for more. Let no challenge make you daunted, have faith in life and the goodness it brings, never shy away from speaking the truth and taking a stand—which you did so bravely. Keep on marching with courage and conviction, character and compassion—the nation is with you in thoughts, spirit, and prayers.

Botswana gets the afternoon off

AFP, \Gaborone

President Mokgweetsi Masisi gave Botswana the afternoon off on Friday to celebrate Letsile Tebogo, the country's first Olympic gold medallist and the first African to be crowned 200-metre champion at a Games.

Masisi hailed the 21-year-old sprinter as "Botswana's Sensation" after his outstanding performance on Thursday.

"Botswana's finest sporting moment," beamed the Mmegi newspaper after Tebogo produced a stunning run in the 200m to take gold, leaving pre-race favourite Noah Lyles trailing in third.

To add to his performance, he also set an African record of 19.46sec.

Tebogo's achievement will be "etched in the annals of the history of the republic", the president said.

The Olympic medal is Botswana's third after Nijel Amos won silver in the 800m at the 2012 London Games and the men's 4x400m relay team took bronze in Tokyo in 2020.

Videos shared on social media showed students at the University of Botswana dancing and singing into the night, while people across the southern African nation posted their pride on X and Facebook.

Nadeem makes Pakistan proud

AFP, Mian Channu

Dozens of villagers gathered in front of the modest home of Pakistan athlete Arshad Nadeem to watch the hulking javelin thrower take part in the Olympic Games final late Thursday.

The event was broadcast live by a digital projector onto a screen hanging on the back of a truck in his farming village near the small city of Mian Channu in Punjab province.

As the javelin soared through the sky in Paris to a new Olympic record and a gold medal for Nadeem, thousands of kilometres (miles) away the cheers of the villagers rang into the night.

"He did a great throw and created history. We are proud of him," said Nadeem's 35-year-old brother, Muhammad Azeem.

Men danced to the celebratory beat of a drum and others clapped and chanted slogans as it became clear he had won.

The women, meanwhile, sat crowded around a small TV inside Nadeem's home.

"He had promised me that he would play well, go abroad, win a medal and make Pakistan proud," his mother Raziah Parveen said straightforwardly.

USA go for gold against Marta's Brazil

AFP, Paris

A resurgent United States under new coach Emma Hayes are hoping to establish themselves as the leading force in women's international football once again by claiming the gold medal in Saturday's Olympic final against Brazil and their legendary skipper Marta.

The USA came into the Olympics with a rejuvenated squad and a point to prove after a poor showing at last year's World Cup, when they were eliminated in the last 16.

They also performed below par at each of the last two Olympics, finishing out of the medals at Rio 2016 before taking bronze three years ago in Tokyo.

But the arrival of renowned English coach Hayes from Chelsea has given the USA the boost they needed, and they have been inspired on their way to the final by the exciting attacking trio of Sophia Smith, Mallory Swanson and Trinity Rodman.

They have each scored three goals at the tournament, with the USA winning all three group games against Zambia, Germany and Australia before dispatching both Japan and the Germans in extra time in the knockout rounds.

Now they are hoping to add to their women's football record haul of four golds and win the title for the first time since London 2012.

"Emma came in so soon before this tournament, so we knew that was going to be a challenge, but she just came in flying and we absolutely love her," said Smith, the Colorado-born forward who turns 24 on the day of the final.

"She has worked every day to build our trust and show us she cares about us. She is such a great coach and such a great mentor.

"We are a completely different team and a lot of the credit goes to Emma. She has communicated everyone's roles very clearly. We are really excited for her to be our coach for a really long time."

The USA's position as the undisputed global powerhouse of the women's game looked to be gone for some time following last year's World Cup in Australia and New Zealand, when a brilliant Spain team led by Aitana Bonmati were crowned champions.

However, Spain missed out in their bid to add Olympic gold to that title and the UEFA Nations League after they were surprisingly beaten 4-2 by Brazil in Tuesday's semi-final in Marseille.

Instead it is the Brazilians who will meet the USA in the gold medal match and they will be attempting to make it third time lucky after losing to the same opponents in the Athens final in 2004 and in Beijing in 2008.

Both of those finals were won by the USA in extra time, and both featured Marta, the Brazilian legend and multiple winner of the FIFA world player of the year award.

Now 38, she is appearing at her sixth and likely last Olympics, and is hoping to sign off with gold to go with her two silver medals.

Marta missed both the quarter-final win against hosts France and the semi-final against Spain due to suspension after being sent off for a reckless challenge in Brazil's final group game, also against the Spanish.

"Now she will be able to finish her Olympics playing in a final, where she deserves to be. I hope she manages to come away with the gold medal," said Gabi Portilho, who scored in both the quarter-final and semi-final.

It remains to be seen if the final will turn out to be Marta's farewell on the international stage for her country, or whether she could be tempted to keep going until the 2027 World Cup which Brazil will host.

"Marta has changed the game of soccer around the world," said Rodman of Marta, who has spent much of her club career in the United States.

Korean shooter collapses at PC

REUTERS, Seoul

South Korean Olympic silver medallist pistol shooter Kim Ye-ji, whose cool demeanour and appearance when competing at the Paris Games made her a social media sensation, collapsed at a news conference on Friday, apparently due to stress and exhaustion.

Kim was speaking at the event in Imsil, the county that she represented for seven years in the southern part of South Korea, when she collapsed, a county official said by telephone. Kim regained consciousness and was taken to hospital, he said.

The 31-year-old did not receive CPR (cardiopulmonary resuscitation) as some media reported, the official said.

Kim would stay in hospital for observation until she had recovered fully, he said, adding she was likely suffering exhaustion after participating in the Paris 2024 Olympics.

Kim who won the silver medal in the 10-metre air pistol event has become a social media phenomena due to the futuristic glasses she wears to improve precision and her cool style which earned her the nickname the "smiling assassin" at home.

On Wednesday, Kim thanked Tesla chief Elon Musk for making her famous after he said on his social media platform X that she "should be cast in an action movie. No acting required!"

Football stuck in a limbo

SPORTS REPORTER

With only 10 days left to complete the players' registration for the Bangladesh Premier League (BPL), the participating clubs are facing difficulties to complete the transfer procedure following the recent developments in the country.

Following the resignation of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina on August 6, miscreants vandalised and looted the club offices of Abahani and Sheikh Jamal Dhanmondi Club, putting them in no position to complete the players' registration formalities within the timeframe.

"We don't know what to do in this situation. We are waiting for directives from club high-ups," said Abahani football team manager Nazrul Islam.

In light of the recent developments, officials of Sheikh Russel KC, Rahmatganj MFS, Sheikh Jamal and Brothers Union have verbally requested the Bangladesh Football Federation (BFF) to extend the transfers' window, which is scheduled to close on August 19 after getting underway on June 1.

Club insiders informed that they are expecting changes in their respective committees and also have been unable to communicate with donors to secure funds for signing players.

Brothers Union manager Amer Khan said, "We have requested the federation to extend the transfer window because it will not be possible for all clubs to complete the registration within the given time."

Not just the clubs, the BFF is also going through a period of instability with senior vice president Abdus Salam Murshedy stepping down from his post a couple of hours after the Prof Muhammad Yunus-led interim government took oath on Thursday.

Members of the BFF executive committee, most of whom known as pro-Awami League organisers, have not turned up to the BFF headquarters since the resignation of Sheikh Hasina and the BFF secretariat has been carrying out the day-to-day activities in their absence.

Bangladesh has a busy schedule ahead in both age-level and senior level football with the men's under-20 and under-17 teams set to take part in separate SAFF Championships this month in Nepal and Bhutan respectively while the national men's and women's teams are supposed to play a few FIFA friendly matches in the coming months.

The BFF elections are also scheduled to take place on October 26. But now, everything seems to be up in the air.

"Some executive members visited the BFF today [yesterday] and majority of the members are expected to come tomorrow [today]. The secretariat is carrying out everything as per the directives. Bangladesh U20 team will fly for Nepal on August 16 and U17 will also fly for Bhutan in a timely manner," said BFF general secretary Emran Hasan Tushar.

"BFF executive committee is supposed to form the election commission in September and we will also hold discussions with the national team coach Javier Cabrera, who returned today [yesterday]."

Momentum, bragging rights up for grabs

AGENCIES

English football's annual curtain-raiser takes place under the famous arch of Wembley Stadium on Saturday as city rivals Manchester City and Manchester United, just 11 weeks after they met in the FA Cup final, return to the iconic stadium to do it all over again in the Community Shield, with bragging rights, momentum and a big shield on the line.

Erik ten Hag's side got their hands on the FA Cup last season, while Pep Guardiola's men celebrated winning their fourth successive Premier League title.

United ended the 2023-24 season on a high by beating red-hot favourites City 2-1 in the FA Cup final, winning the competition for the 13th time and denying the Citizens a domestic double in the process.

While the recent head-to-head result against City might give United some sense of comfort, problems lie for coach Ten Hag as he faces a defensive headache with injuries continuing to plague his side's preparations.

United are set to be without defenders Harry Maguire, Victor Lindelof, Luke Shaw, and Aaron Wan-Bissaka for the game today.

In addition, centre-back Lisandro Martinez only rejoined the squad this week after taking part in Argentina's successful defence of its Copa America crown this summer.

"From individual to individual we will assess them and make a decision whether they start, or come from the bench, or they don't play," said Ten Hag on Thursday.

Big money summer arrival Leny Yoro will definitely miss out after undergoing foot surgery this week for a knock sustained during a friendly and is unexpected to be unavailable for three months.

Meanwhile, a seventh Premier League crown in eight seasons is firmly in City's sights ahead of what could prove to be Guardiola's ninth and final year in charge of the club, but they will first be out for revenge against Man United as they attempt to win their seventh Community Shield today.

Man City concluded their pre-season tour of the United States on August 3 with a 4-2 victory over Chelsea -- coincidently their opponents on the opening weekend of the new Premier League season -- with Erling Haaland netting a hat-trick to help the Citizens register their first friendly win after failing to come out on top in previous matches against Celtic, AC Milan and Barcelona.

It has been difficult to read too much into Man City's pre-season due to the absence of several first-team stars, but some of those could make a timely return on Saturday as Guardiola's side seek to avoid losing English football's annual curtain-raiser for the fourth consecutive year.

This will be the eighth time in the history of the Community Shield that the match has been a repeat of the previous season's FA Cup final.

United will go into the Community Shield this weekend seeking to win the title for a record-extending 22nd time.

Man City have competed in the previous three Community Shield games, but didn't win any of them. Man Utd were the last team to lose four in a row (1998-2001).

Erling Haaland has been involved in nine goals in six appearances against the Red Devils (6 goals, 3 assists).

BCB pushing to keep WC hosting rights

SPORTS REPORTER

Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) is trying to make headway in communicating with the relevant authorities of the interim government over hosting the upcoming ICC Women's T20 World Cup, slated to be played in October this year.

The BCB has been in communication with International Cricket Council (ICC) over the last 10 to 15 days after the unrest in the country led to serious concerns in the ICC over Bangladesh being able to host the World Cup. ICC has reportedly already looked into alternative options to host the 10-team event.

It is understood that the ICC is in discussion to resolve the matter as early as possible as the cricket's governing body needs adequate amount of time to weigh up alternative options.

Following the fall of the Awami League government last Monday, a new interim government took oath on Thursday. The same day, the BCB wrote to Bangladesh Army Chief of Staff General Waker-Uz-Zaman regarding security assurance to host the tournament.

"We had communicated with them [the Army] but by that time the [interim] government had already been formed. Since it has been formed, they will place priority on it as required," BCB chief executive officer Nizamuddin Chowdhury told The Daily Star yesterday.

"We have communicated with them and the sooner we get a response the better we will understand the situation. We had communicated with them very late yesterday [Thursday] and there was very little time for them to go through it," he added.

With many board members absent from their offices, conducting daily activities has become a challenge for the BCB. The board, however, is still hopeful of hosting the tournament, said the BCB chief executive.

ICC is also monitoring the situation in Bangladesh and most likely is doing an independent assessment. An ICC spokesperson has said that they will make an announcement only after a decision has been made.

"ICC had sent us a letter and then we communicated with our Army chief. We will again ask tomorrow [today]. The letter that we had written was also directed to the sports ministry, Air Force, Navy and other relevant parties. So, let's see," BCB umpires' committee chairman Iftekhar Ahmed Mithu said yesterday.

Meanwhile, the Bangladesh are slated to begin their official training session for the upcoming two-Test series against Pakistan at the Sher-e-Bangla National Cricket Stadium today.

Bangladesh 'A' team, which includes many of the national Test team stars, left for Pakistan on Friday and the BCB are willing to send the national team to Pakistan ahead of schedule for the series, which begins on August 21. "We are planning is to send the team to Pakistan as early as possible. We are in discussion with the PCB and if we go early, they will facilitate it and they are happy to host," Nizamuddin informed.

Int’l community ready to work with new govt

UN, EU, US, China, Germany, Pakistan welcome it

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENT

The international community has expressed its readiness to work with the interim government and its chief Prof Muhammad Yunus who took oath on Thursday, three days after the fall of the Awami League government following an upsurge.

Calling for the end of violence at the soonest, it also urged for independent investigation into the killings during the students’ protest demanding quota reform in government jobs.

“We welcome Dr Yunus’s call for an end to the recent violence, and we stand ready to work with the interim government and Dr Yunus as it charts a democratic future for the people of Bangladesh,” State Department Spokesperson Matthew Miller told a media briefing in Washington on Thursday.

He said they have communicated with the interim government, and the US embassy Charge De’ Affaires Helen LaFave attended the swearing-in event. However, he could not say if she spoke to Prof Yunus there.

Calling for the end of violence at the soonest, int’l community also urged for an independent investigation into the killings during the students’ protest demanding quota reform protest.

Miller, however, refused to comment on the private diplomatic conversations.

EU High Representative and Foreign Policy Chief Josep Borrell also welcomed the interim government.

“Bangladesh is now entering a period of transition, and the interim government will have an important task to prepare the ground for democratic elections and ensure accountability for the deaths and violence that have occurred,” he said in a statement.

“This is an important moment for the country’s democratic path and the fulfilment of the aspirations of the people of Bangladesh and its youth.”

‘Hasina did not resign’

Claims Joy, says AL willing to work with BNP for democracy

REUTERS, New Delhi

Sheikh Hasina had not resigned as prime minister before fleeing this week to India as anti-government protesters marched on her official residence, her son and adviser told Reuters early today.

Hasina has been sheltering in New Delhi since Monday following an uprising that killed about 300 people, many of them students, ending her uninterrupted rule of 15 years in the country of 170 million people.

“My mother never officially resigned. She didn’t get the time,” Hasina’s son Sajeeb Wazed told Reuters from Washington.

“She had planned to make a statement and submit her resignation. But then the protesters started marching on the prime minister’s residence. And there was no time. My mother wasn’t even packed. As far as the constitution goes, she is still the prime minister of Bangladesh.”

He said though the president had dissolved parliament after consulting with military chiefs and opposition politicians, the formation of a caretaker government without the prime minister actually formally resigning “can be

“Shadhinata orjoner cheye rokkha kora kathin”

This is a saying in Bangla that students learn in textbooks at a very early age, which means “Freedom is harder to protect than to earn”.

But they didn’t memorise the verse just for the sake of it, thousands of Bangladeshi students across the country are now living by it and passing sleepless nights to safeguard the freedom.

In July, Young people like Abu Sayed, Mugdho, Priyo and others were killed by law enforcers and Awami League activists when they took to the streets for a discrimination free Bangladesh.

But students did not back down.

On August 3, they delivered a clear message to Sheikh Hasina: “Quit now”.

Revolution was in the air as people from all walks of life -- guardians with children, rickshaw pullers, workers, day labourers, office-goers, and others -- joined in masses, rallying behind the youth waving the national flag.

On August 4, the streets of Dhaka seemed to converge on Shahbagh, the epicentre of the uprising, as the area turned into a sea of people. By evening, reports of injuries and deaths began to surface.

At one point, bodies were being piled up in front of the Central Shaheed Minar.

Dozens were dying, but in the midst of it all, the students issued a call: “March towards Dhaka” on August 5.

Students barely slept on the night of August 4. They braced for the worst, but they were not afraid.

Defying police, Awami League activists, and the BGB, hundreds of thousands began marching toward Dhaka on August 5.

There were reports of police firing in the morning, but then the winds began to change. Suddenly, law enforcers stepped aside, and the army allowed protesters to march toward Gono Bhaban.

By that time, people sensed freedom -- they knew something big was coming. They cheered, they marched on, singing and dancing in the streets.

And in the afternoon, the announcement came: “Sheikh Hasina has resigned and fled to India”.

The streets, once filled with fear, were now alive with a sense of freedom.

As the day wore on, the atmosphere shifted from one of defiance to one of celebration.

Fear was replaced by joy, and the streets that had once echoed with cries for justice now reverberated with songs of freedom.

People danced, sang, and embraced one another. Strangers became friends, and the city was united in a way it had never been before. Sweets were distributed, and tears of happiness flowed as the young generation celebrated their newfound sense of empowerment. Initially, it was a day of pure, unadulterated joy -- a day when hope triumphed over despair.

But as the celebrations continued, the reality of the situation began to set in.

In the beginning, the scenes of people storming the Gono Bhaban seemed to be entertaining. Then news of vandalising temples, houses and establishments started coming in.

The Bangabandhu Memorial Museum on Dhanmondi 32 was burnt to ashes. Cultural heritages came under attack. State infrastructures were vandalised and looted. Police stations were being attacked. People, associated with AL and Hasina, and law enforcers, were being beaten to death.

Police left their post, the country was essentially without a government for 72 hours, and the streets descended into chaos.

The students realised they might have won a battle, but the war for lasting change had only just begun.

There was a renewed sense of purpose among the youth. They had tasted freedom, and they were determined to protect it at all costs.

PROTECTING TEMPLES

Al Mahmud Taha, a recent graduate of Dhaka University, was celebrating when he first heard news of temples being vandalised.

Wasting no time, he mobilised a group of peers and headed for Dhakeshwari temple.

With a group of 25, which included Islamic scholars and imams of nearby mosques, they guarded the place all night.

Similarly, the youth from across the country tried to protect temples near them.

Tasneem Abedin Razu, an activist in the anti-government movement from Mirpur, woke up on August 6 with a sense of urgency. His first action was to visit nearby mosques to mobilise imams, muezzins, and Islamic scholars. He then gathered the activists he knew and formed a team dedicated to safeguarding the temples in Mirpur. Additionally, Razu visited nearby minority homes, providing residents with the contact numbers of young volunteers who could offer assistance.

Similar scenes of students guarding places of worship were seen in front of Ramna Kali Temple and ISKCON Swamibag Temple in Dhaka.

In Chattogram, students, armed with sticks, were seen guarding the Nandirhaat and Fatehabad temples.

In Cumilla, Muslim clerics and students were seen guarding the temples all night.

RESTORING ORDER, MANAGING TRAFFIC

On August 6, approximately 200 students took on security duties at various police stations, churches, and temples in Mirpur.

“We’ve been stationed at Mirpur Police Station and all churches and temples in Mirpur since 9:00am,” said a student.

The police station had been set on fire by a mob the previous night.

In the aftermath, students found an abandoned firearm, damaged firearms, ammunition, a grenade, and a walkie-talkie, and have requested that the army take custody of these items.

Similar scenes were seen in front of Jatrabari Police Station and beyond.

The same day, students returned 40 firearms taken away by miscreants from the National Parliament on August 5.

They handed over the firearms to the security team at the parliament.

Students also cleaned the premises of the Jatiya Sangsad Bhaban, which was ransacked by a mob on Monday following Hasina’s resignation.

Several photos of students voluntarily cleaning the iconic building were doing rounds on social media. They were seen sweeping the ground and cleaning open spaces of the important structure.

A number of volunteers were also seen collecting valuables that had been looted from Gono Bhaban and the parliament. Some people, who looted the valuables, were seen handing over those to the volunteers, who then returned them to the authorities.

Students also took on the role of traffic management, taking positions at every key intersection in the capital and beyond.

They created separate lanes for different types of vehicles, bringing back the memories of the 2018 road safety movement.

They stopped bikers for not wearing helmets, intercepted rickshaws for plying the wrong direction and urged pedestrians to use footbridges.

Ali Wasif, a college student, said, “This is our country. Our brothers gave lives for this country. We won’t let this country descend into chaos as long as we have life in our body.” He was managing traffic at Panthapath intersection. “We will safeguard our hard-earned freedom.”

Commuters were gladly following their directions. Nahidul Islam, a private job holder, said, “It’s heartwarming that these young people took the duty into their hands in the absence of traffic personnel.”

ROBBERY WATCHOUT

Amid rising concerns of robberies in various Dhaka neighborhoods, including Mirpur, Mohammadpur, Uttara, and Dhanmondi, residents, mostly the youth, have been staying up all night to protect their communities. With police essentially absent, locals are using mosque loudspeakers and social media networks to warn of potential attacks.

“Last night around 2:00am, we heard an announcement from the mosques that robbers had entered the neighbourhood. We then went out onto the streets with sticks,” said Shaheen, a resident of East Shewrapara.

Residents in Uttara and Mohammadpur have also experienced robberies, with locals responding quickly by patrolling the streets.

Many school and college goers were seen playing football and cricket the whole night as a means to guard the streets.

A resident of Mohammadpur mentioned that robbers entered the area from different directions around 12:30am early yesterday, but people came out of their homes with sticks and chased away the robbers.

Residents in Uttara said robberies took place late at night at Sector 7. Afterwards, the mosques made announcements asking everyone to stay alert in Sectors 11, 12, and 14.

Tahmid Islam, a resident of Uttara, said he and many others patrolled the area the whole night.

Meanwhile in Dhanmondi, Kalbagan and Kathalbagan, locals were seen patrolling the area.

STAY-AWAY EXTORTIONISTS

Just a day after Hasina’s resignation, a group claiming to be activists of a party reportedly tried to extort money from traders at Meradia Bazar in Rampura.

According to traders, Ideal School and College students, who had been patrolling the area, quickly intervened and chased the extortionists away.

The students provided their contact numbers to the traders, assuring them of support if any further trouble arose.

Similarly, students launched a Facebook group called “Chadabaji Nirodhon Response Team”, aimed at forming quick-response teams to counter extortionists across Dhaka and beyond. What started with just 100 members quickly ballooned to 87,000 within two days.

Meanwhile, the students of Dhaka University were also guarding different dormitories of the campus to make sure outsiders with different party affiliations do not take over the dormitories and bring back the culture of repression on campuses.

Pavel, a recent graduate, said he and his juniors have patrolled DU streets for the last few nights to ensure no one can further vandalise sculptures and engage in mugging or extortions.

“Enough is enough, we want a safe campus, free from student politics,” he told this correspondent.

REFLECTIONS

Rabindranath's rebellion

On 'Home and The World's' treatment of revolutionary fervour

SHAHRIAR SHAAMS

Too deftly, Rabindranath shifts gears just as the reader gets comfortable with the turmoil at home. The world bangs on the door incessantly and its calls to be invited in brings about a chaotic development. The turning point, if one has to choose one, is when Sandip asks Bimala for money, funds to carry out the noble work of this fight for freedom, for the country, swadesh.

"The liberation that comes through sorrow is greater than the sorrow," says Nikhilesh, in Home and the World. I quote from Penguin's Modern Classics edition, in Sreejata Guha's translation. Tagore's liberal-minded, university-educated zamindar is a disciple of restraint and weariness, yet this line does not sound out of sync from Nikhilesh, whose heartbreak can also speak for the troubled swadeshi protesters he is so against. Re-reading the novel during such a perilous time, I was moved greatly by Rabindranath's trio of protagonists: through Nikhilesh's hesitancies that reflect well the attitudes of his class and their newfound "modernity", through his wife Bimala—egged on to come out to the "world" with him and leave the contours of homes all too familiar to women—and through Sandip, the brash revolutionary and agitator, hanging around Nikhilash's estate (one can almost say squatting) and flattering Bimala enough to win her over with talks of revolution and freedom.

Rabindranath is for every occasion. Nowhere does it feel truer to me than in Home and the World, whose backdrop of political turmoil only strengthens the personal dynamic between a zamindar with a sobering "conscience" and his insurrectionary friend, Sandip. Perhaps, it is testament to Rabindranath's power—an effervescent prose which overwhelms all senses—that a reader is often undecided whether the poet's attacks and denigrations are his own or the expected predispositions of the 'bhodro shomaj' who read him with delight.

Home and the World, much like its author, provides multitudes of reflections, analyses, and reactions. The wrecking of Nikhilesh and Bimala's marriage when Sandip makes his mark in the estate seems to often to be washed away under the waves of nationalist fervour that much of the later half of the novel concerns itself with. I went into the novel to dwell on the former, but Rabindranath's treatment of Sandip did in the end force a few words out of me.

Home and the World begins with Nikhilesh encouraging his wife Bimala to step outside into the world, to engage with their enlightened contemporaries and become more of an equal partner to him in the process intellectually. It is a liberal urge that hides the fact that Nikhilesh's idea of equality is strictly on his terms and excludes any real independence for Bimala. This friction occurs when Sandip's charms propels Bimala to adopt ideals Nikhilesh is at unease with. Nikhilesh, meek as he is, outright refuses when Bimala requests they stop stocking foreign cloth in his estate's market. He believes that "the words that Bimala spoke in the name of the country, were coming from Sandip's mouth and not form a greater idea." An insecurity develops. Stumbling upon his wife in the garden later on in the novel, Nikhilesh blurts out, "Bimala, my cage here is walled from all sides—how can I keep you here? You cannot live like this."

Home and the World, then, already succeeds in conjuring up a great many conversations on the extent of ownership of one another in a marriage.

Too deftly, Rabindranath shifts gears just as the reader gets comfortable with the turmoil at home. The world bangs on the door incessantly and its calls to be invited in brings about a chaotic development. The turning point, if one has to choose one, is when Sandip asks Bimala for money, funds to carry out the noble work of this fight for freedom, for the country, swadesh. It is the very moment when the home and the world are entwined together significantly. It is also when Sandip stops being a person and becomes, instead, little more than a caricature. A greedy, materialist demeanour is sketched over him. "He had the divine scabbard," Bimala thinks, "but the weapon in it was the devil's." All talk of supposed revolution is set aside as Sandip dreams: "I want to have fifty thousand rupees in my hands and blow it in two days, on my own comforts and a few deeds for the country. I want to shed this poor man's disguise and look at the real me, the rich me, in the mirror just once."

Why does Rabindranath make him so crass later on? Is it so that Bimala's passion has a rude awakening and she returns to the comforts of her household? And if so, why must she have this reality-check in the first place? Rabindranath's own experiences during the movement to boycott British goods had apparently left him horrified. He felt, as Anita Desai wrote in a preface for a 1985 edition, "that the boycott of cheap British goods in favour of expensive and poorly made Indian goods was harming the interests of the poor, to whom Swadeshi was an abstract, distant and meaningless term." This explains his sympathies with a Nikhilesh he feels so attuned with. Rabindranath's rebellion here has been to completely identify with the zamindar against what he saw as misguided, though earnest, attempts at snatching up self-government by force. Sandip's charisma must, at this point, become witchcraft. Though the theft at the heart of the novel starts as a matter of the home, we find Sandip—the pied piper of "the world"—come out of the ordeal as reckless, predatory, almost evil. He is a boogeyman of the bhodrolok, who must hold him up to discredit an entire revolutionary spirit. Most other revolutionaries of this movement must be discounted as such, too, for Sandip serves satisfactorily as a representative figure. They must defame and deny Sandip the compassion and sentimentality that Nikhilesh is offered easily. Ultimately, Home and the World's Sandip is a brute with no serious vision for nation-building. All too often, and perhaps too close for comfort, we have seen a similar denial of humanity, the rebuffing of dignity, and a refusal to truly see contemporary revolutionaries with good intentions. They are shown to be people you cannot trust. Similar to Sandip, the powers that be paint them as the liberal's favourite kind of vulgarity—a radical.

There was complete silence around the time of your birth the way there was complete silence when you lied for the first time. You opened your eyes scared that the ants would hunt them down—egg-white and so in love with the hurricane lamps your mother would bring out for your father to fill with kerosene. You were born like a waterlogged city, you were born with silence in your mouth. You lied like a city still holding on to the rain, soaked lamps and the monsoon gods bleeding. Over time, it will become a part of you—that's what the rain does, your father tells you one day, drenched on his way home, his shadow

now touching yours, the closest you have been, it lingers.
And then your eyes—egg-white and so in love with this silence finds you as you tell yourself that this, your eyes and the rain, must be love.

Dawn of new (?) air

SNATA BASU

Do you need water? I have water!
He opens his chest to a row of searing bullets, he dies like a raven...we wield fists in their memory, voices escape blood canals. We bundle like fleets of flies in the woods of a distant free world where vigils are carried on the shoulders of our heads, and shoulders of their bodies, pealing in our ears like a scene from the cinema–a scene from an abattoir.
A scene where houses are torched to the ground because there used to be an altar there, where someone once sank to their knees asking after a god,
a prayer plant in each corner where the sun looped in a dozen pleats.
For two days I don't eat a morsel,
and my skin collapses by the bones,
I start losing my face—I look as cold as a corpse,
as this city solvates in silence and hoots,
sometimes on the streets and sometimes at our doors.
Teetering in between the time I spent on the comfort of my bed the last few days, trying to heal reading
Didion's narratives, shedding a tear every time she says 'father', a gaping lacuna of promises sails by, the last few days are all I keep.
I remember that there is a Hindu family by our windows whose calls of shankho trumpet the moving air during pray-hours, and someone asks
'Well, hell! Do they have to be so loud?'

and I say, yes, because this is their house.
And you might not have seen the light of our homes glittering in the horizon during Dashera,
on Kali Pujo,
when the floors turn floral,
and there's music everywhere.
You might not have read about the pillaging of our long legacies that the wrath of faith has eaten, of tribe ingestion of preservers,
of the torchings of Devi Maa's hull,
but talks of harmony flood your nose.
Harmony, harmony, harmony—you want it so bad, and so you put words in our mouths—speak this and speak that! This is for the loving of our land.
The joining of our hands.
There's a reason we collapse time and time again,
our hearts ransacked by the crisscrossing of treachery, leaving behind lesions you will never heal or carry or live through.
You hail this spirit of new light that is your own,
as a new dawn of incongruity nears, you let it sink through simply because you can.

The Long March but Short Flight

New political party 'Afsos league' announced by former AL supporters

MESSENGER LURKER

A section of former Awami League supporters, who consider themselves free thinkers, progressives, etc. and who also joined the students in demanding resignation of Hasina, have now decided to open a new political party, the Afsos League.

In a press conference held on the streets of Lalmatia at 2:30am, while patrolling for dacoits, they informed reporters "is this the freedom we wanted?"

Supreme convener of the party Manushua Babir spoke at length with reporters about the rationale behind starting the party.

"Immediately after Hasina fell, we rejoiced so much because we didn't want a fascist leader either. But then I soon found out that this was all a CIA plot to make this into an extremist and fundamentalist state," says Babir, who had also joined the Long March to Dhaka.

"How is this a free country? I can't sleep at night fearing that BNP-Jamaat will come back, that I will have to hide my tattoos. Hasina, while she killed many people, at least kept the extremists at bay," they added.

The leaders of the Afsos League also spoke at length about how the toppling of the regime was an outside act and how some former staunch supporters of AL knew about this before and warned them. But they were too quick to judge Hasina for the atrocities she unleashed on her own people -- killing at least 450 people in a matter of weeks.

They also questioned that if the revolution really was for better days, then how could another equally rotten political party immediately get so much limelight.

The correspondent who filed this report was also very, very worried and has no answers to the above questions.

Last reported, the correspondent is considering joining the Afsos League, because they don't want another tyrannical regime after toppling one.

Meanwhile, an anti-student movement has started because their revolution has not solved all the problems the country faces, like, immediately. Activists of the movement began marching through the streets yesterday morning with a banner reading "Was this the plan?"

Activists said things like, "What do these pipsqueaks know. The traffic was much better before they took over. Was this the plan?"

All of the members of this new group are middle-aged men.

Tyrant wakes up after 15 years, becomes good person

WORRIED CORRESPONDENT

A tyrant who was on a drip of liquefied sleeping pills for the last 15 years because another tyrant had usurped him, woke up on August 7 and became a good person.

Wandering out with puffed up eyes, he came out of his balcony to see thousands of people, who had come to see him because a mass uprising had sent the other tyrant flying out of the country.

Knowing that he was on the cusp of becoming a tyrant again, he smiled, and opened his playbook.

"There will be no violence," he said to the crowd, and muttered "for now" under his breath.

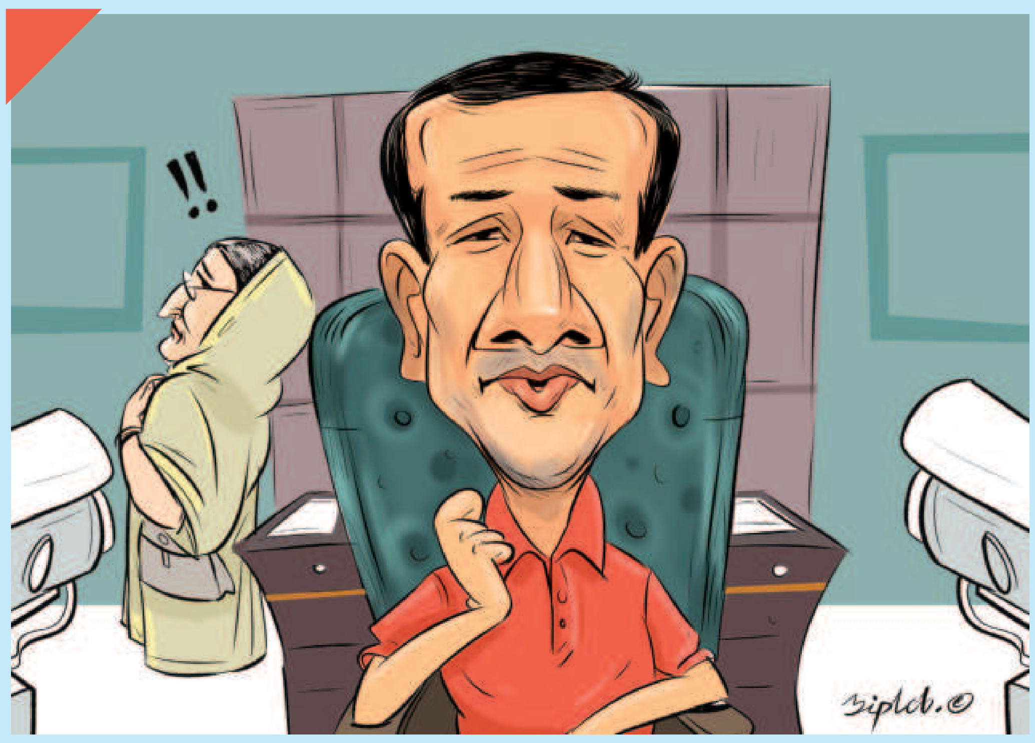
"No revenge, only..." he had to look into the book. "What's that... oh, love and peace."

"The students are our future..." he said to uproarious applause.

"Enemies," he muttered away from the microphone, smiled, and went back in.

Hey, this is Jay from Hinge

AAQIB HASIB



"Did you know babe, I am actually older than my age on Hinge. And because I am very fit, which everyone tells me all the time, everyone always guesses that is my age," said Jay, staring into the mirror, trying to fix his hairline.

I didn't know what to do. I had just told him that I was breaking up with him, but he just simply went back to talking like nothing had happened.

"Hey, Jay, listen. I don't know if you hear me or not, so I am gonna repeat myself," I said, my voice getting louder. I was so tired of this.

"After everything that you and your mother have put me through in the last 15 years, even if it seems abrupt, I am done. I am not SAYING we should break up. I am telling you we ARE broken up. IT'S OVER," I said, mouthing out that last word.

Suddenly, a look of absolute menace creeped up on his face, one I was all too familiar with. He looked so damned stupid with that look on his face. I almost wanted to punch him.

"What the hell do you mean? Who the hell do you think you are? I don't even want you. Me and my mother, we don't want or need you. After everything we have done, you treat us like this? There is something wrong with you people. Who is influencing you? Jamal or that Zead guy at work?" he yelled, a look of fury on his face.

"I mean all of the gaslighting, manipulation, lies, physical abuse, hurting my friends. How can you even believe that I would still want to be with you. I am surprised it took me this long, but I guess that is what Stockholm Syndrome is. We are done. Please leave my house and take your mother with you," I replied, bravely.

This dude is an absolutely crazy person.

"You didn't even pay me for all the work I did on your house for free. Prachy, you are so ungrateful. You don't deserve me or my mother. We are done with you. You're going to become the next Paki," he said, spitting on the floor.

Jay, if that even was his real name, walked out of the room, slamming the door shut behind him.

I breathed a sigh of relief, it was over. They were going to be gone. I was going to be free.

Within a second Jay re-entered the room, a look of fury on his face.

"No, I changed my mind. You belong to me. We have too much history together. 15 years of success. You are nothing without us. I won't stay in this house tonight and my mother won't come back. But we are not done. The Shawami League sends its regards. Remember that," he said, his skin almost snakelike from all the venom he was spitting at me.

"And don't you ever speak about my mommy like that," he said, wagging a finger at my face, before finally leaving. Hopefully for good.

Satire not satiring the same after the fall of Awami League

AFIZAN HADIAR

After the wave of excitement ended and things started to get serious with the new interim government, satire writers seem to have been at a loss on what to make fun of.

This is what satire writers from different top dailies in the country had to say.

"It's not the same thrill anymore. I miss the rush of possibly being killed or disappeared at the hands of the government for making fun of them," said satire writer Chuppu Chup from The Daily First light.

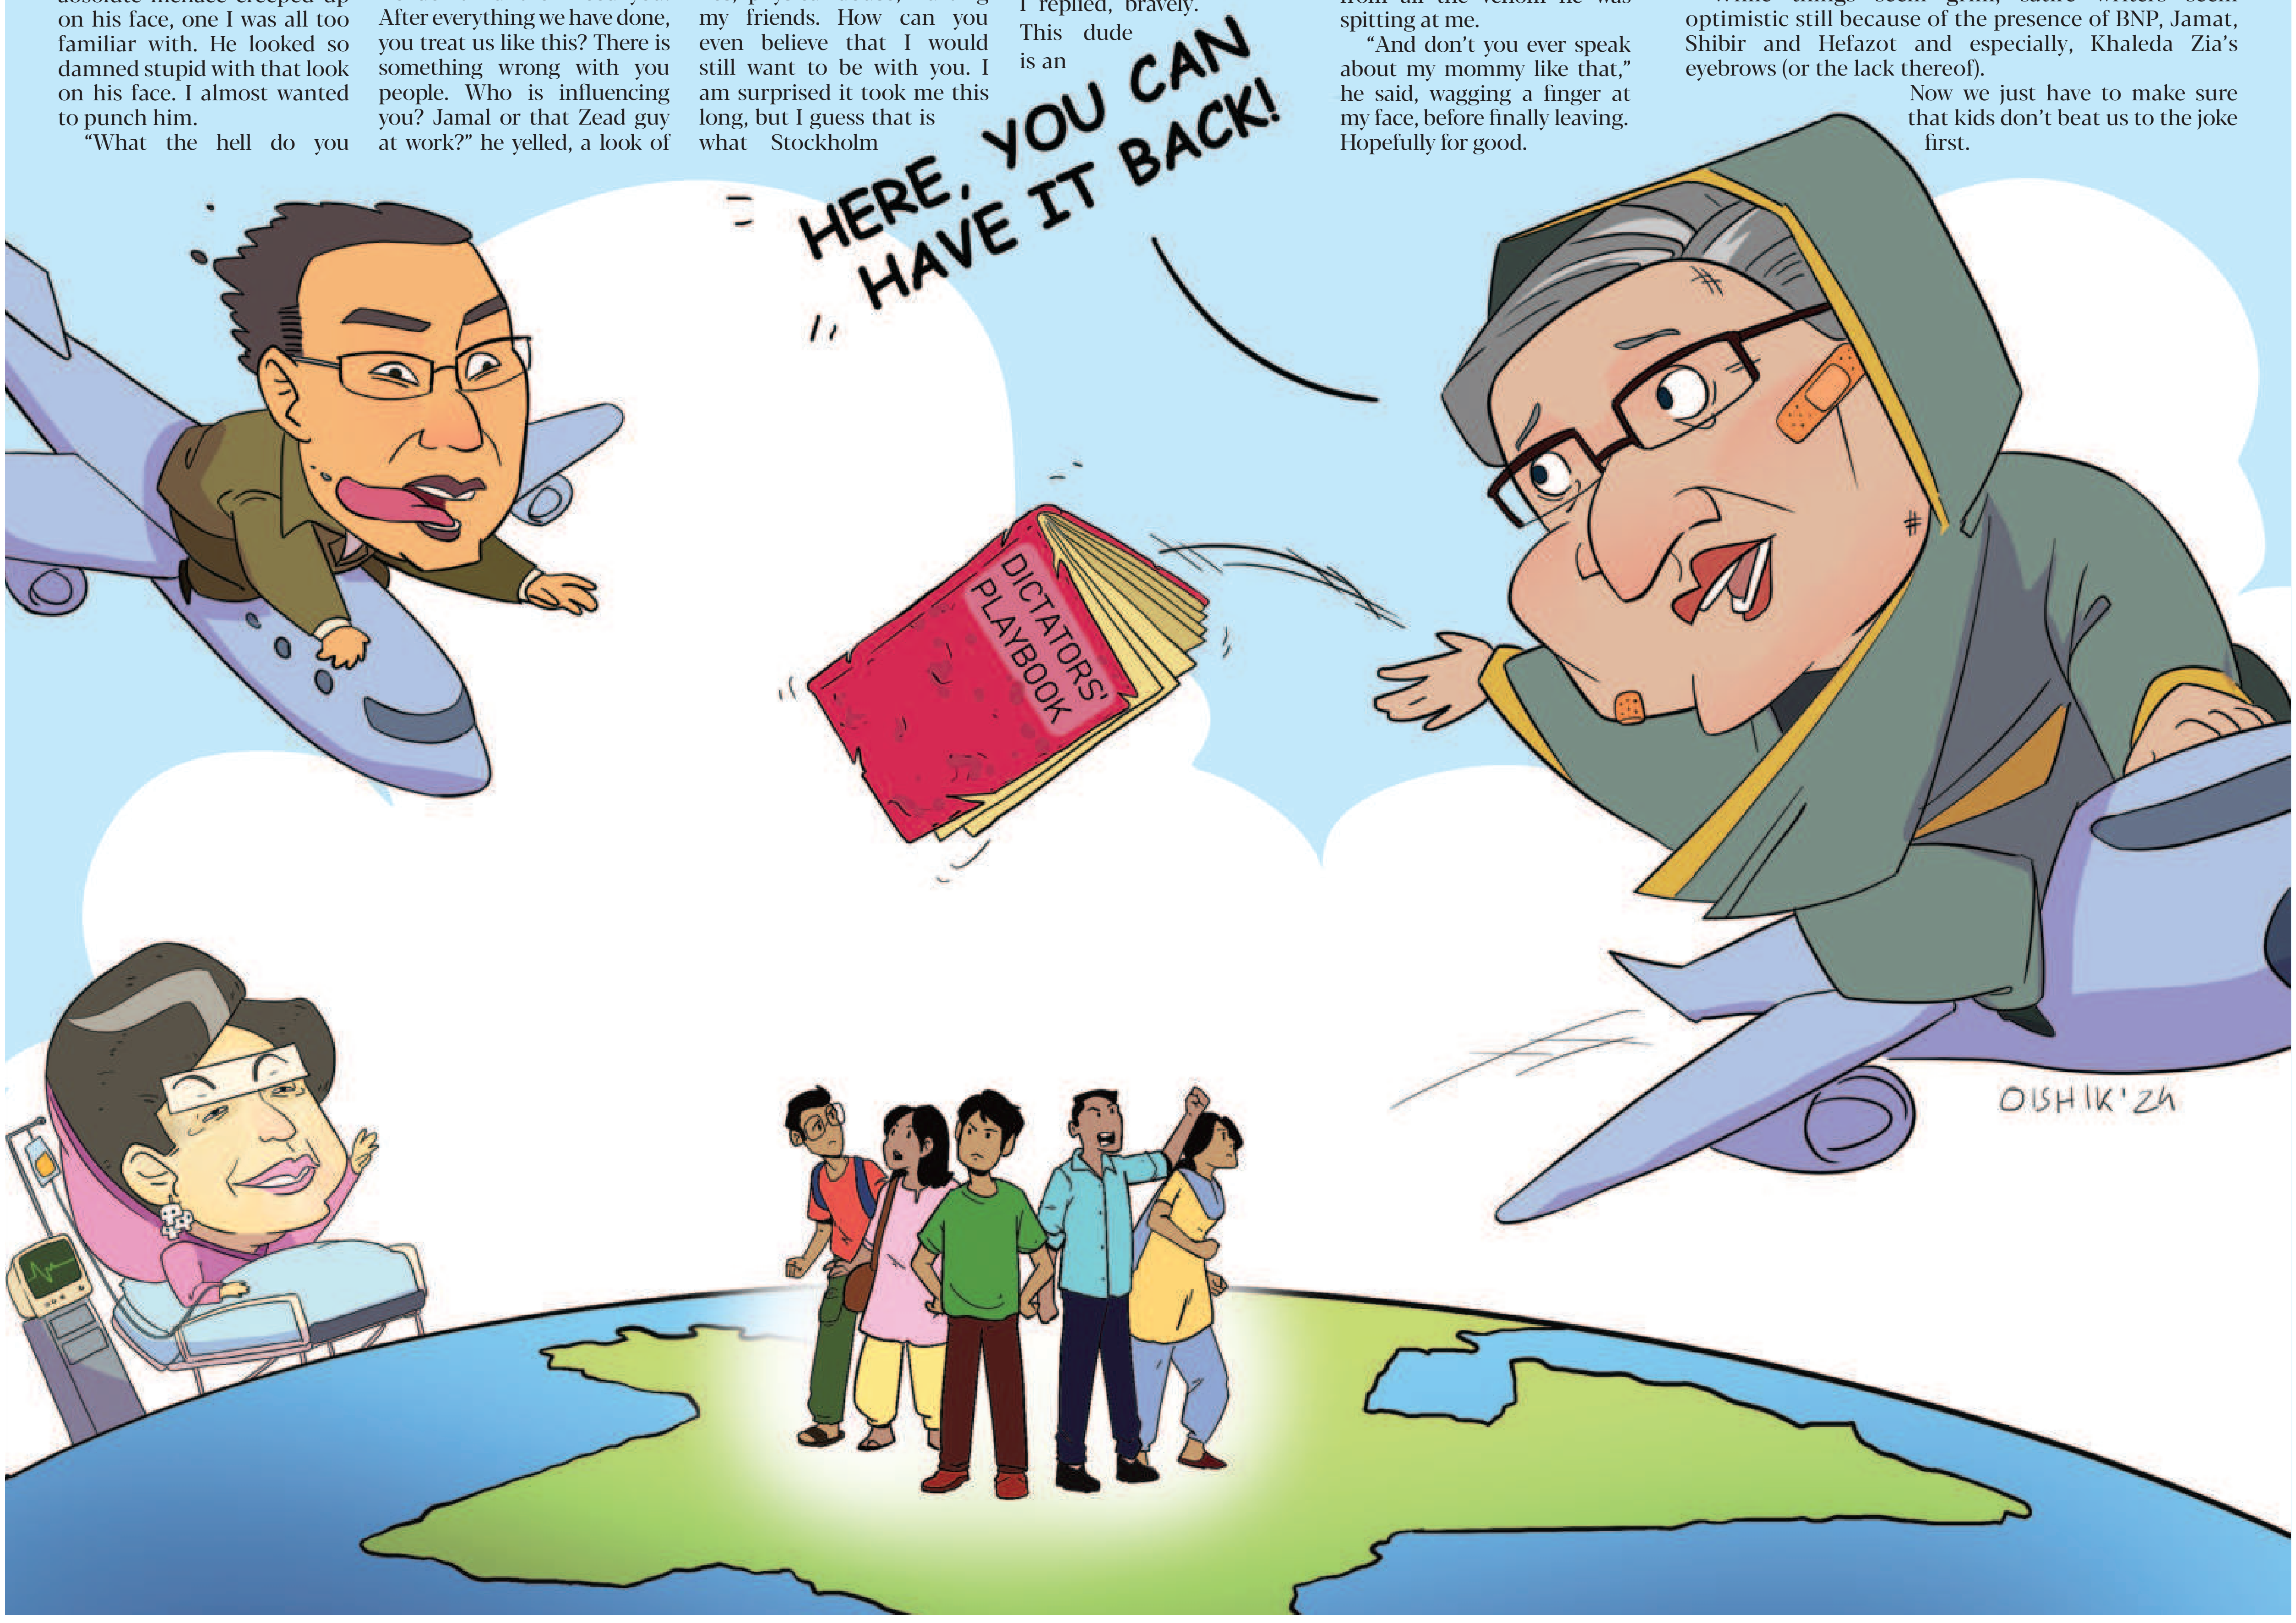
"Things are so safe now that we can literally name names when we criticise the government. There's no repression of freedom of speech yet. I mean how can we even write satire without repression," said another correspondent from The Daily NotunBoyosh.

The two correspondents discussed the golden days when this paper was threatened to be sued by Mayor Taposh for criticising his move to cut down trees in Dhaka city in a satire piece.

Tasher Naziba, the writer of the satire piece, said, "Man, there's no menacing around anymore. There's so much positivity going around that I'm starting to fear satire writers will go out of business."

While things seem grim, satire writers seem optimistic still because of the presence of BNP, Jamat, Shibir and Hefazot and especially, Khaleda Zia's eyebrows (or the lack thereof).

Now we just have to make sure that kids don't beat us to the joke first.



LEDGER OF LOSSES

Prolonged unrest, curfew and internet outage dealt a huge blow to Bangladesh's economy

STAR BUSINESS REPORT

Bangladesh has entered a new chapter in its journey as the wheels of the economy are rolling again, with the country still healing from fresh wounds.

The recent three-week student movement ultimately forced Sheikh Hasina to resign and flee the country, ending her 15-year rule.

The movement began with the students seeking reforms to the quota system for civil service jobs, citing that it was discriminatory.

The Awami League government responded by showing its iron fist in the form of Bangladesh Chhatra League in a bid to end the agitation.

However, tempers only flared further as the ensuing violence led to the deaths of more than 300 people by the time Hasina eventually fled on August 5. As of August 7, The Daily Star confirmed at least 551 deaths.

And while value of the lives lost is immeasurable, the prolonged unrest dealt a huge blow to Bangladesh's roughly $450 billion economy.

According to official estimates, the country suffered losses of over $1 billion daily after economic activities were halted amid the violence and subsequent government curfew between mid-July and early August.

This is because the lack of public safety and an internet outage had forced factories to shut down for nearly a week.

Besides, import-export activities, the supply of agricultural produce and release of goods from ports were all disrupted.

Needless to say, most retail outlets, restaurants, digital commerce and other sectors also suffered significant losses.

কারফিউ জারির জন্য:
কারখানা বন্ধ।

Ahsan H Mansur, executive director of the Policy Research Institute of Bangladesh, said if the destruction of property is taken into account, then the economic losses may actually be even higher than the estimate.

Before the second wave of supply chain disruptions started, the Foreign Investors' Chamber of Commerce and Industries (FICCI) estimated Bangladesh's total losses at above $10 billion.

Although it is clear that the losses must have piled on following the second wave of closures, the FICCI is yet to estimate the additional amount.

Similarly, the thousands that were injured and the hundreds who became handicapped or lost their eyesight also sustained tremendous losses.

The economic impact of the turmoil on several sectors is provided below.

GARMENTS SECTOR

The primary textile sector faced losses worth $58.8 million for having to shut down their mills for four days due to the violence and curfew during the first round of protests.

The Bangladesh Textile Mills Association (BTMA) is yet to assess the losses from the second round, when the mills were shuttered amid another spell of violence for four days.

During the first round of protests, the apparel sector lost Tk 6,400 crore as their production units were shut.

The indirect losses are even more, said SM Mannan Kochi, president of the Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association (BGMEA), during a press conference held at the time.

Other than being able to continue production, local apparel exporters suffered for a lack of communication with their international clothing retailers and brands amid the internet blackout.

Many local suppliers could not book work orders from the retailers and brands during the internet outage as July, August and September are considered as the peak seasons for booking work orders for the next summer and spring seasons.

Both local and international retailers and brands also faced difficulties in shipping goods from Chattogram port because of the violence and curfew.

As a result, many apparel suppliers had to use expensive air shipments, faced work order cancellations or offered big discounts to their international buyers.

ICT SECTOR

The ICT sector was dealt a huge blow, especially when the government shut down the internet in a bid to quell the protests.

The government blocked mobile internet services on July 17 amid widespread violence over the quota reform protests. A day later, broadband internet was shut down, severely affecting public life and a wide range of economic activities, including utility bill payments, online banking, international communications, digital commerce and the clearance of goods from ports.

Digital commerce entrepreneurs, software makers, F-commerce entrepreneurs, business process outsourcing companies, telecom companies and freelancers were also significantly affected by the government-enforced internet blackout.

The government restored broadband internet on a limited scale on July 23.

However, social media services like Facebook, TikTok, WhatsApp and YouTube were blocked across the country.

Mobile internet finally resumed on July 28 while social media platforms were unblocked on July 31.

Suddenly, in the morning of August 2, mobile internet users were unable to access their Facebook and Messenger accounts for approximately seven hours.

Again, on August 5, the latest outage occurred, lasting only a few hours, during which former prime minister Sheikh Hasina fled the country.

These moves severely damaged the reputation of many export-oriented IT firms while many internet-based businesses lost significant revenue.

According to the ICT and telecommunications ministry, the sector faced financial losses of Tk 18,000 crore.

However, many in the sector said that figure is exaggerated.

The biggest blow, according to industry insiders, is the damage to the ICT sector's image on the global stage.

Meanwhile, the Bangladesh Association of Software and Information Services (BASIS) said its members incurred Tk 500 crore in losses during the five-day internet blackout.

According to the e-Commerce Association of Bangladesh (e-CAB), the sector suffered a loss of approximately Tk 1,700 crore during the 13 days in July when the internet was disrupted.

The e-CAB said about 95 percent of e-commerce transactions remained suspended due to various factors, including a countrywide curfew and security concerns.

The e-CAB has initiated a survey to assess the full extent of the damage.

Ride-hailing companies and e-courier services also took a huge blow from the internet shutdown.

BANKING SECTOR

Industry insiders said all the losses in the banking sector could not be estimated in monetary terms. In a recent meeting with the central bank, bankers said that ATM booths were destroyed and two or three officials died.

Pubali Bank Managing Director Mohammad Ali recently said the internet blackout adversely affected the banking sector as well as banks' profitability.

Bankers and officials of mobile financial service (MFS) providers said their remittance collection remained suspended from midnight of July 18, when the internet shutdown was imposed, to July 23, when broadband services were partially reinstated.

"We were unable to collect inward remittance for five days amid the internet shutdown but the remittance flow became normal when broadband internet was made available," said Selim RF Hussain, managing director of BRAC Bank.

Around $80 million to $100 million in remittances are sent to Bangladesh on a regular day, which was disrupted for the internet shutdown, he added.

Amid the internet shutdown, people were unable to conduct online banking. A lot of ATM booths were also shut while others ran out of cash.

An official of a leading MFS provider said they mobilise Tk 5 crore to Tk 7 crore in remittances on a normal day but it had come down to Tk 80 lakh due to slow internet.

STOCK MARKET

Although trading at the stock market was disrupted due to the countrywide movement, the main problem occurred due to a loss in production of listed firms, said Saiful Islam, president of the DSE Brokers' Association (DBA).

"It has a long-term impact."

Due to the loss in production, their business will be hampered, so shareholders will be the worst sufferers.

On the other hand, financial institutions may face a huge blow after the regime change as many influential and big borrowers may flee.

If banks become weak, it would be very alarming for the market, he added.

INSURANCE SECTOR

A top official of a leading insurance company, who is also a leader of the Bangladesh Insurance Association, said premium income in the life insurance sector dropped 30 percent in the last three weeks compared to the previous three weeks.

Insurance claims in the non-life insurance sector increased by at least 15 percent as people's assets are being vandalised, set ablaze and destroyed.

If the second wave of the movement is considered, the loss will be much higher as the vandalism and arson rose in the last three days.

Sheikh Kabir Hossain, president of the Bangladesh Insurance Association, said the insurance sector has suffered greatly due to the unstable situation.

Many customers did not renew their policies during this period, he said, adding that naturally, no one will open a new life insurance policy in this situation.

Hossain said work is underway to estimate how much the insurance sector has suffered financially during this volatile situation.

Md Jalalul Azim, managing director of Pragati Life Insurance, said: "Our colleagues could not get out of their house as the situation was very unpredictable in all regards."

Whenever there is political unrest in the country, even if people have money in hand, they will not spend. It is natural. Overall, business has suffered greatly, he added.

RETAIL SECTOR

Retailers were severely impacted since they could not open shops. Sometimes, they opened their doors for a short time. A huge number of people are connected with the retail service sector so all of them were affected.

According to Bangladesh Dokan Malik Samity, a platform of shop owners, the sector counted losses of Tk 2,000 crore per day.

MANUFACTURING SECTOR

Asif Ibrahim, chairman of the Chittagong Stock Exchange, said one of the most important tasks for the nation is to now ensure that economic activities, particularly manufacturing and service sectors, return to business as usual.

"We must assure the countries that we trade with that Bangladesh's private sector is back in business and will fulfil all the commitments to our international customers."

"Now, we want to strongly emphasise to the international business community that the private sector of Bangladesh is resilient. It is the engine of growth of the economy and will continue to be so," he added.

Zahid Hussain, a former lead economist of the World Bank's Dhaka office, said the economy was already in crisis and the recent political turmoil had caused the situation to deteriorate further.

Social equity and justice need to be ensured. Internet connection and other communications should not be disrupted further while education should be resumed with full priority.

Such measures would provide confidence to people and normalise economic activity.

Now, everything should be operational. The metro rail and elevated expressway in Dhaka as well as railways and all other connections should be operational as soon as possible, he added.

CJ, 5 other SC judges resign

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan and five other judges of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court stepped down yesterday amid student protests for their resignation.

They sent resignation letters to President Mohammed Shahabuddin through the law ministry and he accepted their resignations.

The development comes only two days after the interim government took charge.

The five other judges are: Justice M Enayetur Rahim, Justice Md Abu Zafor Siddique, Justice Jahangir Hossain Selim, Justice Md Shahinur Islam and Justice Kashefa Hussain.

The Appellate Division was left with Justice Md Ashfaqul Islam only.

Media reports last night said Justice Ashfaqul also resigned, but Law Secretary Golam Sarwar told The Daily Star at 10:30pm that he had not received any resignation letter from Justice Ashfaqul.

The president last night appointed Justice Syed Refaat Ahmed as the 25th chief justice.

The proceedings of the Appellate Division and the High Court Division of the Supreme Court have been suspended since July 22, a day after the apex court delivered a landmark verdict downsizing quotas in government jobs.

On Thursday, the full bench of the Appellate Division gave its opinion in favour of forming an interim government and a swearing-in ceremony.

The interim government led by Nobel laureate Prof Muhammad Yunus took oath the same day, three days after Sheikh Hasina resigned as the prime minister amid a mass uprising.

On Friday, Justice Obaidul Hassan called for a virtual full court meeting of all the Appellate Division and High Court judges to decide whether the functions of the courts could resume virtually after the weekend, Justice Hassan told this newspaper.

Interim govt to stay as long as needed

Says law adviser

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Law adviser Asif Nazrul yesterday said the interim government will stay as long as it is needed.

People want reforms and the political parties want an election, he said, adding that the interim government will balance between the two and make decisions accordingly.

The tenure of the interim government had not been discussed yet, he told reporters at the Secretariat.

"Please keep two things in mind: political parties will expect an election as soon as possible and the common people desire reforms. People expect some urgent reforms from this government," said the adviser for law, justice and parliamentary affairs.

"We have seen police, judiciary, anti-corruption commission, public universities and other institutions being used as weapons to torture and oppress people.

Six congressmen and senators have urged the US authorities to impose sanctions on Awami League General Secretary Obaidul Quader and former home minister Asaduzzaman Khan for their roles in "gross human rights violations" during the recent protests in Bangladesh.

They have sent a letter to the US Secretary of State and Secretary of Treasury Janet Yellen in this regard.

"The use of violent force against peaceful protesters exercising their freedom of expression is an unacceptable violation of human rights. The Bangladeshi leaders who orchestrated this brutal crackdown must be held accountable," reads the letter.

93 killed as Israel hits Gaza school

World condemns attack; UN rapporteur accuses Israel of 'genocide'

AFP, Palestinian Territories

Rescuers in Gaza said an Israeli air strike on a religious school housing displaced Palestinians killed 93 people yesterday, sparking international condemnation despite Israel's insistence that it was targeting militants.

AFP could not independently verify the toll which, if confirmed, would be one of the largest from a single strike during 10 months of war between Israel and Palestinian groups.

The bombardment of Al-Tabieen school and mosque drew criticism from across the Middle East and beyond alongside calls for a ceasefire after international mediators invited the warring sides to resume talks towards a long-sought truce and hostage-release deal.

Civil defence rescuers in the Hamas-ruled territory said three Israeli missiles hit the complex in Gaza City while people were performing dawn prayers.

"They dropped a missile on them while they were just praying," said one woman, mourning over a dead child shrouded in a plastic body bag.

Israel's military said it had "precisely struck" Al-Tabieen, which spokesman Nadav Shoshani added on social media platform X housed a "military facility" with "approximately 20 Hamas and Islamic Jihad militants" including commanders.

Bangladeshi shot by BSF in Thakurgaon

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Thakurgaon

A Bangladeshi young man was shot and wounded allegedly by the Indian Border Security Force (BSF) near Kotapara border in Thakurgaon's Baliadangi upazila yesterday.

The injured was identified as Naimur Rahman, 22, son of Jahangir Alam of Kalibari village under the same upazila.

The victim's uncle said that Naimur and his uncle Alamgir went to their cropfield near the border to cut grass in the morning around 10:00am.

After a while, BSF members of the Bhelagachi camp from the other side of the border started shouting at them and abruptly opened fire in their direction, leaving Naimur injured.

Alamgir, who was unhurt, rescued Naimur and took him to the Baliadangi Upazila Health Complex, where Naimur was given first aid.

Later, Naimur was taken to Thakurgaon Sadar Hospital, where he is currently undergoing treatment.

Small plane crash in Chile kills 7

CJ, 5 other SC judges resign

The meeting was scheduled for 10:00am yesterday.

There was no other agenda for the meeting, he said.

But, several thousand students gathered on the SC premises around 10:30am and started demanding the resignation of the chief justice and other Appellate Division judges.

A group of pro-BNP-Jamaat lawyers joined the protesters.

The demonstrations began after student leader Asif Mahmud, now the adviser to the Ministry of Youth and Sports, wrote on Facebook around 10:00am that the chief justice must resign and the full court meeting must stop.

"The chief justice of the Supreme Court, who was backed by the fascists and engaged in various misdeeds, has called a full court meeting without any discussion with the government. Any kind of conspiracy by the defeated power will not be tolerated. Lawyers have already rallied against him.

"We had earlier called for the resignation of the chief justice. If you incite the students and mass people by taking any stand against them, you will have to face dire consequences.

"Resign immediately from the post of the chief justice and stop the full court meeting."

Soon afterwards, several thousand students and lawyers marched and held rallies at different places on the SC premises, demanding the resignation of all the judges of the Appellate Division.

The army personnel deployed to avert any untoward incident were seen requesting the students to peacefully demonstrate without damaging properties.

At one stage, Hasnat Abdullah, a coordinator of the student movement against discrimination, declared the judges' homes would be besieged unless the chief justice and judges of the Appellate Division resigned by 1:00pm.

When reporters drew his attention to the matter around 12:00pm, Law Adviser Prof Asif Nazrul said he was hoping the chief justice would understand that the demand raised by the masses should be honoured.

He said the outgoing chief justice had warranted controversies for several reasons.

He added that the outgoing chief justice called for a meeting, and Adviser Asif said the meeting was called without consulting anyone. "It seems like a move made by the defeated authoritarian regime," he said.

He said there were questions about the outgoing chief justice. During the anti-government protests, Justice Obaidul asked whether a verdict can be changed by a movement. People did not take it well.

Besides, it is unfortunate that after he took charge, Justice Obaidul received a felicitation from Chhatra League men, which is a violation of the code of conduct, said the law adviser.

He also received a golden sword from the former Detective Branch chief Harun Or Rashid. Besides, when he travelled abroad, he used to stay at the homes of Awami League leaders. "These are the reasons why there were controversies surrounding him," he added.

Justice Obaidul subsequently resigned and the five other judges followed him.

Contacted, Justice Obaidul said, "I decided to resign considering the safety and security of the judges of the Appellate Division, High Court Division, and the lower courts across the country amid the emerging situation."

In a video message on Facebook, Law Adviser Asif Nazrul said, "Our chief justice resigned a few minutes ago. His resignation letter reached the law ministry. We will promptly send it to the president, so that necessary measures can be taken."

After learning around 1:00pm that lower courts in different districts were surrounded by protesting students, he urged students not to harm or disrupt court proceedings.

There is no reason for the students to lay a siege to a lower court because the demand concerns the chief justice and some other judges.

Despite the current situation, the lower court judges are working. They have promised that they will no longer make the old mistakes, he said.

The chief adviser yesterday also visited Rangpur Medical College and Hospital to see some students who sustained injuries during the quota reform protest. He enquired about their health and gave necessary instructions to the hospital authorities for the proper treatment of the injured.

Posts, Telecommunications and ICT Affairs Adviser Md Nahid Islam and Youth and Sports Affairs Adviser Asif Mahmud accompanied the chief adviser during his visit to Rangpur. Nahid and Asif were two key coordinators of the student protest.

Later in the day, the chief adviser spoke at a session with students at Begum Rokeya University. He called on the young people to take the responsibility for the nation's future.

Yunus urged them to harness their potential and ensure the country's progress.

"This Rangpur, this Bangladesh, is now in your hands. You have the power to take the country wherever you want. This is not a matter of research, it is the power within you," he told the students.

Describing Abu Sayed as an "epic character", he said many poems will be written and many literary works will be done on him.

"The students and the young people of Bangladesh have astonished the entire world."

He termed the students' recent achievement "the country's second victory".

The chief adviser urged the students to make sure that this achievement is not lost. He called upon the older generation to move out of the way for the young generation.

Yunus also spoke about the necessity of having a vision to accomplish any task.

"If there is no dream, there will be chaos. But if you have a dream and you pursue it, you will achieve it although it once seemed to be impossible. The power to make the impossible possible lies within you."

Urging the young people not to back out, he said the older generation has failed to guide the nation.

"We have failed. We could not take you to that destination where you were supposed to be."

Yunus also warned the students not to let their efforts be foiled by those seeking to undermine their progress. "There are many waiting to make your efforts futile. Don't fail this time."

Voicing his commitment to national reform, the microcredit pioneer said he would do whatever is necessary to cleanse the country of its ills. "We will clean everything. We have no relief until everything is cleaned."

He condemned the recent attacks on the religious minority communities. He asked the young people, "You have been able to save the country. Can't you save some families?"

He urged the students to protect all Hindu, Christian, and Buddhist families from harm.

"You must say no one can harm them. They are my brothers. We fought together, and we will stay together."

Comparing Bangladesh to a beautiful family, Yunus said, "No family is more beautiful than this. There are many countries in the world, but there is no such beautiful family."

activities will be on as per the normal process," he said after a meeting with the secretary-level officials of the finance and planning ministries at the secretariat in Dhaka.

Ahmed, a former Bangladesh Bank governor, joined work yesterday following his appointment as an adviser for finance and planning of the interim government formed after the fall of Sheikh Hasina-led Awami League government on August 5 due to a mass uprising.

He did not give any directive to the officials.

Ahmed told the officials in charge to work as per the schedule, rules, regulations and norms and refrain from exercising discretionary powers, The Daily Star has learnt from people familiar with the discussions at the meeting.

Asked about the recent protests in the financial sector following Hasina's exit and the resignations of top officials including BB governor Abdur Rouf Talukder, Ahmed said: "If anyone has engaged in any unlawful activity, appropriate actions will be taken in line with the law."

About Talukder's stepping down and the forced resignation of a deputy governor, he said: "All the resignations will be considered as per the process. I will not ask for accepting [the letter]. If needed, I will consult with the chief adviser."

Earlier in the day, he said he would not take any decision alone regarding the resignation of the BB governor, which is a 'sensitive' post.

"Shall I accept as soon as I get the resignation? Can I do that?"

Asked about the demand for the resignation of Abu Hena Md Rahmatul Muneem, chairman of the National Board of Revenue, from a section of revenue officials, Ahmed said: "He has been given a target to collect revenue. He will collect revenue. He will work properly."

Before the meeting with officials yesterday, he told the media personnel that many rules and norms of the banking sector were not followed.

"Those who were supposed to enforce with rules did not do so and those who were supposed to follow the rules did not comply."

Restoring law and order and banking and port activities is the interim government's priority now, Ahmed said, while citing inflation as a major challenge.

"Apart from economic challenges, our policies and strategies for development were wrong. People did not benefit from the development. You have seen the benefit went to the well-off. We have seen economic growth but who enjoyed the benefit of growth?"

Asked about bringing back the laundered money from abroad, he said the interim government will take steps on that front.

"There is a process for this. Information will be needed. For this, we will contact the agencies we need to contact."

Resignations until now

Besides, several provosts of different dormitories at Dhaka University also stepped down yesterday.

Earlier on Thursday, the full body of DU's Proctorial Team submitted their resignation letters.

"I spoke to an adviser to the interim government Friday night and decided not to hold my position any longer," Prof Maksud Kamal told this newspaper.

"I discussed the matter from a place of common courtesy. My letter of resignation has already been prepared. I spent a lot of time as a student and teacher leader at this university. I believe that, considering the overall situation, my resignation is necessary for the benefit of the students and the university."

In the face of student protests, vice-chancellors of five public universities have so far resigned.

The first to step down were VCs of three public universities, including Jahangirnagar University, Sher-e-Bangla Agricultural University, and Mawlana Bhashani Science and Technology University.

The protestors of the quota reform movement have been demanding the resignation of many VCs since early on in their movement.

However, the VCs did not start stepping down until after the resignation of Sheikh Hasina.

Police must resume duty immediately

Say speakers on ensuring public safety, security

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Police personnel should immediately resume their regular duty to ensure people's safety, said speakers at a public discourse yesterday.

If there was any sense of insecurity or lack of trust among the police members, then the authorities concerned must sit with them and listen to their problems to find a solution, they said.

The discussion titled "How to Ensure Public Safety and Security?" was organised by The Daily Star at the capital's The Daily Star Centre.

Pointing to police atrocities on student protesters and people during the recent nationwide movements that toppled the Sheikh Hasina government on August 5, they said rogue policemen should be identified and isolated from the force as well as be punished. However, rebuilding people's trust on the police force as a whole is crucial for the country's progress.

Following the August 5 changeover, many policemen deserted their workplaces amid attacks on police stations across the country.

At the event, former inspector general of police Muhammad Nurul Huda emphasised the urgent need for police, particularly traffic officials, to be more "visible" and to promptly resume their duties.

He said students were trying to fill the absence by controlling the traffic situation on the city streets but they need to go back to the classroom immediately as they are the future nation-builders.

"It is important to understand why police behave the way they do," he said, adding, the force is part of the executive branch and merely follows order.

There will be little to no gain in squarely blaming the police force, he further said.

Joining the discussion virtually, Supreme Court lawyer Barrister Jyotirmoy Barua said ordinary citizens are the most affected by the recent decline in law and order, while traders have also encountered difficulties in operating their businesses.

He emphasised that maintaining law and order is a role only the police can fulfill, and it cannot be effectively handled by any other agency.

Expressing concern over safety issues, Abdullah Hil Rakib, vice president of Bangladesh Garment Manufacturers and Exporters Association, called upon the newly-formed interim government to take immediate steps for redeployment of policemen for smooth shipments of their goods.

In his opening remarks, Golam Mortaza, editor of The Daily Star Bangla, said police are the most important force when it comes to people's safety.

However, they are also one of the most criticised ones for their controversial roles. He said immediate redeployment of police is crucial, as society is full of rumours and confusion.

Rights activist Ilira Dewan said it is important to build the police as a people-friendly force while police itself has to play a role to earn people's trust.

Filmmaker Ashfaq Nipun, JAAGO Foundation founder Korvi Rakshand, Journalist Rashed Nizam, and Dhaka University Chhatra Union President Meghmallar Bosu, among others, spoke at the discussion.

Blinken said the US remains committed to working with Bangladesh as it charts a democratic and prosperous future for the people in Bangladesh.

UK Foreign Secretary David Lammy also welcomed the appointment of the interim government.

The interim government has the UK's support as it works to restore peace and order, for the sake of the Bangladeshi people, he said in a statement yesterday.

"We urge all actors to prevent further violence and loss of life."

Meanwhile, Canada is eager to engage with the interim government to support an inclusive process that involves everyone, including religious minorities, youth, women, and other marginalised groups.

'At least tell us where they are'

Over 100 families stage protest, want info on 'missing' loved ones

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

They shared a common grief: their sons, husbands, or brothers have been missing for years, allegedly abducted by state agencies during the 15-year rule of the Awami League.

Over 100 families of such enforced disappearance victims formed a human chain yesterday in front of the Jatiya Press Club, demanding information about the whereabouts of their missing loved ones.

The protesters, comprising mothers, sisters, fathers, and children, held up pictures of their missing relatives, with names and dates of the day they disappeared inscribed on them.

Some of the dates stretched back as far as 13 years, symbolising the long, painful wait of these families. Children who were young when their fathers were taken have since grown up; some mothers have died while waiting for the return of their sons.

Those who were present yesterday are unsure whether their loved ones are alive or dead. These families are still waiting for any information that might bring them closure.

The human chain began around 11:00am, where the relatives stood in solidarity.

"We just want to know what happened to our loved ones. At least tell us where they are," said one participant, a sentiment echoed by all present.

On August 6, a day after Sheikh Hasina's fall, members of Mayer Daak, a platform of the families of people who fell victim to enforced disappearances, gathered in front of the Directorate General of Forces Intelligence office to know whereabouts of their missing relatives.

At least three victims of enforced disappearances, were released on the same day.

The next day, DGFI said there were no detainees in their Dhaka facility.

On the same day, Michael Chakma, 40, a UPDF activist who was forcibly disappeared on April 16, 2019 from Narayanganj, returned to a friend's house in Chattogram.

Demands University Teachers Network

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

The University Teachers Network, a platform of teachers who had actively participated in the recent student-led mass uprising, has called for immediate reformation of the civil administration and police, and forming a neutral judiciary to ensure safety and justice to people from all walks of life.

In a dialogue held at Dhaka University yesterday, they also demanded all types of syndicates in the market be abolished to reduce the prices of essentials.

Not only teachers, but also people from other professions, participated in the discussion titled "What We Want from The Interim Government".

Presiding over the event, Prof Anu Muhammad, a former teacher at Jahangirnagar University, said it is the third time that a possibility to rebuild Bangladesh has emerged.

The scope to do so was missed once after the Liberation War in 1971 and again after the fall of HM Ershad in 1990, he said, adding, "During the caretaker government in 1990, Prof Rehman Sobhan proposed a reformation model, but none of the successive political governments followed it."

Stressing that the situation is different this time, he said while the political parties were key players of all previous mass uprisings, this time the students are the main force.

"This generation once said they hate politics but they stood against the bullets fired by police. What could be more political than that?" he asked.

Cultural centre in Keraniganj vandalised

STAFF CORRESPONDENT

Many establishments were vandalised following the fall of Sheikh Hasina on August 5, one of which was the Hamidur Rahman Cultural Center in Jinjira area of Keraniganj.

Miscreants vandalised the establishment and looted valuables from its premises around 3:00pm on the day.

Wishing anonymity, an official of Hamidur Rahman Cultural Centre yesterday told The Daily Star that the centre is a government establishment that they had leased for three years from Dhaka Zilla Parishad.

They invested around Tk 2.5 crore in overall decoration, furnishing, and interior work, he added.

The centre recently started its classes with 20 students, offering music, dance, and various forms of arts and culture.

It was preparing to enrol 400 more students. In the meantime, this attack occurred, said the official.

He also said the miscreants looted valuables, including furniture and electrical appliances.

Mentionable, the building of the Hamidur Rahman Cultural Centre was designed by internationally acclaimed architect Marina Tabassum.

Healthcare limps on amid doctor shortage

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Phulpur Upazila Health Complex in Mymensingh is grappling with staff shortages and overcrowding, leaving medical services in disarray.

The 50-bed hospital, established in 1983 to serve rural communities, is now struggling to meet the growing demands of the 5 lakh residents in the area.

The hospital is understaffed, with nearly half of the positions for medical officers and consultants remaining vacant.

Out of the 130 sanctioned posts, the hospital currently operates with only seven medical officers and seven consultants, while one medical officer is on deputation in Dhaka.

This acute shortage has left several key departments, including ophthalmology, gastroenterology, and dermatology, without any consultants, forcing patients to seek costly treatment at private facilities.

The hospital faces a daily influx of at least 90 inpatients, far exceeding its capacity, with many patients having to share beds or wait in overcrowded conditions. Despite the overwhelming need, there has been no significant effort to upgrade the hospital's facilities or expand its capacity to 100 beds, as demanded by the local community.

Field-level health services have also been severely impacted due to the shortage of medical assistants, with 29 out of 60 positions lying vacant. This has disrupted essential healthcare services in the region, leaving many without adequate care.

Additionally, the hospital is plagued by a shortage of essential medicines, forcing patients to purchase drugs from outside, often at a high cost.

Although Dr Md Humayun Kabir, the health and family planning officer in Phulpur, claims that around 90 percent of the required medicines are usually in stock, the growing number of patients often leads to shortages.

Dr Md Nazrul Islam, the civil surgeon of Mymensingh, said the authorities have been informed about the urgent need to fill the vacant posts and address the other challenges faced by the health complex. He said steps will be taken soon to improve the situation.

INDUSTRIAL SECTOR

Smooth gas supply top priority: Adilur

BSS, Dhaka

The interim government will give utmost importance to ensuring gas supply to maintain normal production in the industries, said its Adviser to the Ministry of Industries Adilur Rahman Khan yesterday.

"The problems in fertiliser production would be addressed to reduce import dependency, which would significantly save foreign currency," he added.

The adviser said this while talking to the reporters after a meeting with senior officials of the Ministry of Industries at the secretariat in the capital.

Adilur also said they will work to improve the leather industry in Savar.

"At the same time, we ensure environmental compliance in the ship-breaking industry," he told reporters.

The adviser to the industries ministry said various institutions under the ministry are operating at a loss, and proper measures will be taken to identify the issues and make these institutions profitable.

"There is no choice but to be stringent against corruption. We have taken on this responsibility through much sacrifice. There is no question of allowing new scope for corruption," he added.

Adil wanted to join

"We forced him to stay home on the previous day while protests raged outside. On July 19, we could not stop him. He did not return alive," said Adil's mother Ayesha Akter.

Adil was shot twice in his chest at the protest in front of the factory of SB Style Composite Ltd. People rushed him to a nearby private hospital in Signboard area, where doctors declared him dead.

He was later buried in a local graveyard in Bhuighar area the same night.

"My Adil had a dream to join the army as an officer and serve the nation. He was inspired by his maternal uncle who is an army personnel. It is but an irony of fate that he was shot dead by law enforcers," Ayesha said.

Adil is a student of Tamirul Millat Mohila Kamil Madrasa in Dhaka's Jatrabari area. He returned home from the madrasa's hostel on July 17 after attending pre-tests for upcoming SSC examinations next year.

"As the situation was turning worrisome in Dhaka, I brought him home from the hostel for fear that he would get into trouble if he remained in the capital. Yet I couldn't save my son," said his mother.

Ayesha also said Adil was a bright student, and was especially good in mathematics. He had participated in the Math Olympiad, she added, showing Adil's certificate of participation.

Adil was the youngest of his three siblings. His elder brother Abdullah Al Mamun is studying in Malaysia and another brother Bayejid Ahmed is a student of nursing at Dhaka Medical College.

He said the spirit of Liberation War will remain the main priority in rebuilding the nation.

"It [the spirit of Liberation War] doesn't belong solely to Awami League. During its tenure, the party used it to shield their oppression and plunder, all of which are activities contrary to the aspiration of our independence," he added.

He blamed the system for making Hasina a dictator, and suggested revolutionary reformation to the state mechanism, which will require a change in people's mindset.

"Our MPs, ministers and high-ups never bothered about the environment or air pollution while remaining in their air-conditioned cars, homes and offices. For a starter, the government officials may begin to open their car windows to inhale the air of Dhaka -- the most polluted air across the globe -- to get an idea of what common people have to suffer from," he said.

He also said the interim government should focus on reforming the country's constitution, adding that it may face obstacles from three forces -- the civil and military bureaucracy, the businesses who got unprecedented privileges from the Hasina-led government, and the external powers who have interests in the country.

"The government took numerous illogical and costly projects, which only benefited the local and foreign businesses. Local businesses like Beximco, S Alam, Bashundhara, United, and Summit groups may create problems with their huge capital," he added.

Kazi Maruful Islam, a professor at Development Studies department of Dhaka University, said, "We need to reform the state's system keeping in mind the Liberation War, anti-discriminatory society, secular democracy, exploitation-free economy, participation of the citizens, the government's responsibility to the citizens, and diversity of the state."

The teachers' network will act as an observer to the government, said Prof Mohammad Tanzimuddin Khan of DU's International Relations department.

"If they do wrong, we will act as we did earlier. Besides, a students' network will be formed among the students of private universities, who were a vital force in the recent mass uprising," he added.

without him?" said Marzina while talking to this correspondent.

She was taken by her parents to their house in Bipanchashi village of neighbouring Ishwarganj upazila, two days of Jobayer's death, where she has been staying since then.

Jobayer had a mobile accessories shop at Shambhuganj Bazar of Mymensingh city. His father, Md Anwar Uddin, is a retired madrasa teacher from Kaurat village in Gouripur upazila.

"On July 20 morning, I had my last words with my son. I asked him where he was going. Jobayer said he would go to his shop as it had been closed for several days and many customers had called him for delivering their orders. He said he would return soon. He returned... dead," said Anwar Uddin.

He came in the line of fire on his way to the shop in Kaltapara Bazar area on Mymensingh-Kishoreganj road in the upazila, and was hit by bullets in his back. He was rushed to Mymensingh Medical College Hospital where he succumbed to the injuries. He was buried at the family graveyard.

"Jobayer was neither involved in politics, nor did he join any protest. He did not deserve this fate," his father said.

Jobayer's younger brother Mohammad Kawser, an HSC student, said, "Uncertainty now looms over my education as well as of my elder sister. My elder brother was the only financial support of our six-member family."

He called for a proper investigation into Jobayer's death, and demanded justice.

Dr Muhammad Yunus. This is the first step in restoring peace, to pave the way for free and fair elections and democratic governance," said Canadian Foreign Minister Melanie Joly in a statement yesterday.

She said Canada supports a peaceful way forward in resolving the ongoing crisis in Bangladesh.

She urged all parties to work together to promote the principles of democratic and inclusive governance, respect for human rights, and the rule of law.

Also, in a media briefing in New York, Florencia Soto Niño, associate spokesperson for UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres, said there seems to be an inclusive process for forming a government.

"We hope that it continues," he added.

village under Patuakhali Sadar upazila, used to work as a cutting master at a tailor shop in Lalkuthi area of Dhaka's Mirpur. He lived in a rented house with his wife, son and two daughters.

On August 5, Bachchu, also general secretary of Bangladesh Poshak Sramik Dal, a BNP-affiliated organisation in Lalkuthi, was demonstrating with party men in front of Adabor Police Station when a bullet hit his chest.

Locals took Bachchu to Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical University Hospital where doctors declared him dead. The family members later took his body to the village home the next day and buried him in the family graveyard.

Bachchu's son is a college-goer, while his elder daughter is a degree student and younger daughter is an 8th-grader, said cousin Delwar Howladar.

"Bachchu was a good-hearted man, and a hard worker. He did not leave behind much for his family except a small portion of ancestral land. We are concerned about how his family will manage now," said his uncle Abdul Jalil Howladar.

attacked nearby police stations and outposts, and the same happened at the Kotwali Police Station in the Sadar upazila.

To bring the situation under control, the police opened fire on the mob, when one of the bullets hit Shamsu's face as he was on his way to the nearby market through the area around 6:00pm.

Shamsu's body remained there for about an hour.

Later, his wife Meghla Begum, 31, heard the news from locals and rushed to the spot.

"We found him lying on the road. We took him to Faridpur General Hospital. The doctor advised taking him to the Faridpur Bangabandhu Sheikh Mujib Medical College Hospital. There, a doctor declared him dead," said Meghla.

"We left the house together around 4:00pm. I went to a relative's house, and he went to the market to get some toys for our daughter," she added.

"What will happen to us now? Who will look after my daughter? How will I pay for her studies?" said Meghla.

Their daughter, six-year-old Sammi, is a class one student who still doesn't understand the gravity of the situation.

She kept asking her mother about her father's whereabouts and when he would bring her toy.

"A bullet has finished everything. Now there's no roof over our heads. There is no one else in the world to take care of us," said Meghla.

Meghla's mother Fuli Begum, 56, said, "I don't know what will happen to my daughter and her child. We are poor as well. We can't even afford to provide them with a place to stay."

He also mentioned that a waste-to-energy project to generate electricity from waste has been pending approval for two years.

Deepak Mazumder, MCC's food and sanitary inspector, informed that since 2019, a private enterprise, Nobo Waste Management Service Ltd, has been collecting medical waste from private hospitals, clinics, and diagnostic centres in the city for a fee of Tk 500-2,000 per month.

The waste is disposed of through incinerators, burial pits, sharp pits, and recycling units.

Dr HA Golandaj Tara, secretary of Bangladesh Private Hospital, Clinic and Diagnostic Owners Association, confirmed efforts to engage all private hospitals in partnering with Nobo Waste Management Service Ltd for proper medical waste disposal.

Regarding the medical waste produced at public hospitals, Mohabbat Ali said the private enterprise lacks the capacity to handle all of it.

Dr Md Nazrul Islam, civil surgeon of Mymensingh, noted that the renewal of licences for private hospitals and clinics is contingent on certificates from the Department of Environment, which mandates the separation of waste into designated bins.

Md Mesbabul Alam, deputy director of the DoE in Mymensingh, assured that regular monitoring of waste disposal practices is being conducted to ensure compliance with environmental guidelines.

Later, Shakil's friends and family took his coffin to the Shaheed Minar premises to pay respect to him, before his body was taken to his village home in Bhola for burial. Shakil's father died in 2008.

"My brother used to look after us. I work at a factory but I hardly earn enough to bear the house rent and fulfill the family's needs alone. With him no longer there, now we are looking at a grim and uncertain future. We are devastated," said his younger brother Sumon Hossain, 18.

Rajib Sikhdar, Shakil's childhood friend, said, "We were trying to shield ourselves from bullets with roadside benches and chairs. But it was not enough. So, I told Shakil to run as fast as he can. We began running, but I lost him in the crowd. I thought he managed to escape, but later came to know that he got shot."

He was always vocal against injustice, said family and friends.

Mim Akhter, 19, a neighbour of Shakil, said he always worked for local students and youths, and actively participated in the recent protests.

"Shakil bhaia used to teach children at a local school whenever he had time. He encouraged to be vocal against anything that is wrong, and would sometimes gather us all to sing and paint together. I did not expect him to leave us like this," she said.

EPI vaccine shortage hits Chattogram

STAFF CORRESPONDENT, Ctg

Amena Begum, a resident of Halishahar area in Chattogram city, has been struggling to get her newborn daughter administered the second dose of Oral Polio Vaccine (OPV), Pneumococcal Conjugate Vaccine (PCV) and Pentavalent vaccine for the past week.

The vaccines are administered to newborns under the Expanded Programme on Immunisation (EPI) to protect them from numerous life-threatening diseases, according to health experts.

"On August 6, the scheduled date for vaccination, I took my baby to Chattogram Ma o Shishu General Hospital, but officials said there was no vaccine in stock. I went to the hospital again the next day but in vain," Amena told The Daily Star.

"I also went to the CCC-run Memon Maternity Hospital on Saturday, but there was no vaccine there either," she added.

Tamanna Khanam, a resident of port city's Jamal Khan area, shared a similar plight.

"I am worried about my child," she said.

Amid the shortage of EPI vaccine, thousands of newborns across Chattogram are at risk of developing poor immunity against different life-threatening diseases if they are not vaccinated in time.

Over the past week, parents across the port city and neighbouring 15 upazilas of Chattogram had to return from vaccination centres without getting their children vaccinated, said sources.

"EPI vaccines should be administered to newborns on scheduled dates to prevent some life-threatening diseases," said Dr Rezaul Karim, former head of child health department at Chittagong Medical College Hospital.

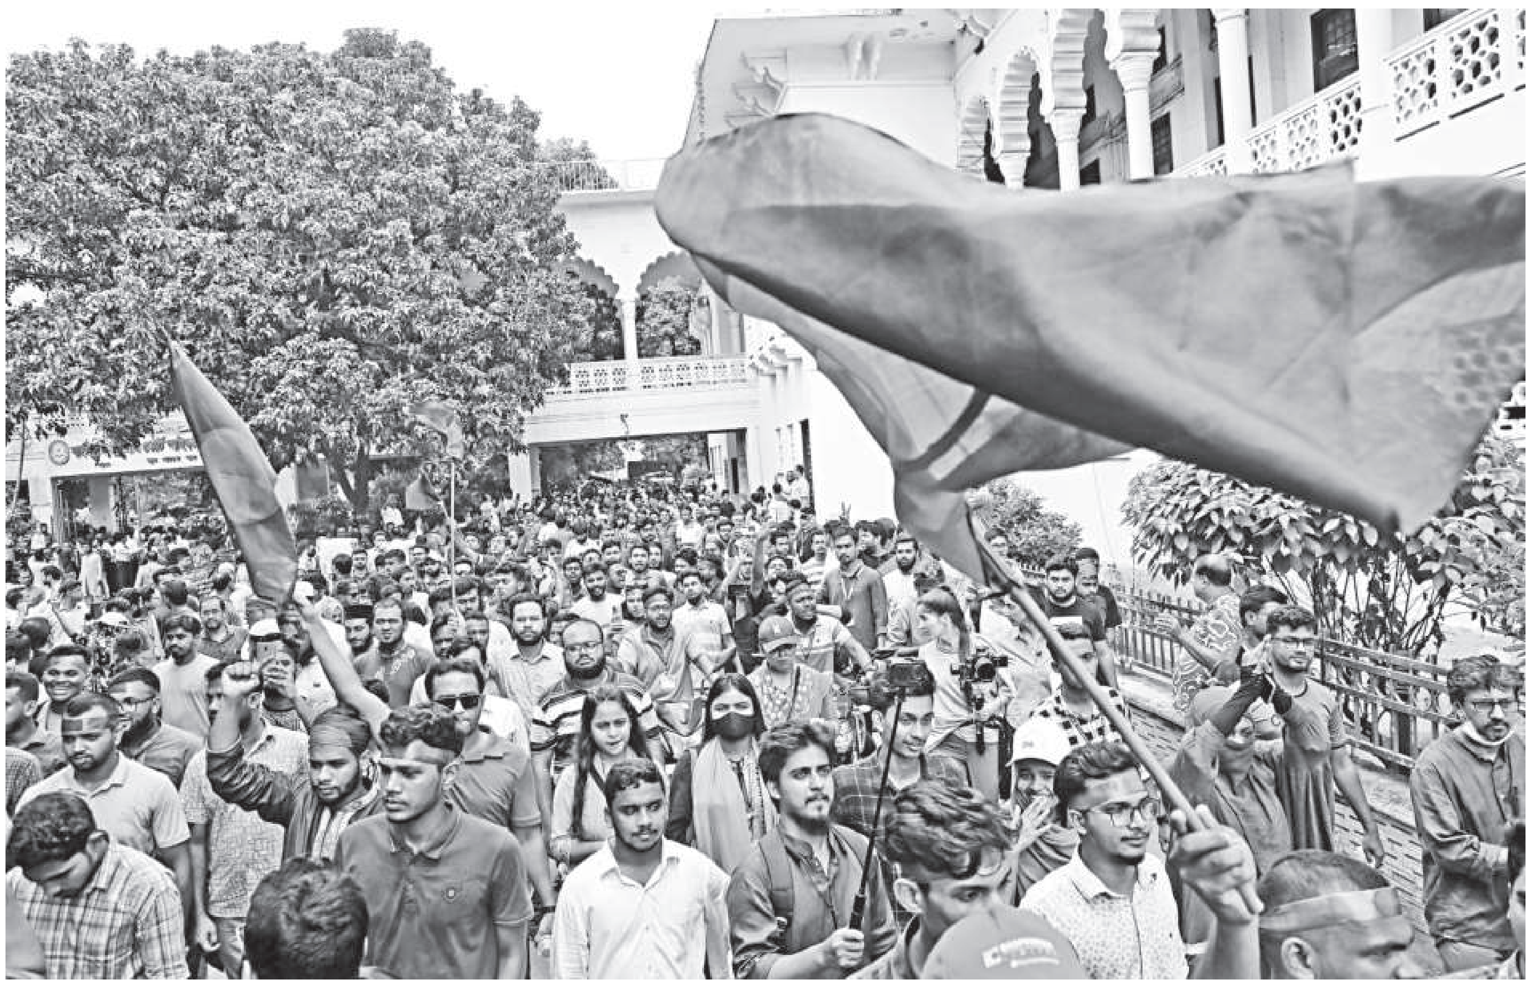
"In Bangladesh, we follow a 28-day interval between each vaccine dose, but in developed countries, they follow a two-month interval between the doses. So, an interval of two months is okay," he added.

Contacted, Dr Imam Hossain Rana, chief health officer of CCC, said they have not been getting an adequate supply of vaccines amid the current situation in the country.

"We get vaccines supplied from Chattogram Civil Surgeon's office. The supply has stopped since mid-July," he added.

Contacted, Dr Ilias Chowdhury, civil surgeon of Chattogram, confirmed a shortage in stock of EPI vaccines in the district.

"There is a shortage of vaccines at present as the supply is controlled centrally. The problem will hopefully be resolved by next week, as a stock of vaccines is scheduled to come from Dhaka on August 14," he said.



Several hundred protesters, including students and lawyers, gathered on the SC premises yesterday morning, demanding resignation of the chief justice and the judges of the Appellate Division. Later in the day, Chief Justice Obaidul Hassan and five more SC judges stepped down from their posts.

JAIL SHOOTING

Another injured prisoner dies

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Jamalpur

Another inmate injured in Thursday's shooting at Jamalpur District Jail died at a hospital on Friday night.

The deceased, identified as 30-year-old Md Masud from Banpara in Jamalpur municipality, suddenly fell ill at midnight. He was immediately taken to Jamalpur General Hospital, where he later succumbed to his injuries, confirmed Jail Superintendent Abu Fatah yesterday.

Masud's body has been sent to the morgue for autopsy.

Earlier, six prisoners died, and 19 others -- including guards and inmates -- were injured in the shooting at Jamalpur jail on Thursday.

The incident occurred when prisoners set fire inside the prison and took the jailer hostage. The guards opened fire when the prisoners attempted to break out, with the confrontation lasting from 1:30pm to 3:30pm on Thursday.

MEDICAL WASTE IN MYMENSINGH

Dumped in the open for 30 years

OUR CORRESPONDENT, Mymensingh

Toxic and hazardous medical wastes from approximately 300 hospitals, clinics, and diagnostic centres in Mymensingh city have been openly dumped at Moilakanda ground in Char Kalibari area for the past 30 years, raising alarm among residents and officials.

Despite the growing concern, there is still no permanent facility for the disposal of the city's medical waste.

Dr Md Zakiul Islam, deputy director of Mymensingh Medical College Hospital (MMCH), said the hospital lacks a waste treatment plant, forcing them to store both kitchen and medical waste in a shed before it is collected by Mymensingh City Corporation (MCC) trucks each evening.

Dr Zakiul highlighted that amputated body parts and materials from C-section operations are buried after disinfection with chlorine solution.

He expressed serious concern over the waste management situation at MMCH, noting that although waste is sorted into different bins, the MCC trucks collect and dispose of all waste without proper separation.

A visit to MMCH's garbage station revealed discarded sharp medical items mixed with kitchen waste, underscoring the severity of the issue.

Dr Ranjan Kumar Majumder, a retired medicine specialist, warned that residents near the Moilakanda area are at risk of diseases such as asthma, diarrhoea, allergies, and eye irritation.

Lawyer Shibbir Ahmed Liton, secretary of Mymensingh Poribesh Rokhha o Unnayan Andolon, called for immediate action to prevent medical waste from contaminating the Old Brahmaputra river during the monsoon, posing significant public health hazards.

Mohabbat Ali, conservation inspector of MMC, reported that around five tonnes of medical waste are produced daily in the city, presenting a significant challenge for the MCC.

He admitted that the MCC has been using traditional methods for disposal due to a lack of expertise in medical waste management.

MCC is working to establish a medical waste management plant at Moilakanda by the end of the year, said Md Arifur Rahman, MCC's chief waste management officer.

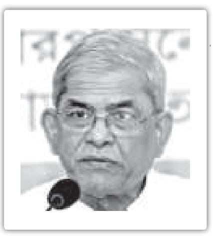
BNP to write to UN for probe: Fakhrul

STAFF CORRESPONDENT



BNP Secretary General Mirza Fakhrul Islam Alamgir yesterday said his party will send a letter to the United Nations calling for a probe into the "genocide" carried out by the Awami League government and forces on protesters "prior to the victory" on August 5.

He said this at a press conference at the BNP chairperson's Gulshan office.

Fakhrul said the party also plans to send a letter to the chief adviser of the interim government in this regard.

"At the same time, we will also send a letter to the [interim] government urging them to take steps for the release of about 50 of our workers who have been imprisoned in the UAE for supporting the movement," he said.

About the resignation of judges, Fakhrul said, "This is excellent news for democracy..."

Fakhrul also criticised some media outlets for spreading misleading news about the current situation.

"The news highlighted attacks on minority communities and a deterioration of the law and order situation, which we believe is entirely incorrect. These incidents are not communal or religious; they are political," he said.

Fakhrul also expressed gratitude to the interim government for its efforts to stabilise the country.

"On behalf of the party, we thank Chief Adviser Yunus and other advisers. After the revolution, there may be some problems. Restoring normalcy will not be an easy task," Fakhrul said.

"We sincerely thank the interim government for beginning their work with dedication," he added.

MORE THAN JUST NUMBERS

A tenth-grader shot dead in Narayanganj. A father dies of bullet wound in Faridpur. A husband fatally shot in Mymensingh. A university student shot dead in Mirpur. A tailor killed in Adabor. At least 400 lives (the actual number could be much higher) were lost when law enforcers opened fire on protesters during the recent unrest. But these victims are not just statistics; they are children, parents, and friends. In this report, we try to know the stories of three such names among these tragic numbers.

ARTISTES UNITE, call for cultural resurgence at Central Shaheed Minar

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT DESK

Artistes and cultural figures from across Bangladesh gathered at the Central Shaheed Minar yesterday afternoon, rallying under the banner of Srishtir Shadhinotay Shahoshi Bangladesh (Brave Bangladesh for Freedom of Art). The event, which began at 3pm, brought together four prominent platforms: The Visual Artistes' Society, Photographer Society, Protesting Theatre Activists, and Get Up and Stand Up (Bangladesh Musical Artists' Society).

The rally comes in the wake of significant political upheaval, following the resignation and hasty departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina on August 5

The rally comes in the wake of significant political upheaval, following the resignation and hasty departure of former prime minister Sheikh Hasina on August 5. On that same day, at least 76 deaths and approximately 500 injuries were reported in areas outside the capital. In the following days, the nation has grappled with a wave of violence as reports of killings, arson, looting, and attacks on minority communities have further heightened tensions across the country.

PHOTOS: SHEIKH MEHEDI MORSHED

In a joint statement, the assembled artistes addressed the recent turmoil, saying, "We have taken down the dictator through a bloody mass uprising led by the students of our country. We deeply remember the martyred who were brutally killed by Sheikh Hasina's regime. It's very unfortunate that we are yet to get the identification of many and have a confirmed number of the people who have lost their lives."

The coalition put forth several demands, including: immediate compilation of a comprehensive list of those killed during the anti-discrimination movement; guard of honour funerals for the deceased and aid for the injured; construction of a memorial (Shaheed Minar) to honour the martyrs and thorough investigation and trial of those responsible for the killings.

The artistes also condemned the post-uprising violence, calling for fair investigations into the destruction of temples, Liberation War museums, historic establishments, sculptures, and other cultural landmarks.

Notable figures in attendance included Shahidul Alam, Amirul Rajiv, Piplu R Khan, Probar Ripon, Tanim Noor, Azmeri Haque Badhan, Saberi Alam, Zakia Bari Mamo, Rafiath Rashid Mithila, Armeen Musa, Khayam Sanu Sandhi, Kamar Ahmed Simon, Amitabh Reza Chowdhury, Neel Hurerzahan, Tanvin Sweety, Rubayat and Ruslan Rehman, Mumtaheena Toya and Safa Kabir, among others. Their presence underscored the broad support for reform and justice across Bangladesh's creative communities.

Speaking at the event, the artistes urged citizens to actively participate in reshaping the nation. They emphasised their vision for a truly inclusive Bangladesh, where everyone is treated equally regardless of their caste, race, gender, ethnicity, and religion. Drawing parallels to the student-led movement that precipitated recent changes, they called for widespread support "from the plains to the hills" in this next phase of national reform.

They performed patriotic songs dedicated to the martyrs, concluding the event with national anthem.

As Bangladesh stands at this critical juncture, the artistic community's united front is crucial to continue the fight for freedom, justice, and cultural expression. The coming weeks and months will likely prove crucial in determining whether the artistes' calls for transparency, justice, and reform will be heeded by the transitional authorities and whatever new government takes shape.

fire on protesters, a large number of whom were later sued.

More than 400 people, including students and police personnel, were killed in the violence centring the student protest that later turned into an anti-government movement.

On August 5, President Mohammed Shahabuddin in a televised address to the nation said that all the prisoners, including those detained in various false cases during the student movement, will be released.

The next day, at least a total of 2,400 people, including several top leaders of the BNP and Jamaat-e-Islami, secured bail in the cases filed with different police stations in the capital over the violence centring the quota reform protests.

According to the court records, over 270 cases were lodged with 39 police stations in the city between July 16 and August 4. The complainants in most cases were police personnel.

The charges in the cases include illegal gathering, rioting, assaulting law enforcers, damaging assets, and arson.

According to the police sources, at least 10,134 people, including students, members of BNP and Jamaat-Shibir, were arrested in 872 cases filed in the capital and 51 districts from July 18-30.

police personnel were found in Shah Ali, where no general diary (GD) was filed in the past two days.

"We're living in fear. Our families don't even want us to leave the house. But I still come to the police station because I'm a government service holder," said a sub-inspector of the station.

The SI suggested that police high-ups consider a mass transfer, as many personnel who are well known to the local communities have become easy targets.

Reassigning them to new areas could offer some relief since locals would not know about their actions during the previous government's tenure, particularly during the recent student movement, he said.

A 60-year-old man was waiting at Kafrul Police Station around 3:30pm. He said he was falsely implicated in a case on July 27 and his mobile phone was seized. He was bailed out of prison on August 7.

"I came here on Friday to get my phone back after I learnt that the station had reopened, but a policeman asked me to come today [yesterday]. I've been waiting for around an hour but there's no policeman."

An army soldier guarding the station said several police personnel came in the morning but left after sometime.

An additional superintendent of police said, "The situation won't change overnight, not until we're assured of our security. We won't be able to go outside in uniform, and so, people will be deprived of our services."

Speaking to The Daily Star, many people said the interim government should first focus on restoring law and order as a peaceful atmosphere is necessary for stability and the development of every sector.

"We must remember that if the police are safe and active, we too will stay safe," said Rafiqul Islam, a resident of the capital's Ramna area.

"Policemen are returning to duty and we all should accept them with love and mutual cooperation. We hope they will quickly normalise the country's law and order situation."

Meanwhile, the officer-in-charge and some other officials returned to the Ashulia Police Station and exchanged views with the locals yesterday. The students welcomed their return, reports our Savar correspondent.

OC AFM Sayed said it will take time to start normal policing as their vehicles were torched.

Our Barishal correspondent reported that police started working on a limited scale in the city and elsewhere in the district.

At Kotwali Police Station, the correspondent found all 10 policemen in plainclothes.

Mostafizur Rahman, chief of the station, said they recorded three cases on Saturday after filing not even one GD since August 5. "We're not going out for investigations or patrolling."

Wahidul Islam, superintendent of police in Barishal, said the 10 police stations in the district were operating on a limited scale since many personnel were yet to report for duty.

Interim govt to stay as long as needed

"There are some good people in all these institutions. But the system was set up in a way that the institutions became a terror to the people who had different views and exercised their fundamental rights.

"People want to reform them. We will stay as long as we need to balance the desire for reform with the desire for elections.

"I miss teaching at the university. I want to get back to my life [as a teacher] as soon as possible after this job is done."

President Mohammed Shahabuddin on August 6 dissolved the 12th parliament formed through the January 7 national election.

A statement from the Bangabhaban said the decision to dissolve the parliament was made following the president's discussions with chiefs of three staff of armed forces, leaders of different political parties, representatives of civil society and leaders of the student movement against discrimination.

According to the constitution, a general election should be held within 90 days of the dissolution of parliament.

BNP expels 44

The BNP high command has instructed us to take measures in this regard," he said.

Chhatra Dal had taken a decision regarding its members' entry into the university campuses, but five to seven of its leaders and activists disobeyed the decision, leading to the issuance of show-cause notices against them, he added.

Jubo Dal Office Secretary MN Islam Sohel said, "Action has been taken against some Jubo Dal leaders and activists for anti-organisational activities.

"We have warned them against violating organisational discipline. This action has been taken to make sure that the leaders and activists remain careful about the organisation's directives," he told this newspaper.

BNP sources said that the party's top leadership has taken a strong stance against attacks and vandalism, particularly the incidents targeting religious minority communities.

This move is seen as a crucial step towards upholding the party's reputation and ensuring that the leaders and activists do not engage in any activities that could tarnish the party's image, said a BNP standing committee member, seeking anonymity.

Last week, BNP's acting chairman Tarique Rahman called upon the party leaders and activists to set an example by protecting all citizens regardless of their religious identities.

ACTION AGAINST PARTY MEN

In Dhaka, the convenor of Chhatra Dal's Kadmatali thana unit has been expelled while six other leaders have been served with show-cause notices.

In Chattogram, Chhatra Dal has expelled the senior joint convener of its Chattogram metropolitan unit. Two vice presidents of Chattogram metropolitan Jubo Dal have also been expelled.

In Khulna, a show-cause notice was served on Paikgachha upazila BNP General Secretary SM Enamul Haque over looting and arson.

"He attacked many Hindu houses and looted valuables, but the victims did not dare to speak for fear of reprisals," reads a press release issued by the Khulna district BNP on August 8.

Chhatra Dal district organising secretary in Barishal, the student front's general secretary in Thakurgaon, and its Panchagarh municipality member secretary have also been expelled for violating organisational discipline.

In Jashore, 13 leaders of BNP, Jubo Dal, and Chhatra Dal have been expelled for their involvement in attacks and vandalism.

Warning letters have been issued against at least 35 grassroots BNP leaders in the district as well.

In Jhalakathi, Jubo Dal expelled the convenors of its district and Nalchity upazila units for violating organisational discipline. Also, the district BNP expelled its Sadar upazila deputy publicity secretary, citing the same reason.

Four Jubo Dal leaders have been expelled in Lakshmipur, four in Pirojpur, three in Lalmonirhat, two each in Gazipur, Noakhali, Magura, and Jhenaidah, and one has been expelled in Narshingdi.

The convener of Magura municipality Swechhasebak Dal was also expelled.

environment for journalists and media outlets in Bangladesh who in recent days have experienced serious physical attacks and acts of intimidation," the association said in a letter.

"A free media which is protected by law against acts of violence and intimidation is essential for a healthy democracy," added the letter to the head of the interim government on Friday.

It said offices of several television channels and other media outlets were attacked and ransacked by violent intruders since the military assumed control.

"Many journalists have faced severe threats to their personal safety and been stopped from performing their legitimate duties," the CJA said.

"We appeal to you to take prompt and effective steps to restore the rule of law in these cases, and to ensure that all journalists in Bangladesh enjoy freedom of movement and protection from acts of violence," said the letter.

The CJA is a volunteer association that promotes professional journalism, free media, and freedom of expression across the Commonwealth.

According to the ISPR, the army patrol team fired four shots to disperse the protesters and bring the situation under control.

Additional troops have been deployed in the area, it said, adding that the injured army personnel were out of danger and undergoing treatment.

3 medical colleges

Chittagong Medical College took an identical decision.

Meanwhile, the academic council of Dhaka Medical College has decided to ban student politics from its campus, and Dr Fazle Rabbi Male Hostel and Dr Alim Chowdhury Girls' Hostel, according to a press release from its principal, Md Shafiqul Alam Chowdhury.

"No political organisation, including Chhatra League, Chhatra Dal, and Chhatra Shibir, will be able to conduct political activities on campus and in two halls. If any student is found re-introducing politics on campus, strict measures will be taken against that student," the release added.

The meeting also decided to ensure proper treatment for all students who sustained injuries during the protests centring the quota reform protests.

The academic councils of Sir Salimullah Medical College and Chittagong Medical College took similar decisions.

On Friday, the authorities at Noakhali Science and Technology University also banned politics for all students and teachers.

The NSTU authorities took the decision at a meeting on Friday evening, sources aware of the development told The Daily Star yesterday.

India, Maldives look to reset ties after spat

AFP, Malé

India's foreign minister has called the Maldives a "priority" for New Delhi on his first trip to the archipelago nation since its pro-China president expelled Indian troops.

Subrahmanyam Jaishankar said late Friday he was in the Maldives to "take stock of our defence and security engagement", months after President Mohamed Muizzu's administration signed a military assistance pact with Beijing.

Known as a luxury holiday destination with pristine white sand beaches and secluded resorts, the atoll nation has also become a geopolitical hotspot.

India is suspicious of China's growing presence in the Indian Ocean, and Male's military deal with Beijing came as Muizzu ordered a garrison of Indian soldiers stationed in the Maldives to assist with maritime patrols to leave.

Jaishankar, who will also meet Muizzu, said he wanted to highlight India's "continued support to Maldives in its quest for progress and prosperity".

Global east-west shipping lanes pass the nation's chain of 1,192 tiny coral islands, stretching around 800 kilometres (500 miles) across the equator.

India's government has traditionally considered the Maldives, home to around half a million people, within its sphere of influence.

"For India, neighbourhood is a priority and, in the neighbourhood, Maldives is a priority", Jaishankar said in a speech Friday.

Male's foreign minister Moosa Zameer called India "one of our closest friends", in a statement.

Zameer said the two countries had agreed to strengthen economic ties, saying Muizzu had asked to "begin negotiations" on a free trade agreement with New Delhi.

Defence links were also discussed, including "continuing joint exercises and expanding training opportunities for officers", he added.

In June, Muizzu visited New Delhi for Narendra Modi's inauguration as prime minister.

Muizzu's election successes hinged on a sustained campaign against India's outsized political and economic clout in the Maldives.

Its influence has been a periodic source of resentment in the Muslim-majority nation.

POLITICAL TRANSITION IN VENEZUELA

Maduro rejects Panama's offer

REUTERS, Panama City

Venezuelan President Nicolas Maduro gave a scathing response to an offer on Friday from his Panamanian counterpart, Jose Raul Mulino, to facilitate his departure to a third country to allow for a political transition.

Mulino told broadcaster CNN he would give Maduro safe passage to act as a "bridge" to a third country, in the aftermath of a July 28 election Maduro says he won but independent pollsters claim as an opposition landslide.

"If that's the contribution, the sacrifice that Panama has to make, by offering our soil so that this man and his family can leave Venezuela, Panama would do it without a doubt," Mulino said in an interview.

But Maduro accused the Panamanian president, who himself was elected to office just three months ago, of getting "carried away by the gringos," using a derogatory term for Americans.

"I will try to learn your name, President of Panama, but whoever messes with Venezuela runs aground," Maduro told reporters outside a courtroom where he filed an appeal to verify the electoral results.

Maduro has claimed a 51% victory in last month's election, while the political opposition maintains its candidate won by millions of votes. Venezuela's electoral authority has yet to release detailed vote tallies.

Escalations in Middle East serve no one

US tells Israel, releases $35b to Israel to spend on weapons

REUTERS, Washington

US Secretary of State Antony Blinken told Israeli Defense Minister Yoav Gallant in a phone call on Friday that the escalation of tensions in the Middle East was "in no party's interest" while also stressing the need for a Gaza ceasefire, the State Department said.

There has been an increased risk of escalation into a broader Middle East war after recent killings of Palestinian Islamist group Hamas' leader Ismail Haniyeh in Iran and of Hezbollah military commander Fuad Shukr in Beirut drew threats of retaliation against Israel.

As a result, many fear a widening of Israel's war in Gaza that has already killed tens of thousands and caused a humanitarian crisis.

"The Secretary reaffirmed the United States' ironclad commitment to Israel's security and discussed how escalation is in no party's interest," the State Department said in a statement.

Blinken stressed the "urgent need to reach a ceasefire in Gaza" that could release hostages held in the enclave and "create the conditions for broader regional stability," the State Department added.

Meanwhile, Washington will provide Israel $3.5 billion to spend on US weapons and military equipment, the State Department said on Friday, with the release of the money coming months after the US Congress appropriated it during Israel's war in Gaza.

A State Department spokesperson said on Friday that the department notified Congress on Thursday that the government intended to release the billions of dollars worth of foreign military financing to Israel.

CNN reported earlier on the release of this amount which comes from a $14 billion supplemental funding bill for Israel passed by the Congress in April.

Meanwhile, an Israeli airstrike on a Gaza school compound housing displaced families killed around 100 people, the Hamas-run Gaza government said on Saturday, while the Israeli military said it had targeted Hamas militants and cast doubt on the Palestinian death toll.

Video from the site showed body parts scattered on the ground and more bodies being carried away and covered in blankets on the floor. Empty food tins lay in a puddle of blood and burnt mattresses and a child's doll lay among the debris.

In another video, men prayed over a dozen body bags laid out on the ground. It was not immediately clear whether all the videos were filmed on the ground floor of the Tabeen school complex, in Gaza City.

Gaza's Hamas-run media office said in a statement that the complex was attacked when people sheltering there were performing dawn prayers.

The Gaza health ministry says that since October 7, Israel's military assault on the Hamas-governed enclave has killed nearly 40,000 Palestinians while also displacing nearly the entire population of 2.3 million, causing a hunger crisis and leading to genocide accusations that Israel denies.

US POLLS CAMPAIGN

US Vice President Kamala Harris campaigned in a packed arena in Arizona on Friday, hoping to put Republican candidate Donald Trump on the back foot in the West, while Trump held his own rally in Montana to support a Republican candidate for Senate.

The Democratic presidential candidate, less than a month into her bid for the White House, has been on a week-long tour after naming her running mate, Minnesota Governor Tim Walz, with a focus on building excitement for her campaign in seven states that could tip the Nov 5 election.

That tour on Friday brought her to the Phoenix area, where she was visiting with volunteers at a campaign office and speaking to voters.

Also in the West, Trump held a rally in Bozeman, Montana, a state that Republicans have carried in every presidential race since 1996.

Protests go on across country blocked till 7:00pm.

They chanted slogans such as "Save the Hindus", "Why are my temples and homes being looted? We want answers", "Hindu persecution in independent Bangladesh must not go on", "Religion is for individuals, the state is for everyone", "Who are you, who am I? Bangalee, Bangalee", and "Ensure the safety of the Hindus".

Speaking at the programme, Shanti Ranjan Mondal, president of Bhakta Sangha Bangladesh, said, "Many people are waiting near the border for refuge in neighbouring countries. Arrangements need to be made so they can return home with dignity."

The demonstrators warned they would wage tougher programmes if immediate steps are not taken to stop the attacks on the Hindus.

Puja Rani Saha, from Joypurhat's Khetlal area, said, "Someone in Dhaka can't even comprehend the extent of the persecution the Hindus of our locality have been facing. We're citizens of this country, but we're always at the receiving end of the wrath during any unrest."

She said they came all the way to Dhaka to join the protests as their backs were now against the wall.

Meanwhile, Bangladesh Jatiya Hindu Mohajote formed a human chain in front of the National Press Club to protest the attacks. They also demanded the reinstatement of reserved seats and a separate election to ensure the minorities' representation.

Bangladesh Sanatan Party, after a meeting at Dhaka Reporters Unity yesterday, issued a statement urging people to unite and come forward to stop the torture of minorities.

In Chattogram city, several thousand Hindus staged a sit-in at the Cheragi Pahar intersection, demanding the security of minorities.

They started gathering at the intersection from around 3:00pm and kept the intersection blocked for around three and a half hours.

Rinku Sharma, an assistant director of the Hindu Welfare Trust, said, "We [Muslims and Hindus] have been living together in the region for years as Bangalees. But some miscreants are trying to use religious identities to ruin that bond."

In Barishal city, members of the Hindu community held a rally in front of the Ashwini Kumar Hall under the banner of "Nipiron Birodhi Mancha".

Addressing the rally, Bhanu Lal Dey, president of the Mahanagar Puja Udjapan Parishad, said they have been sleepless from fear and are not getting any kind of assistance from the law enforcement agencies.

They later brought out a procession that paraded through different streets in the city.

In Natore, Hindus held a rally at the Kanaikhali Old Bus Stand. They said temples are being vandalised and looted as criminals are taking advantage of the absence of law and order.

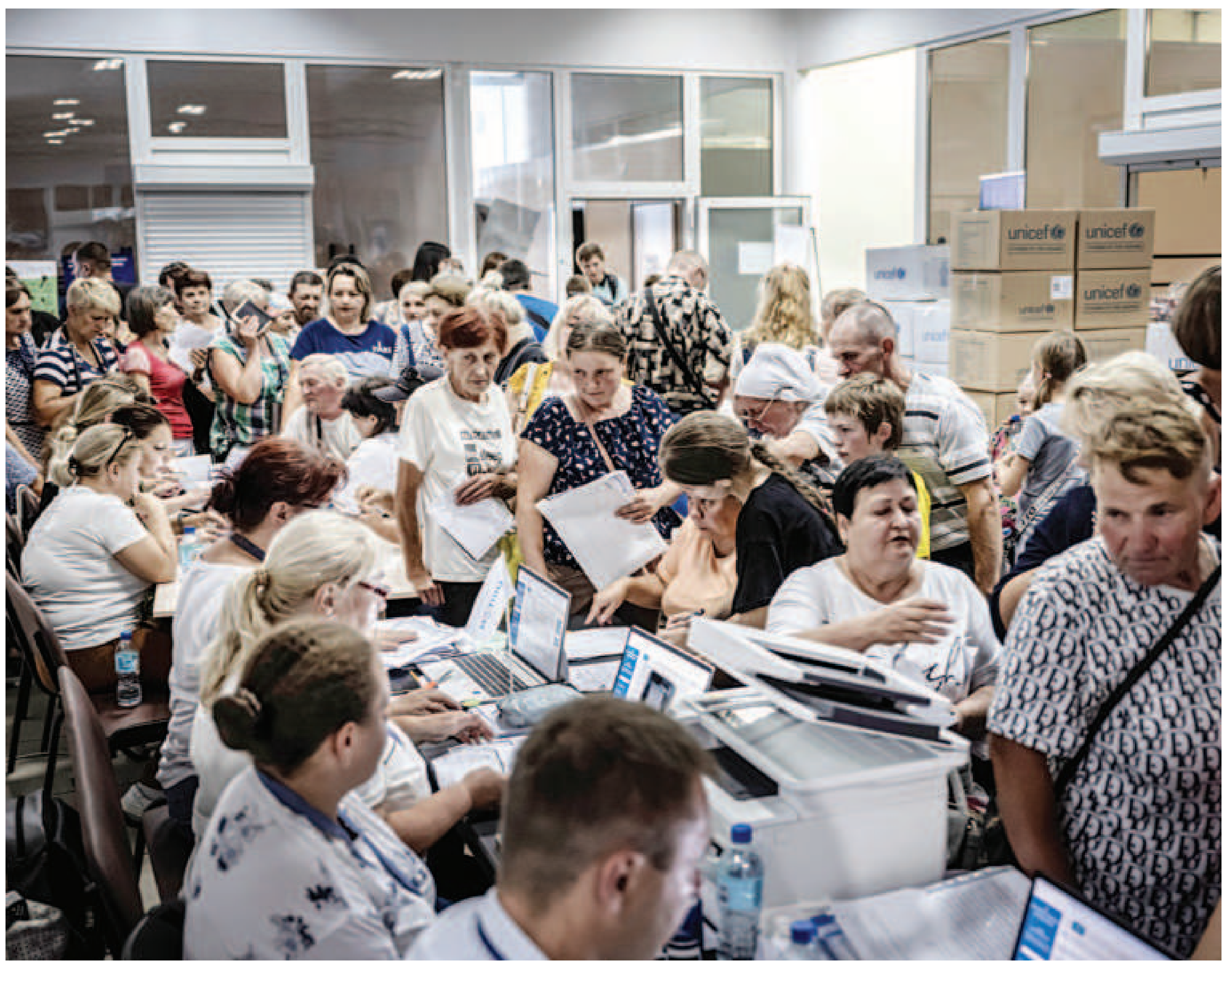
Members of the Hindu community in Mymensingh also formed a human chain in front of the city's Firoz-Jahangir Chattar. They later brought out a procession under the banner of "Shocheton Sanatani Samaj".

In Shariatpur, a group of people formed a human chain, under the banner of "Bangladesh Jatiya Hindu Mohajote", near the district's Central Shaheed Minar.

In Narayanganj, hundreds of Hindus brought out a procession, demanding justice for the attacks.

In Kushtia, students brought out a procession and held a rally, urging people to resist any attempts to attack minorities or their religious establishments.

Bangladesh Hindu-Bouddha-Christian Oikya Parishad and Bangladesh Puja Udjapan Parishadon on Friday reported at least 205 attacks on members of minority communities in 52 districts since the fall of the Hasina-led government on August 5.



Local residents from a village near the Russian border who fled due to Russian shelling, amid Russia's attack on Ukraine, arrive in an evacuation centre in Sumy, Ukraine. The police must get back to work

An atmosphere of mutual trust must be created

We are deeply concerned that, so far, only 361 out of 639 police stations have partially resumed operations since Friday, with the assistance of the armed forces and Border Guard Bangladesh. At the time when there is a severe lapse in security across all districts, with many incidents of violence, arson attacks, and even robberies being reported, law enforcement cannot be absent from the scene.

While it is understandable that many police personnel are feeling insecure after the destruction of many police stations in the country and attacks on police personnel, they must remember their primary duty, which is to protect the public. The unprecedented number of civilians—many of them students and even children—who were shot and killed by law enforcers during the quota movement, triggered attacks on police and police stations. But now is the time for all official forces to work together to bring security to the nation. Official forces must collaborate to ensure safety, especially in minority communities that have faced violence and vandalism from different coteries trying to take advantage of the power vacuum created by the former government's departure. The same applies to other groups as well, including members of the former administration, Awami League members, and individuals seen as loyal to the former regime.

Without police presence on the streets, miscreants have seized the opportunity to commit crimes with total impunity. In the absence of police, communities are having to mobilise their members to stay on watch all night, with the student volunteers helping. While this is very admirable, it is hardly a sustainable solution. Only a strong law enforcement presence will deter these criminals.

It is worrisome to know that the chain of command within the police force has broken down after the attacks on police personnel. Police from lower ranks have staged demonstrations and made their 11-point demand. The police force, which has long played a partisan role and embittered the public with its actions, must do everything in its power to regain public trust. The interim government must prioritise security and take necessary steps to restore police presence at the stations. Senior officers, particularly the new IGP, must address this crisis through dialogue with their frustrated juniors and find immediate solutions.

This will also require quick logistical support to repair the destroyed stations and get them operational again, as well as address the legitimate grievances of lower-tier police officers. The process of reform within the police force must begin as soon as possible to depoliticise the force, eradicate corruption, and make it a protector of the public rather than a feared or hated entity.

Global response to Bangladesh's transition

We need the support of our friends, now more than ever

We are heartened by the international community's expressed readiness to work with the interim government of Bangladesh, led by its chief, Professor Muhammad Yunus. Following the fall of the Awami League government, due to the popular demand of student protesters and the masses, Bangladesh faces a long journey to chart a democratic future for its people—a challenge recognised by the international community as well. As Bangladesh embarks on this uncertain yet hopeful path, the role of the interim government in steering the nation toward a democratic future cannot be understated.

Bangladesh endured three days without a government, during which law and order deteriorated amid widespread uncertainty. Now that the interim government has been formed, we are confident that stability will return and law and order will improve. As several representatives of our international partners have correctly emphasised, this must be the new government's first priority, along with ensuring accountability for all recent deaths. To achieve this, the interim government may request international assistance, which we hope our partners will be ready to provide upon request.

At this critical stage, with the economy having suffered significantly over the past month—and given the economic challenges that have plagued the country over the last couple of years—Bangladesh will require substantial support from its foreign friends. According to a recent report, the Bangladeshi economy experienced a sharp contraction in July. To get the economy back on track, Bangladesh could benefit from all the help it can get from other countries. To that end, we hope that friendly nations from all regions will step forward.

Given the disruption to business across all sectors in Bangladesh, we urge our international partners to remain patient and work with our industries to ensure that our commercial partnerships can continue to recover and flourish. The European Union, which imports goods worth $24 billion annually from Bangladesh, has expressed its eagerness to engage with the new administration, recognising this moment as crucial for fulfilling the aspirations of the Bangladeshi people, particularly its youth. We believe our other foreign friends share similar views and will engage with the government to achieve positive outcomes for all concerned.

The international response to this transition has been overwhelmingly positive, with key global players pledging their support for Bangladesh's journey toward democracy. The international community's support provides a strong foundation for Bangladesh to rebuild and move forward. However, the ultimate responsibility lies with the Bangladeshi people and their leaders to ensure that this transition marks the beginning of a new, more democratic era in the country's history.

A pathway to transformative governance is the UN Special Rapporteur on freedom of opinion and expression and former Secretary General of Amnesty International. This op-ed reflects her personal views as a citizen of Bangladesh.

Irene Khan

IRENE KHAN

The interim government comes with a mandate to ensure a peaceful transition to democracy, but its full scope is undefined, and a timetable is yet to be determined. Expectations are running high, and so are fears. As the Arab Spring has shown, failure could set back the struggle for democracy for decades to come.

I see a window of opportunity to craft a platform for transformative governance, grounded in democratic values and human rights principles. But that window will not last long. Among the many issues that demand the urgent attention of the interim government, it must select and prioritise a few critical reforms that are truly vital for sustaining democracy in the long run, that can be achieved in a short time and can be embedded in such a way that they will outlive this government.

The selection, prioritisation and delivery of those reforms will determine whether this moment in our country's history is a new dawn or a false one.

I believe early action in six key areas is essential.

First is the early restoration of law and order. There continues to be reports of violence, arson and looting, targeting supporters of the previous regime and members of the Hindu community. The political nature of these attacks is evident. The interim government must make it clear that not only does it have zero tolerance for political vendettas or scapegoating of minorities, but that all political parties must proactively reign in their goons or face political and legal consequences.

The interim government should think outside the box when it comes to policing. The discredited and demoralised police have walked out. Within hours of the police going on "strike", well-organised groups of students and volunteers took to guarding neighbourhoods and managing the city traffic in Dhaka with remarkable skill, politeness and diligence. This could well be the beginning of a new community-based policing system that this country badly needs.

Second is accountability for human rights violations—not to be done forty years down the road but here and now. The interim government should initiate a credible and transparent accountability process, in line with internationally recognised standards and with international assistance, into the massive human rights violations in recent weeks and past years. The government should take up the offer of assistance from the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and ask for an international commission of inquiry.

The international nature of the inquiry will be vital for the credibility of the process at home and abroad. By taking the bold step of inviting an investigation, supported by the United Nations, into Bangladesh's human rights obligations which are underpinned by international treaties, this interim government will set an important precedent on accountability and respect for the rule of law which future governments cannot ignore easily.

VISUAL: ALIZA RAHMAN

Third is to strengthen the right to freedom of expression and the role of independent news media. The government should immediately repeal the Cyber Security Act, the law on criminal libel and the Information and Communication Technology Act, which were used by the previous government to gag the media, prosecute and punish journalists and human rights defenders, and disrupt the internet.

The previous government weaponised the judicial system to throttle dissent and silence journalists. Multiple charges were brought against scores of editors and journalists and left hanging over their heads for years, inducing a culture of fear and self-censorship. Criminal charges against all journalists and editors must be dismissed immediately. Journalism is not a crime.

Fourth is judicial reform. Parliament has been disbanded, the executive has been replaced, now the judiciary has resigned under pressure from the student-led movement. Root and branch reform of the judiciary is long overdue, and essential to gain the trust and confidence of the public as well as investors. This government should undertake a process of fundamental reforms, especially at the highest echelons of the judiciary, to ensure the independence, impartiality and competence of the judiciary and commitment from its highest echelons to its rank and file to upholding fairness, human rights, and the rule of law.

At a minimum, the interim government must develop an effective judicial mechanism to resolve electoral disputes. As Director-General of the International Development Law Organization, I played a part in the reform of Kenya's Supreme Court, following the adoption of a new constitution in 2010 after the bloodiest post-electoral violence in the history of that country. The reform of the supreme court and the exemplary leadership of successive chief justices have created such public trust that there has been no large-scale political violence in Kenya since then. When the opposition challenged the re-election of then sitting President Uhuru Kenyatta in 2017, the court ordered a re-run which the president accepted. When the court certified that he had won the re-run, the leader of the opposition accepted the court's decision without protest.

Fifth, democratic elections. The interim government will no doubt take many measures to create an enabling environment for free, fair, inclusive and credible elections. I strongly urge a reinstatement of the rule on the caretaker government arrangement for conducting future elections. Remember the Right to Information decree introduced by the caretaker administration in 2008 which the incoming government did not dare to reverse? This government should put the same kind of political capital to embed the caretaker arrangement.

My final point is about bringing a profound change in the political culture. The people of this country, especially the youth, are fed up with self-serving, corrupt and violent politics and politicians. They want a new type of politics that cares about ordinary people, that values equality, opportunity and justice.

The interim government, the student-led movement and all who support it must work to create a broad-based national movement with new ideas, leaders and innovative political structures that are representative of the gender, age, ethnic, religious and socio-economic diversity of our country and committed to create a rights-respecting, just and democratic society. We must have a truly alternative choice at the next elections.

Let people, not political parties decide interim govt's role

BAZLUL H KHONDKER

Bangladesh witnessed an unprecedented people's revolution led by students which culminated in the fall of the Awami League government and the formation of an interim government. An important outcome of the July movement points to the abject failure of the political parties in the last 15 years to instigate a people-led upsurge to topple the Awami League government as citizens were disgruntled with the political parties and overall political system. On the other hand, an important social issue raised by students gained the resounding support of citizens to depose the mighty Awami League government within a month. There is a powerful sense of freedom in Bangladesh now.

Before the formation of the interim government, some decisions and demands of the major political parties caught my attention. The Bangladesh Nationalist Party's (BNP) decision to hold an assembly on August 7, was very immature. They should have waited till the formation of the interim government and restoration of law and order. We also saw a large rally by Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami which could have been avoided. Meanwhile, we noticed demands for early elections, and enquiry about the interim government's timeframe, legality, and agenda. I was not surprised by these decisions and demands of our major political parties since their ultimate motive is to be in power and unfortunately not to realise the real aspirations of the crores of Bangladeshi. However, some political individuals are in favour of giving the interim government a certain time to carry out fundamental reforms, the absence of which made the country dysfunctional.

There is a fundamental difference between a "caretaker" government and an "interim government." I believe we have a definition of the "caretaker" government but not an "interim" government. The 13th amendment to the Constitution of Bangladesh, which included provisions for a caretaker government to conduct general elections and transfer power impartially, was passed in 1996. This amendment added a new chapter, Chapter IIA: Non-Party Caretaker Government, in part IV of the constitution. Three elections were held under the caretaker system which was abolished by a constitutional amendment on June 30, 2011.

The question is: who will delineate the definition of the "interim" government? The answer is simple—the people of Bangladesh. The next question is how can this be done? The answer also lies with the people of Bangladesh.

The interim government should call for a plebiscite within the next three months along with a clearly thought-out reform agenda and estimated timeframe to achieve them. According to Britannica, a plebiscite is a "vote by the people of an entire country or district to decide on some issue, such as choice of a ruler or government, option for independence or annexation by another power, or a question of national policy." Generally in a plebiscite, voters are asked not to choose between alternate regimes or proposals but to confirm or reject the legitimacy of a certain form of government or course of action. More importantly, through plebiscites a government can reach people directly, bypassing intermediaries such as political parties for people's mandate on important issues such as the legitimacy of a government.

The list of the reforms should be quite large ranging from constitutional reforms to institution building. Some of the top agendas should include reviewing and rewriting the constitution to align with citizens' welfare and protection; revamping the electoral system to curb the influence of families to instil democracy within the parties' selection of nominees and leaders and pave the way for dedicated politicians; restoration of a transparent administration which is accountable to citizens; establishment of an efficient, inclusive and just judiciary system; and setup of a modern economic system focusing on efficiency and equity.

If I understand the mood of the citizens of our country correctly, people are ready to give adequate time to the current interim government as they regard it as their saviour, liberator, and the only institution that would fulfil their dreams.

How the new leadership can best utilise this fresh start is an advocate at the Bangladesh Supreme Court.

Dr Faustina Pereira

FAUSTINA PEREIRA

With the swearing-in of a new interim government of Bangladesh, following a truly phenomenal student-led mass revolution, Bangladesh has effectively entered a new social contract. There will be time enough in the coming days to analyse the full significance of this historic moment that Bangladesh, and indeed the whole world, is witnessing. For now, however, time is of the essence, and every stakeholder invested in a fresh start for nation building must be girded for the tough road that lies ahead. This is a moment that calls for decisive action and precise, intentional leadership to set the course and the tone for Bangladesh's path forward.

There is no denying that the expected deliverables from this new government is mountain high. From addressing immediate concerns such as restoring law and order, and economic and infrastructural recovery, to reclaiming and reforming the judiciary, and critical state institutions and commissions such as the National Human Rights Commission and Anti-Corruption Commission, amongst others, must be addressed with the utmost urgency.

For this government, which will have perhaps only a sliver of a honeymoon period, striking a balance between the urgent and the important in its prioritisation agenda will be one of the first challenges to overcome. For a sustained reform agenda, the government will have to adopt parallel initiatives and go beyond the tangible outcomes around law enforcement, business and the economy, communications, and bricks and mortar development. It will be in the delivery on the more intangible outcomes, that the expectations of citizens who have made immeasurable sacrifices to give Bangladesh this fresh start, will be assessed. The bedrock of these expectations is for Bangladesh to recover its soul. It is to give democracy, the rule of law, and the high ideals of the constitution to establish an equity-based and justice-centric society, the chance to flourish at last.

Translating these idealistic aspirations, especially within this environment of urgency, runs the threat of getting lost or deprioritised in the din of day-to-day minutiae of governance. In order to keep these ideals on the radar of governance, Bangladesh's new leadership need to pay attention and reflect on a few preliminary touch points, as it takes on the mantle of hope for nearly 180 million Bangladeshis.

It is time to go back to the drawing board. For a nation charting its course into the future, it is essential to revisit, as a matter of course, lessons from the past. Keeping an eye on the rearview mirror of political history sheds light not only on mistakes, missteps and missed opportunities but also provide sharp insights into the intent, actions and positioning of the various actors and factors that result in particular outcomes. Going back to the tenets of the original Constitution of Bangladesh, particularly its Preamble, will serve our leaders well in steering Bangladesh in its journey back to its raison d'etre. This is essential, irrespective of any future exercises around reframing the constitution.

The Constituent Assembly debates (1971-1973) provide important signposts for Bangladesh's new leadership on how to resolve challenges that have lingered over decades, and that eroded the core values of a cohesive society. From addressing critically important issues of secularism and pluralism, to the limits of power of each organ of the state and the independence of the judiciary, to protection against excessive executive power of the prime minister, and proportional representation in the legislature, the lessons of the past must guide the legacy of the future.

The interim government will need to be aware of echo chambers. In about three months hence, the operational and administrative wheels of governance will have set in. From the very earliest moments, mechanisms will need to be built into daily operations against complacency. Recognised best practices must be adopted against solidifying actions or decisions based on opinions that only reinforce the leadership's own positions. Processes that allow for regular pulse-checks with stakeholders and dissenting opinions, and those that ensure room for course correction, are some of the best antidotes against tunnel vision and mission drift.

It is also the time to prioritise truth, reconciliation, and healing. The pace at which individuals or nations heal from the scars and trauma of wrongdoing, violence and injustice, vary greatly. They depend on many factors and circumstances, both internal and external. The immediate effects of the mass uprising that Bangladesh is beginning to emerge from is but the ultimate protest against the vortex of state sanctioned human rights violations over decades that has included killings, torture, disappearances, suppression of dissent, abuse of power and an overall reign of terror and impunity.

For this government, striking a balance between the urgent and the important in its prioritisation agenda will be one of the first challenges to overcome. PHOTO: PID

In an ideal scenario, every perpetrator of every human rights violation should be brought to justice. The ground reality is that this ideal could be quite hard to achieve, especially if it is aimed to be achieved within a reasonably short period of time. One only needs to go through the bottlenecks and challenges in the existing criminal justice system of Bangladesh, as outlined in the Bangladesh Justice Audit, to understand why most victims and victim families will not receive justice within their lifetime. An overhaul of the criminal justice system may not be realisable within a limited time frame to address the large number of cases that will inevitably be lodged.

Whereas every effort must continue to be taken by the state to document every criminal offence and prosecute every perpetrator accordingly; the interim government should also check the pulse of citizens to assess whether the establishment of a Truth and Reconciliation Commission would be acceptable or feasible as a forum and process of justice. There are well known examples globally of similar such redressal mechanisms. Commissions set up, for example, in South Africa, Rwanda, Canada, or Australia, have helped to uncover the truth about human rights violations by gathering evidence and uncovering information—from both victims and perpetrators—on past crimes, to help heal the country and bring about a reconciliation of its people. These have focused on restorative rather than retributive justice as an outcome. If a similar mechanism can be considered for Bangladesh, national unity and intergenerational healing could be part of its objectives. It could go a long way to bring closure for a nation suffering from deep and open wounds and long deprived of timely, transparent and effective justice.

In honouring the aspirations of the student-led revolution that has ushered in a fresh start for Bangladesh, our new leadership must demonstrate a truly inclusive and intersectional approach to decision making, and in policy adoption and implementation. This will mean that those in whose name decisions are taken, particularly underrepresented and marginalised communities, including women, religious, ethnic and linguistic minorities, and people living with disabilities, must have a seat at the table. The voices and the choices of minorities across all social markers of age, sex, belief, class, profession, location or civil status must be an integral part of any decision that directly or indirectly affect these communities. What constitutes "national interest" must be re-defined to include the historically excluded. Inclusion in decision-making and in the spaces for equal or equitable opportunities and outcomes must be unshackled from tokenism.

To take a current example, it is disheartening to note that, despite high levels of participation, sacrifice and visibility of women and girls at the frontline and at the heart of the revolution, women's representation or visibility in the post revolution decisions around the new governance framework has been almost non-existent. This must be rectified immediately.

Indeed, the success of this revolution rests on the blood, sacrifice and participation of every category of citizens. Going forward, every effort needs to be taken to avoid historic mistakes of sidelining or excluding the historically marginalised contributors to state reform.

The adoption of an Anti-Discrimination Act that genuinely addresses the diversity and plurality of identities and experiences of all Bangladeshis, is one step to rectify historical exclusions and wrongs. But it cannot be the only mechanism. Inclusion must become an inherent part of democratic policy and practice.

Not many nations have the opportunity to make a fresh start in the right direction, such as Bangladesh does today. This opportunity has come at very great cost. From now onwards, every action taken by Bangladesh's new leadership, and indeed every citizen, will be indebted to and measured against this supreme sacrifice.

Can our walls make space for our dissent?

SARAH ANJUM BARI

The swearing in of the interim government on August 8 opened a new chapter for us, one that is hopefully free of the angst, terror, and frustration that shaped the Bangladeshi experience this past decade. Take a walk through our streets, though, and you'll see remnants of a violent past on nearly every surface. I want to make space for these words in my article: "Why did our brothers and children have to die?" they ask. "Sheikh Hasina is a killer and a dictator," they say. "Don't let the vulture queen stop us," they say. I wonder if we're being too quick to erase these marks.

The walls of our streets have long been one of the truest aspects of our public existence. I instinctively think of Dhaka when I say this, because it is the city I call home, but the same can be said of walls across the country. You'll see election posters plastered over ads for English and Quran tutors, painted over warnings not to paste on those walls, smeared with spray painted slang and declarations of love. If ever a metaphor existed for life in Bangladesh, it would be these walls, which represent the volume and chaos of thousands of people jostling for ever-shrinking space. They speak to how the assertions of empowered groups, and the complaints and desires of repressed classes and genders, layer onto each other, sometimes silencing each other.

The "smarter" Bangladesh became in recent years, the more digitally-reliant our communication channels became. The more populated and developed we grew, the more corrupt and repressed we became. How easy it was for the former government to curb any expressions of dissent against power structures—which were nearly always linked to the government—with the Digital Security Act that came into effect in 2018. How easily we left behind the days in which artists could hold power accountable through satire, writers and publishers could print nuanced accounts of history, and journalists could actually do their job. Even complaining in social gatherings posed risks, lest the wrong person with the right affiliations hear you. These inbuilt systems of censorship have always applied most harshly to ethnic minorities, gender minorities, and working classes who are most strongly harassed by corruption, violence, and discrimination.

The dystopia of it all still blows my mind when I find myself describing it, even though we've lived it for so long. Through it all, nameless, faceless graffiti was perhaps the safest (and most satisfying) way to express rage at life in Bangladesh. The writing on our walls expresses some of the truest things we've felt.

Even then, the graffiti that came out of July's student protests ruptured through any semblance of fear or self-censorship that we might have practiced before. The cityscape changes as I make my way from my home in North Dhaka to the heart of Dhaka University (DU)—disparities of class, culture and institutional interests become apparent—but never before have I seen such consistency of sentiment on city walls as I make this journey now. They all say the same thing: that the autocratic regime of Sheikh Hasina must go down, that we have nine demands and then just one, that the people will not back down, she will have to step down, that July is our month of mourning, and we will remember all the martyrs who were ruthlessly killed for demanding basic human rights. If some of these spray-painted messages contain lewd language and violent hate, that, too, is a never-before-seen reflection of exactly what Bangladeshis have been feeling: grief and absolute rage.

Amidst the internet blackout that silenced real time dispatches, the sanitised curation of news on several TV channels, and the slowness of the print cycle that our newspapers have had to contend with, it is the protest graffiti that has been most raw and unfiltered. Not only do they present the anti-discrimination protests as they unfolded in real time, they also display an irony that may only be called nature's balancing act. Today, the development projects that Sheikh Hasina's government used as mascots of their contribution to Bangladesh have words sprayed onto them that call her a murderer.

Recent news showed beautiful, vibrant artwork that many students are painting onto walls in Dhanmondi and the DU campus. These newer paintings present a distinctly different tone from the protest graffiti. The former comprised spray painted scrawls—the spikes and messiness of the script, the anger and lewdness of their phrasing speak to the chaos, fear, and wrath felt by protesters while they were being persecuted by the police and the government. The graffiti being created now paints entire scenes on walls—blocks of defiant red, beaming yellow and blue, slogans that call for a new, secular Bangladesh, others that memorialise the toppling of a "fascist" regime. They depict hope and initiative for the future.

I spoke to some (notably, not all) of the students volunteering for this, and it is their sentiment that the slogans of the protest should stay, but the profanities don't belong in areas where little kids and older parents can read them. Some of them want to move on from the violence but remember the courage and sacrifice that made it possible. Others want to take responsibility for undoing the hatred they imprinted onto public spaces, along the same veins as cleaning the streets on which the chaos of their protests took place. A few were careful to paint over pre-existing, politically disruptive or divisive messages, while painting around slogans that call for freedom and equality. All these impulses, their visions, deserve space.

Can we allow both these rhetorics to exist? The interim government has just sworn in, and we are yet to see what the ashes of this past month will rest into. Peace is still a distant promise: ethnic and religious minorities are being attacked, houses are being looted across neighbourhoods, law and order aren't fully operating yet.

In a video recording broadcasted on Thursday, Sajeeb Wajed Joy declared that Sheikh Hasina will come back to Bangladesh when we hold the next elections, and we don't yet know what that election will bring. Bangladesh is on shaky ground—with hope we call it transition, with trepidation we call it purgatory. The over 400 deaths, 10,000+ arrests, the communications blackouts and police shootings aren't yet a distant memory, they are very fresh wounds.

I believe that the courage and defiance that shaped the protests—which are spelled out in the protest graffiti—should stay in our environments still. How people felt while writing those words should be present still, for as long as we need to channel those feelings into motivation for a free, safe country for all its people. We need them at least until the problems they speak to have been addressed, and even after that, they should be preserved as reminders of a momentous, necessary revolution. In a museum (which, as we've seen, aren't invincible), relics of revolution become distant. On our streets, they stay on as signs of what a population is capable of.

If we are trying to build a Bangladesh where free speech prevails, a country that we can shape as we wish, its most nuanced version would be a collage and a palimpsest of angry, precocious, ambitious revolution coexisting with calls for peace and growth. That is Bangladesh's reality.

High rates of intimate partner violence among adolescent girls: A global concern

A staggering number of adolescent girls around the world are experiencing intimate partner violence, with nearly a quarter of those in relationships—close to 19 million—subjected to physical and/or sexual violence by the time they reach 20 years old. This alarming statistic comes from a new analysis by the World Health Organisation (WHO), published in The Lancet Child & Adolescent Health. The study also found that 16% of these girls experienced such violence in just the past year.

"Intimate partner violence is starting alarmingly early for millions of young women around the world," said Dr Pascale Allotey, Director of WHO's Sexual and Reproductive Health and Research Department. This early onset of violence has severe health consequences, including injuries, depression, anxiety disorders, unplanned pregnancies, and sexually transmitted infections.

The study highlights that violence against adolescent girls is most prevalent in lower-income regions, such as Oceania (47%) and central sub-Saharan Africa (40%). Central Europe (10%) and central Asia (11%), in contrast, have lower rates. Factors like lower secondary school enrolment for girls, weaker legal property rights, and child marriage significantly increase the risk of violence.

To combat this issue, WHO emphasises the need for targeted support services and preventive measures tailored for adolescents. Strengthening girls' access to education, securing gender-equal property rights, and ending child marriage are critical steps towards reducing partner violence. WHO plans to release new guidelines on preventing child marriage by the end of 2024.

Essential tips for healthier, stronger hair

STAR HEALTH DESK

Achieving and maintaining healthy, strong hair often feels like a constant battle against damage and breakage. While there is no magic formula for perfect locks, adopting a thoughtful hair care routine can make a significant difference. From avoiding common pitfalls to embracing beneficial practices, here are 14 essential tips to help you nurture your hair and keep it looking its best.

1. Cool it down: Frequent use of heat styling tools like blow dryers and flat irons can weaken your hair. To prevent damage, always use a heat protectant spray, choose the coolest setting, and limit heat styling to a few times a week. Work quickly to minimise exposure.

2. Let wet hair be: Hair is most vulnerable when wet. Avoid brushing it while dripping wet to prevent breakage and damage. For straight hair, let it air-dry before gently combing with a wide-tooth comb. Curly or textured hair should be detangled with a wide-tooth comb while damp.

3. Take care with colour: Bleaching and other chemical treatments can weaken your hair. Opt for colours close to your natural shade to minimise damage, and always do a spot test with new dyes to avoid adverse reactions.

4. Meds can help or hurt: Minoxidil can help regrow hair, but you will need to use it consistently. Prescription medications like spironolactone and finasteride may also assist with hair loss. However, some medications might contribute to hair loss as a side effect. Consult your doctor for alternatives if needed.

5. Get a trim: Regular trims prevent split ends from travelling up the hair shaft and causing further damage. Aim for a trim of about 1/4 inch every 3 months to keep your ends healthy without sacrificing growth.

6. Stress less: High stress levels can trigger hair loss and conditions like alopecia areata. Finding effective ways to manage stress, such as through relaxation techniques or counselling, can positively impact hair health.

7. Handle with care: Delicate hair, particularly in individuals with textured hair, needs extra care. Wash less frequently to avoid stripping natural oils, use gentle hair treatments, and avoid excessive chemical processing.

8. Take care with extensions and braids: Extensions and braids can offer a temporary length boost but should not be worn for more than 2-3 months at a time. Avoid pulling them tightly to prevent scalp damage and hair breakage.

9. Get into condition(er): Conditioning helps strengthen and protect hair from damage. Apply conditioner every time you shampoo, focussing on the ends for finer hair or throughout for thicker textures.

10. Do not lose weight too fast: Rapid weight loss can lead to hair loss due to insufficient protein intake. Follow a balanced diet to ensure your body has the nutrients needed for healthy hair growth.

11. Do not be deficient: Nutrient deficiencies can impact hair health. Ensure you are getting enough iron, vitamins B and D, zinc, omega-3 fatty acids, and biotin. Consult your doctor about supplements if necessary.

12. Sleep on satin: Switching to satin pillowcases or wearing a satin bonnet can reduce friction and prevent hair breakage, helping keep your hair smoother and healthier.

13. Give yourself a massage: Regular scalp massages can stimulate blood circulation and potentially enhance hair growth. Use your fingers or a scalp massaging tool to gently massage your scalp for a few minutes each day.

14. Consider microneedling: Microneedling involves using a roller with tiny needles to create micro-injuries in the scalp, which can help improve hair growth when combined with treatments like minoxidil. Always consult with a dermatologist before starting microneedling to ensure it is safe and suitable for you.

Identifying and managing cholesterol problems: What you need to know

High cholesterol does not always make its presence known through obvious symptoms, but it can significantly increase your risk of serious health issues such as heart disease, stroke, and high blood pressure. Here is what to look out for and how you can take charge of your cholesterol levels.

Signs of cholesterol issues: While cholesterol problems themselves do not cause noticeable symptoms, they can lead to conditions that do. Watch for:

- Soft, yellowish growths: Known as xanthomas, these lesions on the skin may signal high cholesterol levels.
- Health conditions: Obesity and diabetes often accompany high cholesterol, indicating a need for a check-up.
- Impotence: In men, high cholesterol can affect artery health, potentially leading to erectile dysfunction.

Steps to manage your cholesterol:

1. Understand your numbers: Cholesterol is not just one figure. Your lipid profile includes "bad" LDL cholesterol, "good" HDL cholesterol, and triglycerides. Regular blood tests can help you track these numbers and understand your risk.

2. Get tested: Even if you feel healthy, high cholesterol can lurk unnoticed. Starting at age 20, aim to undergo testing every 4-6 years. More frequent tests are necessary if you are overweight, diabetic, or have heart disease.

3. Exercise regularly: Physical activity is a powerful way to manage cholesterol. Aim for 30 minutes of brisk exercise, like walking or swimming, several times a week. Even short bursts of activity can be beneficial.

4. Avoid smoking: Smoking lowers HDL cholesterol and raises LDL cholesterol, worsening your cholesterol profile. Quitting can improve your cholesterol and overall heart health.

5. Maintain a healthy weight: Excess weight, especially around the abdomen, can negatively affect cholesterol levels. Even a modest weight loss can make a significant difference.

6. Limit saturated fats: Cut back on red meats, full-fat dairy, and tropical oils. Instead, opt for lean meats and low-fat dairy. Avoid trans fats found in many processed foods.

7. Address underlying conditions: Managing related health issues like diabetes and obesity can help improve cholesterol levels. Work with your doctor to treat these conditions effectively.

When to seek medical advice: Consult a doctor if you notice yellowish skin growths or if you experience symptoms like chest pain, dizziness, or slurred speech, which could be linked to high cholesterol.

Taking these steps can help you manage your cholesterol and reduce your risk of serious health problems. Stay proactive and work with your healthcare provider to keep your cholesterol in check.

Stroke survival: What the latest study reveals

Stroke is a serious health condition, and recent research from the Neurology journal sheds new light on how survival rates for two common types—ischaemic stroke and intracerebral haemorrhage—have changed over the past 30 years.

The study analysed thousands of cases from 1993/1994 to 2015 and found some hopeful news: the 5-year survival rate for ischaemic stroke, which happens when a blood clot blocks blood flow to the brain, improved from 53% to 48.3%. This suggests that advancements in treatment are making a difference. However, the outlook for intracerebral haemorrhage, a type of stroke caused by bleeding in the brain, remains less optimistic, with survival rates increasing from 64.4% to 69.2%.

This study underscores the importance of recognising stroke symptoms early and seeking prompt medical attention. If you have risk factors such as high blood pressure or diabetes, managing these conditions can significantly impact your stroke risk.

Prioritising elderly individuals for COVID-19 boosters

As the COVID-19 pandemic continues to evolve, the question of how best to allocate limited booster vaccine supplies remains critical. New research from the University of Oxford, published in PLOS Computational Biology, suggests that prioritising elderly individuals for booster shots is the most effective way to reduce deaths, regardless of a country's socioeconomic background or age distribution.

Despite widespread vaccination efforts, the emergence of new variants and waning immunity have led to ongoing waves of COVID-19. This has left policymakers grappling with the decision of whether to target booster vaccines at older populations or to consider other strategies that might also reduce premature deaths.

The study, led by Dr Robin Thompson, used mathematical modelling to assess the impact of different vaccination strategies across various countries with diverse economic and demographic profiles. The findings were clear: prioritising the elderly consistently resulted in the lowest number of deaths and years of life lost, a measure that considers premature mortality among younger people.

The study concludes that older individuals, who are at significantly higher risk of severe outcomes from COVID-19, should be prioritised for booster vaccines when supplies are limited. This strategy was shown to be effective not only in high-income countries, where the population tends to be older, but also in lower- and middle-income countries, where younger populations are more prevalent.

Global call for enhanced pandemic research

In a pivotal move for global health security, the Coalition for Epidemic Preparedness Innovations (CEPI) and the World Health Organisation (WHO) have emphasised the need for an expanded and accelerated approach to pandemic preparedness. Announced at the Global Pandemic Preparedness Summit 2024 in Rio de Janeiro, this new strategy underscores the importance of broadening research efforts to include entire families of pathogens rather than focussing solely on individual threats.

The WHO R&D Blueprint for Epidemics' latest report advocates for a shift in how we approach pandemic research. Instead of concentrating on pathogens with immediate perceived risks, the strategy calls for the use of prototype pathogens to develop a comprehensive understanding of entire pathogen families. This broader focus aims to create versatile tools and countermeasures that can be rapidly adapted to new and emerging threats. It also emphasises the need for enhanced surveillance to better understand pathogen transmission, infection mechanisms, and immune responses.

Dr Richard Hatchett, CEO of CEPI, highlighted the importance of this expanded research approach. He compared it to illuminating a dark area by studying prototype pathogens, which could reveal unknown pathogens that might currently be overlooked. This strategy is particularly crucial for resource-scarce regions with high biodiversity, where novel pathogens may exist but remain under-researched.

The report is the result of collaboration among over 200 scientists from more than 50 countries. It evaluated 28 virus families and one core group of bacteria, encompassing 1,652 pathogens. Researchers assessed epidemic and pandemic risks based on factors such as transmission patterns, virulence, and the availability of diagnostic tests, vaccines, and treatments.

To support this global effort, WHO is establishing Collaborative Open Research Consortia (CORCs) for each pathogen family. These CORCs will serve as research hubs, bringing together scientists, developers, funders, and regulators from around the world. The aim is to foster greater research collaboration and ensure equitable participation, particularly from regions where pathogens are likely to emerge.

This comprehensive approach seeks to strengthen global preparedness for future pandemics and enhance our ability to respond swiftly to unforeseen threats, ultimately aiming to protect global health more effectively.

The hidden costs of excessive worrying!

Do you find yourself endlessly worrying about potential problems, convinced that your anxiety might somehow prevent them from happening? While this instinct to overthink can feel protective, excessive worrying can take a significant toll on both your mental and physical health. Understanding the effects of chronic worry and learning strategies to manage it can lead to a healthier, more balanced life.

What happens with excessive worrying? Worrying, at its core, is an unease or concern about potential issues. When this worry becomes excessive, it puts both your mind and body on high alert. Chronic worriers often experience intense anxiety and panic attacks, feeling a persistent sense of impending doom. Their heightened sensitivity can make them perceive everyday situations and interactions as threats, leading to even more anxiety.

This constant state of stress can disrupt your daily life, affecting your appetite, sleep, relationships, and job performance. Many individuals turn to unhealthy coping mechanisms, such as overeating, smoking, or substance use, to manage their anxiety. This reliance on harmful habits only exacerbates the problem, creating a vicious cycle of worry and stress.

Understanding anxiety: While a certain amount of anxiety is a normal response to stress and can even be beneficial—like motivating you to prepare for a job interview or a test—excessive anxiety crosses into harmful territory. Anxiety disorders, such as generalised anxiety disorder, panic disorder, and social anxiety disorder, affect nearly 40 million adults in the U.S. These disorders can make everyday stressors seem overwhelming, causing significant distress and disability.

The physical impact of excessive worry: Chronic worry activates the body's stress response, triggering the "fight or flight" reaction. This response releases stress hormones like cortisol, which can lead to various physical symptoms, including, difficulty swallowing, dizziness, dry mouth, rapid heartbeat, muscle tension and aches, headaches, fatigue, shortness of breath, etc.

When the body remains in this heightened state for prolonged periods, it can lead to more severe health issues such as immune system suppression, digestive problems, and even heart disease. If left untreated, excessive worrying can contribute to depression and suicidal thoughts.

Managing excessive worrying: Fortunately, there are several strategies to help manage excessive worrying and reduce its impact on your health:

1. Talk to your doctor: Begin with a medical check-up to rule out other health issues. Your doctor might suggest medications to help manage anxiety.

2. Exercise regularly: Physical activity can enhance your mood and help your body handle stress more effectively. Aim for regular aerobic and strength-training exercises.

3. Maintain a balanced diet: Avoid emotional eating and focus on a nutritious diet to support overall health.

4. Limit caffeine: Excessive caffeine can heighten anxiety, so consume it in moderation.

5. Practice relaxation techniques: Techniques such as deep breathing, meditation, and yoga can help calm your mind and reduce stress.

6. Seek professional help: Therapy can provide strategies to cope with anxiety and address underlying issues.

By integrating these practices into your routine, you can break free from the cycle of excessive worrying and cultivate a more peaceful, healthier lifestyle.

Tigers leave for Pakistan tomorrow

SPORTS REPORTER

The Bangladesh Cricket Board (BCB) has decided to prepone the men's national team's scheduled flight to Pakistan as the team will now leave for the country tomorrow instead of August 17.

The decision was made after the BCB failed to properly hold the final phase of the Tigers' training session ahead as the foreign coaching staff expressed their reluctance to join practice in Mirpur amidst the current situation of the country.

"That [getting full team together] is the main reason we are travelling to Pakistan much earlier than scheduled time," a member of the selection panel told The Daily Star yesterday.

"Going there few days ahead will also give us a chance to adjust to the conditions. We have also received a positive response from the Pakistan board," he added.

Meanwhile, a BCB source confirmed that the board has booked 18 tickets for players and coaching staff, who will leave for the two-match Test series on Monday at 4:00pm.

A few members of the probable Test squad, including Mushfiqur Rahim and Mominul Haque, have already reached Islamabad with Bangladesh 'A' team for two four-day game s against Pakistan 'A' team.

The BCB is expected to announce the national team squad for the Test series today.

Tipu doubts progress despite leadership change calls

SPORTS REPORTER

Although there is a growing sentiment for change within the country's sports community following the resignation of former Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina amidst widespread student protests, former Bangladesh football captain and coach Golam Sarwar Tipu believes that merely changing leadership won't lead to any real progress in the nation's sports.

Since the Awami League government came to power in 2009, most sports federations have been led by organisers affiliated with the party, sidelining those with differing views. After the fall of Sheikh Hasina's government, many organisers -- particularly those who had been marginalized and denied opportunities for the past 15 years -- have called for new leadership in various sports federations.

Despite this, Tipu remains pessimistic about the future of sports in Bangladesh.

"No change in leadership will bring any real change to Bangladesh's sports because we are a nation of betrayers and immoral people. Two days later, they will call for another change," Tipu told The Daily Star on Tuesday. "Unless we change our mentality and become more humane, this shift in leadership will not bring any real change to the sports community.

"One person will leave, and another will take their place at the helm of different federations... Those who are now vocal are well-known because we've seen them in the past. It would be different if these changes happened naturally, but change by seizing an opportunity is another matter. I don't know if this will bring any real improvement," Tipu reiterated.

The former national defender emphasised the need for changes in sports infrastructure, budgeting, and the election processes of various federations if Bangladesh truly wants to see its sports progress.

"If there are free and fair elections in sports, some changes may come, as organisers will be motivated to work or develop their respective disciplines in order to be re-elected," remarked Tipu, adding that the sports budget is insufficient to drive evolution.

"I've heard for a long time that Bangladesh participates in the Olympics to gain experience, and this goes on; whereas India has been winning medals in various disciplines at the Olympics for the last four editions."

Tipu also addressed the inadequate facilities in football, reflecting a lack of proper planning and concern from the relevant authorities.

"Renovation work at Bangabandhu National Stadium has been ongoing for the last three years, with no urgency or accountability to complete it. The football federation has to search for venues to hold competitions.

"The women footballers have been practicing on artificial turf, which causes muscle damage. But how can the authorities understand the need for natural grounds for these young girls? So, I don't see any change coming," he concluded.

France 'happy' and 'united' in Olympics joy

AFP, Paris

Paris Olympics organisers celebrated the country being "united" and "happy" during the widely hailed two-week sports extravaganza amid doubts about how long the feel-good mood will last.

"France has shown itself to the world in a very, very good mindset: confident, united, warm, welcoming," head of the Paris 2024 organising committee Tony Estanguet told reporters on Saturday, the penultimate day of the Games.

Estanguet repeatedly voiced his "pride" at organising what he had promised would be an iconic Olympics, which have seen record ticket sales and packed fanzones around the country.

He added: "We've seen a happy France, happy French people, and you shouldn't underestimate that in terms of the legacy of these Games," he added.

Estanguet said the weather had been his biggest cause for concern, while the run-up to the start also saw a global IT outage and an attack on the French railways.

"The weather in the final phase was our main difficulty," said Estanguet.

Heavy rains washed out the opening ceremony on the River Seine -- the first times a Games had begun outside the main stadium -- while other events had to be postponed because of storms in the first week.

Apart from these, French church leaders and conservatives were left outraged by a scene in the ceremony involving drag queens and lesbian DJ Barbara Butch that appeared to parody Jesus's Last Supper.

Artistic director Thomas Jolly denied any such intention. He and others involved ended up facing online harassment that led to police complaints.

Khelif answers 'fierce campaign' with gold

REUTERS, Paris

Algeria's Imane Khelif, the female boxer thrust into the centre of a gender dispute at the Paris Games, made a statement on her womanhood after beating China's Yang Liu to take the welterweight Olympic gold medal, sending her newfound devotees into delirium on Friday.

Khelif, silver medallist at the 2022 World Championships, and Taiwan boxer Lin Yu-ting have been in the spotlight as part of a gender dispute in Paris that has dominated headlines and been the subject of much discussion on social media platforms.

Khelif is the first Algerian woman to earn an Olympic boxing title and the first boxer from her country to claim gold since Hocine Soltani at Atlanta 1996.

"This is my dream. Eight years, my dream. I'm Olympic champion, gold medallist. I'm very happy. Eight years, I work," Khelif, 25, said.

"Eight years, no sleep. Eight years, tired. Now I'm Olympic champion. I'm very happy. I want to thank all the people who have come to support me. People, Algeria, and all the people, Paris.

"This gold medal is the best answer to the fierce campaign against me."

Her defeated opponent Yang said: "I'm happy for her. I respect everybody and I will even learn from her (boxing wise)."

Janjaem Suwannapheng of Thailand and Taiwan's Chen Nien-chin were awarded bronze.
